Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is what I am driving at. Whatever it is, it ought to be corrected, and the Senator ought not to try by innuendo or in any other way to lessen the force of the criticism which I have made by ascribing improper motives. The welfare of the country is my sole concern.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I would not attempt for one moment to detract from the effect of the Senator's remarks. I regretted that he himself had seen fit to lessen the strength of those remarks by a guarded effort in his argument to protect the captains of industry.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, the Senator can not say that; that is not fair, and does not belong in this discussion.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then, if I have misunderstood the Senator, I do not desire, of course, to misstate him——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; the Senator has been captious. I think he ought to withdraw that statement because there is not a thing upon which to base it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Now, there is a wrong being done, and of course there is a cause for that wrong. The Senator does not know that cause, and possibly none of us do; but the evidence, even as given out by the Senator from Michigan, is that the cars are blocking the sidetracks and congested along the railroad lines of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; for lack of orderly distribution and systematic destination, for lack of intelligent and well-directed distribution; that is the point I make.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is not the evidence, as I am informed. It is not caused by the lack of destination, for every carload that is standing on the tracks to-day has been billed to a destination. The cause of this, as admitted to-day by the captains of industry to whom the Senator from Michigan referred, is a lack of cooperation—failure of coordination. The railroad presidents, to whom were turned over the control of the railroads of this country—the transportation board, which is composed of the biggest railroad men in this country—have themselves admitted that the cause of this congestion is a lack of cooperation and coordination of the railroads which they have tried for months to bring about. What is the trouble? Every one of them is willing that there be coordination, but he wants his road the center of coordination; every great port of this country wants coordination, but each port wants itself to be made the center of the coordination. As was said by Mr. Ford, one of the captains of industry, in his opinion—and I only give it as an opinion—this whole matter, this whole congestion, this whole trouble, and the failure of the delivery of coal to freezing people is due to the selfishness of the managers of the great railroads. If that is true—and I am not charging it; I am giving you the evidence—if that is true, and if the President of the United States thinks that these men have been given a sufficient trial and that they have failed, and if the results show their utter inability to carry on the transportation of this country, then I suppose that the Senator would support here a reasonable proposition to have a firm governmental control over the railroads.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, let me say to the Senator that under the power which we have given to the President he has full authority to issue priority orders for the distribution of every car of coal upon every siding in the United States. He has the right to clear the tracks and deliver that coal wherever he desires and wherever the officer in charge of the coal administration may indicate. There is power enough to facilitate the prompt transportation of coal. If it is not being used I am quite surprised. I did not rise to charge that they were purposeless or to charge that they were misusing their power; what I rose to say was that the ordinary avenues of distribution have been dried up, and that that is one of the reasons why coal is upon the sidings of the railroads undischarged instead of in the bins of the consumers throughout the country.

If you have to wait until local officials have made up their minds what part of the city is suffering most before you can get a priority order of shipment, I want to tell you that you have seriously handicapped the appropriate distribution of that essential commodity.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Government of the United States intrusted the priority arrangement to these same captains of industry, this board of railroad managers——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Nevada comes from a State in which the sun shines 12 months of the year. I suppose they rarely light a coal fire in Nevada during much of the year. In the glow of a borrowed knot they may gather around a fireplace and make themselves very comfortable. But I was giving voice to the indignation which I feel over the utter failure and breaking down of the system of distribution of coal in the Northwest and in the North, where it is so much needed.

Does the Senator require any other evidence from me than the statement I have made that our people are suffering? Does he require any further evidence than that given by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who sits before him, that the sidetracks throughout Ohio are literally clogged with coal?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator does not require it, and the Senator from Nevada was glorying in the indignation of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but the Senator——

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a minute, please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that Senators, when interrupting, should address the Chair.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have been trying to give the Senator from Michigan all the time he needs to answer my question, but——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am willing to give the Senator from Nevada all the time he desires.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is very courteous of the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But I wish he would, for a few moments, at least, leave out this "captains of industry" bugaboo that seems to be troubling his soul and grapple with this situation in true western earnestness.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will try to drop it, since it does not please the Senator from Michigan.

I say that I am really glorying in the indignation of the Senator from Michigan. I thoroughly sympathize with that indignation. I simply regret that that indignation did not go to the full extent. That is what I am getting at. I would have enjoyed it a whole lot more if, instead of abusing a wrong, the Senator had attempted to put his finger on the guilty cause of the wrong. He would have helped his people and my people, who do use coal, and every people throughout the United States had he devoted his indignation to some specific cause of the wrong or to some specific person who is guilty of that wrong.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator does not care to yield further, of course I will desist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Nevada does not comprehend that I have driven specifically at the futility of all efforts at distribution, I can not make it any plainer. That is my grievance. I have no quarrel with the men who are working in the coal mines, because I see with my own eyes, as I go about the country, what the Senator from Ohio has seen in his own State—an abundance of coal. When I examine the records I find there is no shortage in production. Then wherein lies the trouble? I say to the Senator that it is in the method of distribution——

Mr. PITTMAN. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (continuing). Which is amateurish and unskilled, and wholly discreditable.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PITTMAN. Just let me answer the Senator from Michigan and then I will yield in a second.

I am gratified, now that we have come down to the point, that the whole cause of the deplorable condition is defective transportation. As far as priority is concerned, I want to say that Mr. Lovett, the president of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., is the chairman of the Priorities Board, so constituted by this Government. He was made chairman of that board by reason of his supposed experience in railroad matters, by reason of his knowledge of the transportation of this country. He was allowed to pick his assistants in that matter. In other words, the advice of the managers of the great transportation companies of this country has been taken by the Government for the purpose of preventing the very congestion that is now causing all of this harm. The Government has permitted those men to act on their own advice and with a free hand, and those men have failed. They have failed utterly. There is but one hope, and that is for a disinterested Government to abate all this selfishness and all of this greed and these petty disputes between the managers of great railroad companies, and commandeer the services of those great men, as well as those railroads, and make them do what their judgment would dictate they should do if it were not for the greed and selfishness of human nature.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. WEEKS. Has the business of the morning hour been completed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I have here and send to the desk petitions containing the signatures of about 6,000 men and women of Massachusetts advocating the Federal suffrage amendment, which I place at the disposition of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will lie on the table. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, morning business is closed.

QUARTERS FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION BOARD.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 110, Order of Business 162. It is the joint resolution providing for quarters for the Vocational Education Board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," etc., approved February 23, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the words, "including the rental of quarters in the District of Columbia from the date of the organization of said board until otherwise provided."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, at the time I presented the favorable report of the Committee on Education and Labor upon this joint resolution, the suggestion was made that perhaps in the Maltby Building we could furnish quarters for the Vocational Board. I called upon Mr. Woods, the Superintendent of our Capitol Building and Grounds, for a report upon the subject, and I have in my hands his report, dated to-day, in which he shows that the Maltby Building is not now fit for use.

At the last session of Congress the Appropriations Committee of the Senate recommended, and we adopted, a provision providing money to put that building in condition for use, and also certain other buildings just below it. The provision was stricken out in conference. This letter from Mr. Woods shows that the Maltby Building is neither safe nor fit for occupancy at present. The pipes have been removed, the heating appliances and the mantels have been removed. To a certain extent it has been dismantled. I ask that Mr. Woods's letter be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have here a statement from the board calling attention to what they have done. They have now 55 employees, and they occupy 3,700 square feet of quarters. They may be compelled to increase their employees to 75. They are paying 10 cents a square foot in their present quarters.

The Vocational Board has been called upon by the Secretary of War to aid in the organization of technical schools for employees of the Shipping Board, the Signal Corps, Aviation, Quartermaster, Engineering, and other corps of the Army; and the Secretary has asked this board to supervise and aid in the organization of the State schools for the training of drafted men who are to be specialists along these lines.

I am advised by the chairman of the board, Mr. Monroe, a very splendid man, a graduate of the Boston School of Technology, who has devoted a great deal of his life after the successful management of his own business to the practical education of young men and women, that if the Vocational Board are to do the work promptly, requested by the Secretary of War, it is essential that they increase to some extent their present quarters.

I ask that this memorandum, furnished by the board on this subject, be printed at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator a question, and that is as to whether or not he has examined the Maltby Building? I have examined that building. It has not a crack in it. It is a good building. I have not any doubt but that it is in good condition. A recommendation was made by Mr. Woods that a sum be appropriated for the purpose of improving it and making the repairs that are necessary. That building is a five-story building, and I do not see why some of the departments can not utilize it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will come back to the Maltby Building in a few minutes. I began with it, and produced a letter from Mr. Woods as to its condition. The Senator was out of the Chamber.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I was out of the Chamber at that time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will come back to the Maltby Building as soon as I make a brief further statement from the information given me by the Vocational Board.

I have a list of their applications to the various departments for quarters, their efforts to obtain rooms somewhere, and a detailed statement from the board as to their being turned down everywhere.

I wish to call attention to the fact that it is not proposed that we give them any appropriation to obtain quarters. The vocational bill provides a fund of $200,000 annually, to be handled by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, to be available from and after the passage of the act, for the purpose of making or cooperating in making the studies, investigations, and reports provided for in section 6 of the act, and for the purpose of paying the salaries of the officers, the assistants, and such office and other expenses as the board may deem necessary for the execution and administration of the act. Now, this language is held not to be broad enough to authorize a rental of quarters in the District of Columbia. Every dollar that they spend for quarters they must pay out of this $200,000 appropriation, which is given to the board for the purpose of conducting studies and prosecuting the work of developing knowledge with reference to vocational education in different parts of the country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do; yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator inform the Senate what the board has been doing for quarters up to date?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I have their report. I had just called attention to it a few minutes ago, and I will do so again. They have located in the Ouray Building, at 805 G Street, with a total at the present time of 55 employees and 3,700 square feet of quarters. I will say to the Senator that they first went into the Pension Building, and were in one room, and practically in a hall. Then they were asked to give that up, because it was needed, and they rented one floor in the Ouray Building, the members of the board assuming responsibility for the rent, I think.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator's joint resolution provide for the payment of back expenses for rent?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The joint resolution provides for the payment of rent from the date of the organization of the board until otherwise provided. The salaries of the members of this board are not high. They are $5,000 each. The members of the board are serving without any regard to the salary, and devoting to the work time that is worth to them individually much more than their salaries.

Now, coming to the Maltby Building——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. Is not the whole question involved one of transferring or simply adjusting an appropriation which has already been made, which is sufficient for the purposes, so that these men may be relieved of their personal obligation and the Government may pay the rent for a governmental organization? That is all the question there is about it; is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is the sole question. Of course, before the Government pays it there are Senators who wish to know that it is necessary to pay it. It was so necessary that they could not get in anywhere. That is how necessary it was. I have handed to the Senate the detailed statement from this board, showing their application to every place that they thought was possibly available, and they were turned down repeatedly.

This appropriation of $200,000 has already been made. It is appropriated annually for the conduct of the work of the Vocational Board. The members of that board would be as zealous as any Senator in saving and in having the full use of that fund. They will never spend a dollar of it for quarters the moment they can get quarters belonging to the Government that do not require the expenditure. They need it all for the conduct of the splendid work they are doing, but they are obliged to have quarters or they can not conduct their work.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to suggest to the Senator that nobody wants to hold these people liable for any assumption of obligation that they may have made, and it is probably true that the Maltby Building is not at the present time in the condition that it ought to be for the occupation of any bureau. But I want to say to the Senator that the objection which has been made to the Maltby Building in most instances has been the fact that it is not a modern building. It has not got nickel-plated plumbing, tiled floors, and things of that kind. In an emergency like we have now I do not believe those are important matters.

I believe in passing the Senator's joint resolution; I believe these people should be relieved of any responsibility; but I think the best thing on earth you could do, not only in the interest of public economy but in the interest of large space for them, is to have them make a requisition for certain space in the Maltby Building. They could get a floor there with probably a dozen rooms; and inasmuch as there is no great demand for them, I have not any doubt that the space would be liberally granted.

The estimate was made, and there was included in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill an item appropriating sufficient money to fix up the Maltby Building, but on account of objection in the House by the chairman of the committee, Mr. FITZGERALD, it went out in conference. But I am satisfied that it ought to be passed, and that it will be passed. I believe nothing better could be done for the board itself, and I am friendly to the board, than to have them look at those quarters and see whether they would be satisfied to have space there, a large space. If so, I am satisfied the Committee on Appropriations would bring in an appropriation to put the building in proper shape.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am sure that if the Maltby Building were put in a proper condition and the necessary space given to the Vocational Board, it would be entirely satisfactory. I voted for the provision in the appropriation bill that the Senator advocated, to put the building in shape. I have felt that it ought to have been put in shape and ought to have been used, and that it has been a waste of money, an inexcusable waste, for us not to put the building in shape for use. But the present condition of the Maltby Building is described by Mr. Woods in the letter which I have presented. He says:

> It never has been and is not now fitted for clerical occupancy on account of risk of fire. Since vacated by the House of Representatives, which occupied it briefly in 1908, it has been divested of about all of its interior fittings, such as mantels, radiators, plumbing, etc., these having been sold off after the Government acquired properties between the Capitol and the Union Station in connection with the Capitol grounds extension.
>
> The interior floors are out of line, weak in parts, and would require interior bracing to carry any other than the most ordinary loads.
>
> Its condition in 1904 was the subject of an official condemnation through a report made by the chief of the Washington fire department and the fire marshal and transmitted by this office to the Senate. (See S. Doc. 201, 58th Cong., 2d sess.) Conditions with respect to fire dangers are no better to-day than then.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state with relation to that matter that the chances of fire are infinitely less in that building than in the temporary structures that are being erected now by the Government. It is true that the building is not in a proper condition for occupancy. The suggestion I make is that the Senator attempt to get the board to ask for that particular building, and I am sure they will get a great deal more space. It is true that there was a report made here for the condemnation of the building, but we feel that that report was made in the interest of constructing the Senate Office Building. That being the case, you can readily see how the judgment as to whether the building was safe or not, it being dependent upon the Government's construction of a new building, might have a different tinge from what it would have been if the object in view had not been to construct a new and elegant building.

I wish to say that I see no indication of that building being weak. The walls are solid. The best indication on earth as to a building's safety is whether or not, where there is a straight wall without any windows, there is a crack in it. Both sides of the building have not a particle of give way in any respect. The interior may have to be repaired, and I believe that to be the case; I think it is not now in a condition where it could be occupied, but I feel that that building ought to be occupied by the Government, and that it is an outrage to destroy that building under the conditions those walls are in at the present time, they being good and sound.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I sympathize with everything the Senator from Colorado says, except that I do not want the Vocational Board kept out of quarters until the Maltby Build- has been fixed. This is Mr. Wood's statement:

> The cost to repair and fireproof the Maltby Building at the present time and make it fit for clerical occupancy would approximate $135,000. To make temporary and nonfireproof repairs for clerical occupation only would cost at least $20,000. This latter suggestion I do not recommend, except in case the building is to be used exclusively for storage purposes. In connection with the use of this building the element of safety to human life is the one important thing, and I do not propose to make any recommendation for repairs to it which will place a large number of clerks within it unless such repairs be of a nature which will guarantee their safety.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. STONE. I thank the Senator. I am in sympathy with the desire of the Senator to have quarters for the important board of which he speaks, but I can not understand the contention which is being made that the Maltby Building is unfit for the occupancy of that board or any other governmental agency. I have been in the Senate for a good many years. When I first came here I was assigned to rooms in the Maltby Building. It was filled very largely with Senators then. Later on I was given, in the course of evolution, a little better quarters in the Maltby Building than I had at first. I heard Senators say then that the Maltby Building was unsafe. Some rumors were scattered around vaguely. The accommodations were adequate. The service was as complete there as it is in the Senate Office Building to-day—I mean in a comparative way. There was a large number of Senators who had offices in that building for years and years. I could mention the names of Senators who occupied offices in that building whose distinction is national and even more so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator did not hear me read that it has been practically dismantled.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I did. I was listening to the Senator, and he said it has been dismantled. I do not know exactly what is meant by being dismantled.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is what Mr. Woods said:

> It has been divested of about all of its interior fittings, such as mantles, radiators, plumbing, etc.——

Mr. STONE. Who did that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not responsible for it.

Mr. STONE. Of course not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. (Reading):

> these having been sold off after the Government acquired properties between the Capitol and the Union Station.

I think it was highly improper to dismantle the Maltby Building, but this is no reason for denying quarters to the Vocational Board.

Mr. STONE. It may have been an idle inquiry as to who did that and under what authority it was done. How long it is going to take to put a mantle in or something of that sort I do not know, but if architects, men who are far more capable than I, would say the Maltby Building was unsafe it would stagger my belief. It is the old story I heard 20 years ago, when I came to the Senate and was assigned offices in the Maltby Building. I stayed there for several years, and I think it is a safe building. That is my opinion, and I say, with all due respect to my friend, with whom I am generally in sympathy in what he wishes, to go out now and spent a great sum of money annually to get rooms for this Vocational Board, an important body, I admit, at a rental of thousands of dollars when we have a building that we own right here, unless there is some commanding reason why that building should not be occupied in some way, my judgment is against what I would consider to be an unnecessary expenditure.

The Senator says that the gentlemen who compose this board are of such a high class, the moment they found that the Maltby Building or any other place was suitable and safe they would be very willing to vacate what they have and go there. But, Mr. President, you can not make leases for buildings or space on such a basis as that. Moreover, it would be one of those rare exceptions in the cost of executive administration that would be striking in the extreme to find that a board or a commission located happily and satisfactorily in the Government's interest would on the ground of economy abandon it and go somewhere else. If that happened it would be one of those rare circumstances that ought to challenge the unanimous admiration of the whole country.

Now, Mr. President, I must add, before I can vote to send this board to some other place than the building we own and have I must have some proof that this building is absolutely unfit and unsafe for the habitation of such a board.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. This morning I had occasion to visit the Agricultural Department, and I was surprised and astonished to see buildings put up in the last 60 days, the largest I ever saw. It seems to me that there is enough room there to house every employee in this Capital—War and Navy Departments and all. Has the Senator tried to get room there?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are not finished.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; they are about finished. It is a magnificent stucco building. It looked to me like 10,000 people could be housed in it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The parties who expect to have charge of that building are not in a position to offer quarters to the Vocational Board. It may be that some quarters could be obtained there later on.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have never seen such a large building since I was born. It covers acres and acres of ground. What they want to use the building for I do not know. I believe it would house an army division.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am ready to meet the Maltby Building advocates with the suggestion that a committee of the Senate be appointed to look into the Maltby Building, and the very moment we can report that it is in proper shape and tender it to the Vocational Board I will join in voting to prevent them from paying any more rent anywhere. The very moment anybody will show the board a place where they can go I will offer a resolution and actively support a termination of the privilege to them of using a part of the fund they already have to get quarters. But the present situation is this: Nobody will give them quarters, and they have no quarters. Under those circumstances we ought to give them quarters. I state again, the moment anyone will offer quarters to them, if they do not accept them, I will vote to stop the use of their present appropriation for renting purposes. I will vote to terminate the privilege of using the money in that way. But to simply theorize about quarters and think they ought to have quarters and ought to have a place when they can not get a place is not just to them. Do not put it on the ground of the general criticism upon the waste of space in the city of Washington. Do not put our critical feeling of such conduct in the way of the Vocational Board having quarters.

APPENDIX A.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT,
UNITED STATES CAPITOL BUILDING AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1917.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate.

SIR: Following our conference a few days ago, I desire to repeat substantially what I then said with reference to the Maltby Building.

It never has been and is not now fitted for clerical occupancy on account of risk of fire. Since vacated by the House of Representatives, which occupied it briefly in 1908, it has been divested of about all of its interior fittings such as mantels, radiators, plumbing, etc., these having been sold off after the Government acquired properties between the Capitol and the Union Station in connection with the Capitol Grounds extension.

The interior floors are out of line, weak in parts, and would require interior bracing to carry any other than the most ordinary loads.

Its condition in 1904 was the subject of an official condemnation through a report made by the chief of the Washington fire department and the fire marshal and transmitted by this office to the Senate. (See Senate Doc. 201, 58th Cong., 2d sess.) Conditions with respect to fire dangers are no better to-day than then.

You may remember that at a session of the Committee on Agriculture about three years ago, at which meeting you were present, I condemned the use of the Maltby Building for any clerical purpose whatsoever. A paragraph in the Agricultural appropriation bill followed granting such a right to the Department of Agriculture. That department never availed itself of that privilege.

During the closing hours of the last session of this Congress a proposition was brought forward to use this building in conjunction with other properties adjacent in connection with the present war activities and estimates were submitted to the Senate to make repairs. The proposition fell through.

The cost to repair and fireproof the Maltby Building at the present time and make it fit for clerical occupancy would approximate $135,000. To make temporary and nonfireproof repairs for clerical occupation only would cost at least $20,000. This latter suggestion I do not recommend except in case the building is to be used exclusively for storage purposes.

In connection with the use of this building the element of safety to human life is the one important thing and I do not propose to make any recommendation for repairs to it which will place a large number of clerks within it unless such repairs be of a nature which will guarantee their safety.

You must remember that the Maltby Building does not cover a large area of ground; that its approximately 40,000 square feet of floor space and its cubic contents are made up largely by reason of its consisting of a basement, five stories, and an attic, the latter being formed by a mansard roof. Its 81 rooms in the numbered plan are listed in the five actual stories above ground level. While the exterior walls are no doubt suitable for interior fireproof construction, the interior itself is made up almost entirely of wood, is of open construction, and of such nature that fire risk would be great. The fire marshal in his report pointed out in strong terms what would happen should a fire occur in the basement of the building as it stands at present.

In conclusion I will suggest that this building is wholly unsuited to the use as proposed by you in our conversation without an entire fireproof reconstruction, at a cost of at least $135,000.

Very respectfully,

ELLIOTT WOODS,
Superintendent United States Capitol Building and Grounds.

APPENDIX B.

DECEMBER 5, 1917.

Subject: Quarters of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

This memorandum is made for the information of Senator HOKE SMITH, of Georgia, regarding the quarters of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education is located in the Ouray Building, 805 G Street. With a total at the present time of 55 employees, it is occupying 3,703 square feet. The need of employing new people temporarily in connection with war work makes it certain that this number will be about 75 on or about January 1, 1918.

For the space occupied a charge of 10 cents per square foot per month is made. This charge includes with the rooms heat, light, janitor service, and elevator service. The Federal Board for Vocational Education has no employees engaged in any work connected with the care or operation of the building.

The floor space is divided up into 14 rooms—10 on the fifth floor and 4 on the seventh floor, the hallway of the fifth floor being occupied by two messengers employed by the board for its work.

The quarters are so crowded that they seriously interfere with the work of the board, but the board has not felt it advisable to undertake the enlargement of its quarters until the question of rent has been settled through the joint resolution in the hands of Senator SMITH.

This difficulty has come at a most unfortunate time. It has seriously interfered with the work of qualifying the States under the Smith-Hughes Act which are eagerly seeking the approval of their plans and certification of their allotments before January 1, 1918. Perhaps more regrettable still, it has delayed very much the war work for the Shipping Board, and the Signal Corps, Aviation, Quartermaster, Engineering, and other corps of the Army which the Secretary of War has asked the board to do through the training of conscripted men for various occupations in schools and classes receiving Federal aid at the homes of these men before they go to camp.

An early settlement of the question will practically double the efficiency of the board in this great crisis.

APPENDIX C.

Memorandum on a joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," etc., approved February 23, 1917.

The purpose of the joint resolution is to enable the Federal Board for Vocational Education to rent quarters for its work out of funds already in the hands of the board given by Congress under the Smith-Hughes Act. This resolution appropriates no money. It simply authorizes the board to use its funds to pay rent for quarters which the board must have to do its work.

The act creating the board and authorizing the expenditure of $200,000 annually for its work failed to specify rent in the District of Columbia as an item of expense. The resolution is necessary if the Federal Board is to have any place in which to do its work. The board has now a double responsibility—that of disbursing almost $2,000,000 for the fiscal year among the States for approved education in agriculture, trades, home economics, and industry, and that of fulfilling certain special war duties placed upon it by various departments of the Government. Thus far these consist in the making of studies and investigations regarding the training of conscripted men for Army occupations, of workers in shipyards, and of the vocational reeducation of disabled soldiers and sailors.

Owing to unavoidable circumstances, the board was not organized until four months after war was declared. As a result the effort to obtain quarters in various Government buildings had to be made at a time when probably every department was not only overworked but was itself seeking additional room and was commandeering every foot of available space.

Appended is a recital of some of the steps which the board has taken to secure room in buildings owned or rented by the Government. In view of these experiences it is obvious that adequate quarters in Government-owned property can not be secured.

—

NOVEMBER 25, 1917.

Subject: Quarters for the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

This memorandum undertakes to state the situation with regard to quarters for the Federal Board for Vocational Education, created under an act of Congress approved February 23, 1917.

This work of the board was organized the middle of August. Through the courtesy of the Interior Department the board was given the use of one or two rooms in the Pension Building. An offer of further space was made, but the acceptance of this would have involved great overcrowding of the Bureau of Education, the placing of the stenographic force of that bureau and of the Federal board in wholly unsuitable quarters, and while the floor area might have been considerable, the number of rooms would have been far less than the board needs, and subdivision of the rooms would have been impossible.

On the 1st of September, finding itself entirely without a place to go, arrangements were made for temporary quarters in the Ouray Building, the rent for which must be met out of private resources, which the board has been advised is contrary to the provisions of the statute of May 1, 1884 (23 Stat., 17).

In the meantime an attempt was made to secure quarters in the Interior Building. Here six small rooms were promised, but the offer withdrawn when the board was on the point of moving to these quarters, although they were insufficient to accommodate more than one-third the force. In regular order since that time the board has made efforts to secure quarters in Government-owned or Government-rented buildings, as follows:

1. The quarters now occupied by the Provost Marshal General in the Land Office Building. He was unable to secure quarters elsewhere, so this plan failed.

2. Quarters in the building occupied by the Department of Labor. It was possible to secure about six small rooms here on different floors. Later only one was found available. In neither case was relief possible.

3. The unfinished laboratories in the building for the Bureau of Standards. It was found later these were needed at once by the Department of Commerce.

4. Quarters in certain rented buildings on Pennsylvania Avenue in proximity to the Willard Hotel. Here again certain Government departments had preempted the space.

6. Quarters in the German Embassy seized by the Federal Government. Here again only disappointment was encountered.

7. Quarters in the basement of the Senate Office Building. Here again the attempt failed because there was no space available.

8. Quarters in the new office building being erected on Sixth Street near Pennsylvania Avenue. All of the space in this building had been assigned for strictly military work in the War and Navy Departments, and, furthermore, will not be available for some months to come.

9. Quarters in the new buildings to be occupied by the Council of National Defense and the Food Administration. Here again the space is preempted and none available for the work of the Federal board.

10. Quarters in the Interstate Commerce Building. Not a single room is available.

11. Quarters in the new Department of Justice building. Not a single room is available.

12. Quarters on the seventh floor of the building occupied by the Department of Commerce, where only one room is available, and the yielding of which would put the Department of Commerce to great inconvenience without meeting the needs of the Federal board.

13. Quarters in the building occupied by the Federal Trade Commission, where it was found the commission was attempting to rent outside quarters with little success.

14. Quarters in the buildings of the Department of Agriculture. Here again it was found that department needs 70,000 square feet of additional space.

15. The Graham Building, corner of Fourteenth and E Streets, was offered by the Treasury Department, and the board undertook to expend the $8,000 or $10,000 necessary to make that place available, but the demands of the War Industries Board impelled the withdawal of this offer.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the discussion of the Maltby Building as it appertains to the resolution of the Senator from Georgia is altogether out of place at this time, because it is confessed that the radiators have been taken out of that building and it is confessed that the plumbing has been taken out. It is absolutely impossible at this time, or at least impracticable, for that building to be used by the Vocational Educational Board. Congress regulates what shall be done with the Maltby Building. The Senate has approved of an appropriation to put it in a condition to be used, but we have been met at the other end of the Capitol with a refusal to ratify the Senate's action. The result is the Maltby Building can not be used, and we are calling upon the commissioners appointed to conduct this great educational work to provide, out of their own pockets, quarters for the commission's occupancy. I think it is very unjust to them. All we can properly say is, as it seems to me, that until the Maltby Building or some other suitable building has been put in order for their occupancy we ought to provide the necessary quarters. I happen to know Mr. Munroe, the vice chairman, because in my long struggle with vocational education legislation I was often in communication with him. He is a man of great patriotism and liberality.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And really the acting chairman of the board.

Mr. PAGE. Really the acting chairman. It is true he is a man of wealth. He can and will pay the rent if we ask it, but I think it is a shame for us to ask any man who is practically giving his time, as Mr. Munroe is, to assume the burden of the rental of rooms for this very important commission. The small sum that he receives for the time that he is giving to this work is of no account whatever to him. He is working here because to him it is a labor of love. He has worked for the cause of vocational education for many years, and has come here now not because of salary, for that was not the slightest temptation, but because he felt the great duty and burden resting upon his shoulders.

Another member of that commission is Charles A. Greathouse, of Indiana, one of the leading and most progressive farmers of Indiana. He comes here representing the agricultural interests in this board. What he gets as salary for his connection with the board is as nothing.

It seems to me that when we refuse to give these men quarters anywhere, and especially when we suggest the Maltby Building, which is confessedly without plumbing and without radiators and absolutely unfit for use, we are guilty of great wrong.

I want to vigorously emphasize what the Senator from Georgia has said about this wrong. Even though it may be for only a month or two that they use the rooms they are now occupying, until we furnish them some other rooms that are habitable, it seems to me we ought to pay the rent.

The rental they are now paying is, I understand, conceded to be reasonable. I think they have done the best they could to practice reasonable economy.

I wish to say a word concerning Dr. Prosser, the executive member of the board. He was connected with a large educational institution in Minnesota, and my understanding is, although I do not speak from authority, that his salary there was some ten or twelve thousand dollars. No man has taken a more active interest in vocational education than the doctor. His great interest in that work has prompted him to secure a release from his engagement in Minnesota and he is to-day working here for a good many thousand dollars a year less than he was receiving in Minnesota.

This whole board is acting largely from patriotic motives. They are giving largely of their time, and shall we go still further and ask them to pay out of their own pockets the rental of the rooms which they have to occupy? All of the debate that has taken place this morning with reference to this resolution has been with regard to the Maltby Building. Nobody says that the Maltby Building should not be used if put in proper order for the work; but it is not put in order. The House of Representatives has refused to make an appropriation to do it; and until it is put in order, it seems to me, we ought not to discuss the Maltby Building in connection with this resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia knows that I have been deeply interested in vocational education and in the personnel of the board. What I shall say, therefore, will not be by way of criticism of the board nor of the work they are accomplishing.

Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of having it understood that hereafter boards and commissions can not override the customs and rules of the House of Representatives and of the Senate and come to committees other than the respective Committees on Appropriations. This question was presented to the House of Representatives during the closing days of the last session. The House refused to make the appropriation at that time, as I understand, because of insufficient information.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senate Committee on Appropriations authorized the appropriation, and the Senate approved it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am coming to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But we did not have time to present the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the history of that very well, indeed.

This question, Mr. President, was presented to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, and the urgent deficiency appropriation bill included the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia, providing for rent for the quarters of this board. I think it would have been much better if the board had asked Congress to have made the appropriation in the regular way, rather than to have come to the Committee on Education and Labor and ask them to provide for an appropriation for rent, which is wholly within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses. I say this because I do not want other boards and other commissions, of which we now have so many, to think that if they are turned down in any request for an appropriation by the Appropriation Committee of either House of Congress they can go to some other committee and have their request granted and become a law.

I am in favor of appropriating the money to pay this rent. Certainly it became absolutely necessary for this board to have the quarters which they have rented; there is no question about that; but it has been running now for a good many months. There will be a deficiency appropriation bill passed by Congress in a very little while, shortly after the Christmas holidays. I thought that the other House, if this question had been presented to it in the light which I think it can be presented, would have included the appropriation in that bill. Then there would be nothing irregular about it, and it would have gone through, as it should have done and as I think, at the last session of Congress.

Mr. PAGE. May I interrogate the Senator from Utah before he sits down?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. Is it not perfectly evident to the Senator that when we passed this appropriation we supposed that it included and might be used in part for the rent of offices?

Mr. SMOOT. That makes no difference as to the position which I take, Mr. President. If the law did not include it, there is only one way of getting it, and that is through the regular committees of Congress.

Mr. PAGE. But the commission gathered here supposing that they had authority to pay out a part of that appropriation for the rent of rooms, they hired their clerks, they made all preparations to go ahead, but the whole work would have had to stop had not some liberal gentleman of the board said, "Go ahead, and I will pay the rent." It was a very generous act, and I think we ought to embrace the very first opportunity to show that we appreciate it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, to tell the truth about the whole thing, it was never intended that there should be any renting outside for the board. The board expected that they would be located in quarters which were then under Government control and owned by the Government, but the situation arose through the war conditions that the space which the Government had at the time this board was organized had been required for other purposes. Therefore what the Senator from Vermont says has nothing whatever to do with the situation as it exists to-day.

I am not criticizing the appropriation of the money to pay for this rent, for I think that it ought to be paid by the Government if there are not quarters owned by the Government which they could occupy.

Well, Mr. President, the board was not required to rent these rooms in the beginning; it occupied space in the Pension Bureau for some time; but when the growth of the bureau had reached such a position that it needed that space, of course the board was asked to hunt other quarters, and undertook to hunt other quarters. However, the board found none which were owned by the Government that were satisfactory. Therefore they rented the rooms which they now occupy. I do not believe that there was one member of the board who did not think, when the time came, that Congress would pay the rent that they assumed in the beginning; and I do not believe that there will be a Congress of the United States that ever will refuse to pay it; but what I want to impress upon the Senate is that I do not want all the other boards and commissions which have been organized by Congress to think that they can go outside of the regular Appropriation Committees of the two Houses and get the money to pay all of the obligations that they may assume, thinking that Congress is going to appropriate the money for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator not think, as the original bill was the work of the Committee on Education and Labor and carried the appropriation, and as this is simply an amendment broadening the use of that appropriation, that it could properly have gone to the Committee on Education and Labor, rather than to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think so, Mr. President, and I will say to the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to say to the Senator from Utah that if it had carried a new appropriation, I should have at once suggested that it go to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I was merely going to say to the Senator that if it carried a new appropriation I would stand here for hours and defeat it, if possible.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In that case I never should have suggested that it go to the Committee on Education and Labor; but, as it was simply an amendment adding a few lines to our original bill, broadening the authority for the use of the fund, the reference to the Committee on Education and Labor was proper.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only excuse that could be offered for its passage here at this time.

I do not want to take further the time of the Senate, except to state that I certainly shall ask the Senator to accept an amendment to the joint resolution, which I will offer now. I move to strike out, in line 9 of the joint resolution, the words "organization of said board" and insert "rental of the rooms at present occupied," and then, after the word "until," strike out the words "otherwise provided" and insert "February 1, 1918."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not accept that amendment; it does not take care of the situation; it would be right on us again, for they will not be provided with quarters by that time. If the Senate does not want to give them quarters, the Senate can refuse to do so; but I can not accept the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong in his statement that Congress can not provide for the matter by that time. Before the 1st day of February we shall have an urgent deficiency bill before us, and then the board can obtain the necessary appropriations through the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think that is the proper place to make the provision.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator thought it was at the last session of Congress when he offered an amendment to the bill reported by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Because that was the only way to do it. I think the amendment was subject to a point of order when offered in the Senate, and I would not have tried it except under a request for unanimous consent. This is an amendment to a general law, and it can not properly be put on an appropriation bill. It is not an appropriation; every dollar of the appropriation is carried in the vocational education bill. This is an amendment to that statute, and I think it ought to be made in this form.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understood the Senator here the other day, he thought that there ought to be a limitation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be willing to accept an amendment reading "until quarters owned by the Government may be furnished to them." Just as soon as that can be done I want them to stop renting, but I do not want the limit made February. I do not want this whole fight to be gone over again. I think we ought to provide the board with quarters until they can secure quarters in a public building.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want a standing appropriation made for any board created by Congress and authorization granted that any part of it, or all of it, may be used for the payment of rent. That is unwise legislation and ought never to be adopted. The question here is to provide rooms for the Vocational Education Board. Why should that board be treated differently from any other board or any other commission? Why should they not come to Congress every year, the same as every other board and every other commission has to come to Congress, and ask for appropriations for rent? Rents change; sometimes they increase and sometimes they decrease. The board may grow, and then they will require an additional amount for rent. Under this resolution as it is now offered there is no limit to the amount of the $200,000 appropriation that might be paid for rent. They could rent a palace in the District of Columbia, if they wanted to do so, and use all the appropriation for that purpose.

I know that Congress does not want any such thing done.

If the Senator thinks that an appropriation for rent for the board can not be provided by the 1st of February, by what date does he think it can be provided? I will say to the Senator now that I am perfectly willing to appropriate money for the rent of rooms for the board, but I want the board, before an appropriation is made by the Appropriations Committees of the House and of the Senate, to show that they can not get rooms anywhere else, and to show that the rooms that they have asked for and the amount asked for for the payment of rent are absolutely necessary for properly carrying on the business of the board.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator mean that he intends to suggest an appropriation of money in addition to the appropriation now carried for the board?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; I am perfectly willing to do that, because, I want to say to the Senator, the $200,000 appropriation, when made, was made for the purpose of paying the expenses of the board for the work of the board, and to be spent outside of the District of Columbia as well as in it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will suggest this amendment, "from the date of the organization of said board until 12 months thereafter," or "for the term of 12 months."

Mr. SMOOT. Well, why should we use the words "from the date of the organization of said board" when we know that the board did not rent the rooms at the date of its organization? The board at that time occupied space in the Pension Bureau. All I want to do is to pay every dollar of rent that they have assumed. If my amendment is adopted, this is the way the resolution will read—I should like to have the Senator follow it so that he may notice the change:

Including the rental of quarters in the District of Columbia from the date of the rental of the rooms at present occupied until February 1, 1918.

If the Senator does not think that February 1 is long enough to enable us to get a deficiency bill passed, make it March 1, make it April 1, but let us have some date when we will know that it is going to cease.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Say "until July 1, 1918."

Mr. SMOOT. "June 30, 1918"; I am perfectly willing to accept that; that is the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. "June 30, 1918"; I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing, then, with that amendment that the joint resolution shall pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Utah. Does the Senator from Utah withdraw the amendment which he has offered?

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the amendment I am about to suggest as a modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator withdraws the amendment first offered by him and in lieu thereof offers another.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in lieu thereof I offer the following amendment——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am willing to accept an amendment making it read "until June 30, 1918."

Mr. SMOOT. That will be the modified amendment that I will offer. In line 9 I move to strike out the words "organization of said board"——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not willing to accept that.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator wants that in the resolution; the Senator does not want to pay for quarters whilst the board occupied rooms in the Pension Building.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, nothing will be paid for rent beyond the time when rooms were rented. I simply take that date because shortly afterwards they did rent quarters.

Mr. SMOOT. My amendment is "from the date of the rental of the rooms at present occupied."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, I am willing to say "from the date of the rental of the rooms at present occupied until July 1." I am not willing to limit them simply to those rooms, because, if the pressure comes upon them from the War Department to furnish this additional work, they may be obliged to have some additional space.

Mr. PAGE. Let me call attention, if I may, Mr. President, to the fact that the rooms at present occupied, I think, are larger than the rooms at first rented, and it seems to me that a close construction of the language proposed would shut them out from payment for the rooms which they at first leased.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all; it covers the matter completely.

Mr. PAGE. You say "rooms at present occupied."

Mr. SMOOT. That not only takes in what they first rented, but it takes in all of the increased rooms up to the present time. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia, because that limits rather than extends the amounts that will be required. Let me read it to the Senator again, and I ask him to follow it closely:

Including the rental of quarters in the District of Columbia from the date of the rental of the rooms at present occupied.

Or, in other words, if they only had 6 rooms at first, they could pay for the 6 rooms; if they have 12 rooms at present, they could pay the rent for the 12 rooms, or whatever they have.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object to that language—"from the date of the rental of the rooms at present occupied."

Mr. SMOOT (reading)—

From the date of the rental of the rooms at present occupied until June 30, 1918.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object to that. I accept the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution, as proposed to be amended, will be reported.

The Secretary proceeded to read the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am just advised by the Senator from Vermont that the board rented some smaller quarters before they rented the present rooms, and they then gave up those quarters and moved into the present rooms.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I did not quite convey my understanding to the Senator. They leased certain rooms. They found that they were insufficient, and then they leased other rooms, adding to them. Now, it seems to me that if we limit the authorization to the rooms at present occupied, and those were leased the 1st day of November, for instance, while they had smaller quarters from the 1st day of July, we might shut out the rental of rooms from July until November.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me suggest this to the Senator: When you say "from the date of the organization of the board," you would only pay for rent they became liable for subsequent to that time. You could not possibly put a rental on the Government that was not actually incurred by the board; and there should be no objection to that language. It will not add a dollar of liability to the Government. If you say, "from the organization of the board," of course while they were in the Pension Office you would not be subject to the payment of rent. You just give a date so as to cover whatever they did become liable for before the passage of the joint resolution. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. There would be if I had not absolute confidence in the honor of the board; but having absolute confidence in the honor of the board and that it would not be construed in a way in which I can see that it could be construed, I am perfectly willing, in order that the joint resolution may pass, to offer the amendment "until June 30, 1918."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will read the joint resolution as amended.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," etc., approved February 23, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the words "including the rental of quarters in the District of Columbia from the date of the organization of said board until June 30, 1918."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 23, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the United States hereby authorizes any of the persons as hereinafter defined, after obtaining the permit of the Secretary of War as herein provided, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam or dams, diversion structures, reservoirs, and accessory works, in or along any of the navigable waters of the United States for the development, improvement, or preservation of navigation for the purposes of interstate and foreign commerce, and the development and utilization of water, water power natural or created by the improvement, and for other purposes; and such grantee and such permit shall at all times be subject to the provisions of this act and also subject to such conditions as the Secretary of War shall, in accordance with the provisions of this act, make a part of such permit; that the word 'persons,' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean both the singular and plural, as the case demands, and shall be construed to mean individuals, political subdivisions of States, municipal corporations, corporations, companies, and associations; and the term 'grantee' herein shall mean any such persons to whom shall be granted a permit as herein provided: Provided, That when the power to be developed by the project and improvement of the stream for navigation is used or to be used for a public utility purpose or purposes the grantee must be a municipal corporation, or a political subdivision, or other agencies of a State, or a public-service agent of a State, or a public-utility corporation created and organized under the laws of a State or the United States, authorized to engage in the business of furnishing water, heat, or electric energy for public or private use, and whose rates and charges and service shall be subject to regulation by the laws of the State or a duly constituted commission or other agency of said State; but in any case where the State has not made provision for authorizing municipal corporations, political subdivisions, or other agencies of the State or public utility corporations or agencies to engage in said business, the qualifications of the grantee prescribed in this proviso shall not apply; and no transfer of any such permit or of the rights thereunder granted, except by tax sales or trust deed or mortgage issued for the bona fide purpose of financing the business of such grantee, shall be made to any transferee not having the qualifications herein specified for a grantee hereunder, and any successor or assign of the rights of any such grantee, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, or foreclosure sale or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the permit under which such rights are held by such grantee and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the grantee hereunder.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War may grant a permit or permits for such dam or dams and accessory works upon the following conditions:

"First. The plans and specifications for such dam and all accessory works, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such maps of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, and when approved shall be made a part of such permit; and thereafter no change in such plans or specifications shall be made except as such change shall be approved and made a part of such permit by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.

"Second. The project adopted, including the plans, specifications, and location for any dam and accessory work, shall be such as in the judgment of the Secretary of War shall be best adapted to a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway in question for the uses of navigation in foreign and interstate commerce and for the full development and utilization of its waters and water power and best adapted to conserve and utilize the water resources of the region in the interests of navigation and other beneficial purposes and the public welfare.

"Third. As part of the conditions of such permit the Secretary of War may, in so far as he deems the same reasonably necessary to promote the present and future interests of navigation and consistent with a reasonable investment cost to such grantee, include any or all of the following provisions or requirements: (a) That such grantee shall, to the extent necessary to preserve and improve navigation facilities at least equivalent to those existing prior to the construction of such dam, construct, in whole or in part, without expense to the United States, in connection with any such dam a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or other structures for navigation purposes, in accordance with plans, specifications, and conditions approved by the Secretary of War and made a part of such permit, and shall furnish free of cost power for the operation of the same; (b) that in case such navigation facilities shall not be made a part of such original construction at the expense of the grantee, then, whenever the United States shall deem such navigation facilities necessary the grantee shall convey to the United States free of cost such of its land and its right of way and such right of passage through its dams or other structures, and permit such control of pools as may be required for the construction and use of such navigation facilities, and shall furnish free of cost power for the operation of the same; (c) that such grantee shall reimburse the United States for the cost of any investigation necessary for the approval of the plans as herein provided and for such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interest of the United States; (d) that such grantee shall pay to the United States reasonable charges in consideration of the benefits accruing to and used by such grantee through the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of headwater improvements, including storage reservoirs, on any such waterway, such charges to be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War and to be based upon a reasonable compensation proportionate to the benefit actually received by the grantee by reason of any increase of flow past or over the water-power structures artificially caused by such headwater improvement, and all moneys received from such charges are hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be known as 'the headwater improvement fund,' from which fund expenditures for headwater improvements and maintenance may be made by and in the discretion of the Secretary of War; (e) that such grantee in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam or diversion structure and accessory works may, with the authority of the Secretary of War, occupy and use, to the extent necessary for the project, any lands of the United States, including the public lands; and any part of the public lands may, on certification by the Secretary of War that the same is required for navigation purposes, be withdrawn by the President for said purpose as provided in the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawal of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910'; and for any land of the United States so used and occupied the grantee shall pay to the United States such reasonable charges based upon its value as may be fixed by the Secretary of War; and in ascertaining the value of the land the Secretary of War shall be governed by the rules of the law in force in the State or Territory in which it is situated, applicable to proceedings wherein private property is sought to be taken for a public use.

"In fixing such conditions, or any of them, the Secretary of War shall also take into consideration the probable cost to such grantee of construction and maintenance and operation and the probable consumers' rate required to produce a reasonable return upon the investment required of such grantee. As between contesting applicants for a permit hereunder having the legal qualifications required by this act, and being equally well qualified to comply with the conditions imposed herein, preference shall be given to that applicant which has first acquired the right to divert the water of the stream by means of the dam to erect which the permit is sought and otherwise complied with the laws of the State or States in which the dam or diversion structure is to be constructed; or if there are no State laws to be complied with the preference shall be given to the first applicant. In granting permits hereunder and fixing conditions thereof, and in prescribing rules and regulations as to the maintenance and operation of any structure to which this act is applicable, the Secretary of War, before acting, shall have the report and advice of the Chief of Engineers: Provided, however, That before the permit shall be granted under this act, the permittee must first obtain, in such manner as may be required by the laws of the States, the consent of the State or States in which the dam or other structure for the development of the water power is proposed to be constructed.

"SEC. 3. That the control of the level of the pools above and below such dam, and of the currents developed therein, and of the flow of the water over and past such dam, and the operation of navigation facilities which shall be constructed as a part of or in connection with any such dam, whether at the expense of such grantee or of the United States, shall at all times be subject to such rules and regulations as shall be deemed by the Secretary of War to be reasonable and necessary in the interests of navigation. Such rules and regulations may include the maintenance and operation by such grantee, at its own expense, of such lights and other signals as may be directed by the Secretary of War and such other lights and signals and such fishways as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, and for failure to comply with any such rule or regulation such grantee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 8 of this act.

"SEC. 4. That the grantee of the permit shall be liable for all damages occasioned to the property of others by the construction, maintenance, or operation of the dam, reservoir, or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, constructed under the permit, and in no event shall the United States be liable therefor. When the grantee is a municipal corporation, or a political subdivision of a State, or a public service agent of a State, or a public utility or service corporation, and can not acquire by contract or purchase the right to use or damage the lands or property of others necessary to the construction, maintenance, or operation of any dam, reservoir, diversion structure, or the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, it may acquire the same by the exercise of the right of eminent domain in the district court for the United States in which such land or property may be located or in the State courts. The practice and procedure in any action or proceeding for that purpose in the district court of the United States shall conform as nearly as may be with the practice and procedure in similar actions or proceeding in the courts of the State where the property is situated.

"SEC. 5. The permit granted under the provisions of this act shall be for the term of 50 years from the date of the permit, subject to be revoked for cause as provided in section 8 of this act: Provided, That after the expiration of said term of 50 years the grantee may continue the maintenance, occupation, and operation of the dam or dams, reservoir, and accessory works and appurtenant property, under the terms and restrictions of the permit and this act, unless revoked for cause as provided in section 8 of this act, until the property is acquired, taken over, and compensation made to such grantee therefor by the United States or a new grantee, or a new permit is granted to it, as provided in section 6 of this act.

"SEC. 6. That at any time after the expiration of said 50 years the United States may terminate the rights hereunder granted upon the giving to the grantee, either before or after the lapse of the period of the permit, of two years' notice in writing of such termination, and upon the taking over by the United States of all the property of the grantee which constitutes part of the plant of the grantee and dependent in whole or in part upon it for its usefulness and acquired, necessary, appurtenant, valuable or serviceable in the distribution of water, or in the generation, transmission, and distribution of power, and upon paying to the grantee just compensation for said property, together with the cost to the grantee of the lock or locks, or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures, required by the United States, and assuming all contracts entered into by the grantee which have the approval of the duly constituted public authority having jurisdiction thereof, or which were entered into in good faith and at a reasonable rate, in view of all the circumstances existing at the time such contracts were made. The value of said property and the reasonableness and good faith of said contracts shall be determined by agreement between the Secretary of War and the grantee, and in the event of their failure to reach unanimous agreement, then by proceedings in equity instituted by the United States in the district court of the United States in the district within which any portion of such dam may be located. In the determination of the value of said property for any purpose as between such grantee and the United States or any State no value shall be claimed by or allowed to the grantee for the rights hereunder granted or for good will or anticipated profits. When the permit expires by the limitation of 50 years, or is otherwise terminated under the provisions of this act, the United States may acquire, take over, and occupy all the property of grantee herein described, upon the terms herein provided, to be used, operated, or disposed of as may be authorized by the acts of Congress then in force; or the Secretary of War may grant a new permit to the original permittee, or its successors, upon the terms and conditions and with the restrictions provided in this act and authorized and required by subsequent acts of Congress; or the Secretary of War may grant a permit to another person or persons defined in sections 1 and 10 of this act upon the conditions and terms and subject to the restrictions and preferences herein provided, and as may be required or authorized by then existing laws of the United States, who may acquire and take over and operate the property of the original permittee or its successors upon the payment of the reasonable value of the property and the assumption of contracts in all things as the United States is authorized and required to do. The district court of the United States wherein the property is situated is hereby vested with jurisdiction to enforce the provisions of this section by appropriate proceedings in equity.

"SEC. 7. That all charges, rates, and service by any grantee hereunder shall be subject to regulation in accordance with the laws of the State within which the service is rendered: Provided, That where the said power or any part of it shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce, the rates, charges, and services made and rendered by the grantee or by any subsidiary corporation any of whose stock is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by such grantee, or by any person, corporation, or association purchasing power from such grantee for sale or distribution, shall be reasonable, nondiscriminatory, and adequate to the public and to the ultimate consumer; and whenever the States directly concerned are unable to agree, through the properly constituted authorities thereof, on either rates, charges, or services, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon and vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce this provision concerning the power that enters into interstate commerce, upon the complaint of any person aggrieved or upon its own initiative, in the manner and according to the procedure and practice of that commission in fixing and regulating the rates and charges of railway companies, the grantee to have the same rights of hearing, defense, and review as said companies in such cases: And provided further, That in the valuation for rate-making purposes of the property of any such grantee there shall be included the cost to such grantee of the construction of the lock or locks, or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, but no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights hereby granted: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the sovereign powers of the several States of the United States over the navigable waters within their respective boundaries and the property rights they hold therein in trust for their people, or their right to control those streams, including that to grant permits for the use of the waters and water power thereof, and to require the payment to the States of such charges and royalties for such use as may be authorized by the constitutions and laws of the respective States, subject, however, in all cases to the paramount power of Congress to regulate foreign and interstate commerce and navigation upon all the navigable waters of the United States; and the plant and its appurtenances of the grantee, including real, personal, and mixed property, constituting the same and used for the generation and distribution of power, or for other purposes, and the power generated therein shall be subject to taxation under the laws of the State where situated as other similar property within the State. The Secretary of War shall have the right to provide rules and regulations for uniform accounting, to examine all books and accounts of grantees under the terms of this act, to require them to submit statements, representations or reports, annual or special, including full information as to assets and liabilities, capitalization, cost of project, cost of operation, the production, use, transmission and sale of power. All such statements, representations, and reports shall be upon oath unless otherwise specified, and in such form and on such blanks as the Secretaries may require, and any person making any false entry, statement, representation, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury.

"SEC. 8. That any grantee who shall fail or refuse to comply with any of the provisions of this act or any of the conditions made a part of any permit issued hereunder or any regulation or lawful order of the Secretary of War, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed or provided by law and in such proceedings each party shall have the right of appeal as in other cases; and every month such grantee shall remain in default after written notice from the Secretary of War shall be deemed a new offense and subject such grantee to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to said penalties the Attorney General may, on request of the Secretary of War, institute proper proceedings in equity in the district court of the United States in the district in which such structure or any of its accessory works are, in whole or in part, situated, for the purpose of having such violation stopped by injunction, mandamus, or other process; and any such district court shall have jurisdiction over all such proceedings and shall have the power to make and enforce all writs, orders, and decrees necessary to compel the compliance with the lawful orders and regulations of the Secretary of War and the performance of any condition imposed under the provisions of this act; and if the unlawful maintenance and operation continues after final judgment in either civil or criminal proceedings provided for in this section, and is deemed by the court to be such as shall require, in the public interest, a decree revoking all rights and privileges held under authority of this act, the court may decree such revocation, and in case of such a decree the court may wind up the business of such grantee conducted under the rights in question and may decree the sale of the dam or diversion structure and all appurtenant property constructed or acquired under authority of this act, and all of the property of the grantee dependent in whole or in part for its usefulness upon the rights hereunder granted or such part thereof as the court may direct, and distribute the proceeds to the parties entitled to the same, and may make and enforce such other and further orders and decrees as equity and justice may require, and the United States may purchase at said sale, but in case of such purchase the United States shall not be required to pay for any value attaching to such plant or structures by reason of any franchise or permit acquired under this act; and in case of such sale the vendee shall take the rights and privileges and shall perform the duties which belonged to the grantee, and shall assume all outstanding obligations and liabilities of the grantee which the court may deem equitable in the premises; and the court shall have power, by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise, to exercise all jurisdiction necessary for the protection and administration or disposition of the property and for the equitable execution of this act.

"SEC. 9. That the grantee shall commence the construction of the dam and accessory works within two years from the date of the permit herein provided, and shall thereafter, in good faith and with due diligence, prosecute such construction, and shall, within such time to be fixed in the permit, complete and put in commercial operation such part of the ultimate development as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary to supply the reasonable needs of the then available market, and shall, from time to time thereafter, construct such portion of the balance of such ultimate development as said Secretary of War may direct and within the time specified by him so as to supply adequately the reasonable market demands until such ultimate development shall be completed; and extensions of the periods for the commencement and completion of the construction may be granted by the Secretary of War when, in his judgment, the same are not incompatible with the public interest. In case the grantee shall not commence actual construction within the time herein prescribed, or as extended by the Secretary of War, then the authority as to such grantee shall terminate, and in case any dam or diversion structure and accessory works be not completed within the time specified in the permit or extended as herein provided, then the Attorney General, upon the request of the Secretary of War, shall institute proper proceedings in the proper district court of the United States for the revocation of said authority, the sale of the works constructed, and such other equitable relief as the case may demand, as provided for in section 8 of this act.

"SEC. 10. The Secretary of War may lease to any applicant having the capacity of grantee as herein defined, and having complied with the laws of the State in which a dam is constructed or to be constructed by the United States, the right to utilize the surplus water power over and above that required for navigation at any navigation dam now or hereafter constructed, either with or without contribution by the applicant, and owned by the United States, and on such terms as may be deemed by the Secretary of War for the best interests of the United States, and reasonable and fair to both parties, and in awarding such lease preference shall be given to a municipal corporation, a political subdivision of a State or a public service agent of a State, or any part thereof, provided the plans of the same are deemed by the Secretary of War to be adapted to conserve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water or other power resources of the region; and in contests between other applicants the Secretary of War shall likewise give preference to the applicant whose plans he finds and determines are best adapted to develop, conserve, and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water-power resources to be affected; and all such leases and the parties thereto and the terms and conditions thereof shall be reported annually to Congress. The charges and rents arising from such lease or leases are hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended for the maintenance of said dams and the further improvement of waterways in which the same may be situated under the direction of the Secretary of War.

"The provisions of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 13 of this act shall, in so far as applicable in each case, apply to structures erected, maintained, or operated under and in pursuance of the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 11. That this act shall not affect the rights of any person, company, or corporation as to the construction, maintenance, or operation of any structure heretofore constructed or upon which construction has been begun, under permit or approval of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers or other authority heretofore lawfully granted: Provided, That in the operation of any such structures and accessory works the provisions of sections 3, 7, 8, 12, and 13 of this act shall apply to the same extent as if such structures had been authorized under this act, and all conflicting provisions relating to the operation of said structures and accessory works contained in any authority heretofore lawfully granted are hereby altered, amended, or repealed so as to conform with the provisions of said sections 3, 7, 8, 12, and 13 of this act: Provided further, That upon application by any person, company, or corporation having the capacity of grantee as herein defined, which is now constructing or operating any structures herein specified across, in, or along any navigable waters of the United States under authority heretofore lawfully granted, the Secretary of War may issue to such applicant a permit in accordance with the provision of this act, and in such a case the provisions of this act shall become extended to such applicant as a grantee hereunder: Provided further, That no contract, which shall have been lawfully made, for power, light, heat, or water, or for the service or delivery of the same to be furnished from such structures or their accessory works, and to which such structures or works, or the person, company, or corporation constructing, owning, or operating the same, shall be subject, shall be affected by any permit under this act, and no such person, association, or corporation shall be released from any lawful obligation by reason of this act or of any permit granted thereunder: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to irrigation or power dams or grants to municipal corporations affecting the use of water or water power for municipal purposes or to other projects approved or erected under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture upon the public lands of the United States.

"SEC. 12. That the works constructed and maintained under authority of this act shall not be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, controlled, or operated by any device or in any manner so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination in the form of an unlawful trust or monopoly, or form the subject of any unlawful contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric energy or in restraint of trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or Territories, or within any one State or Territory, in the generation, sale, or distribution of electric energy.

"SEC. 13. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved: Provided, That in case any grantee hereunder shall, at the time of such alteration, amendment, or repeal, have exercised rights in accordance with this act, such rights and the property used thereunder shall be deemed property rights of such grantee, of which such grantee shall not be deprived by such alteration, amendment, or repeal, except upon the conditions provided in case of termination by section 6 of this act.

"SEC. 14. That the term 'navigable waters' as used in this act and as applied to streams shall be construed to include only such streams or parts of streams as are in their ordinary natural condition used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce or which through improvement heretofore or hereafter made have been or shall become usable in such commerce. As to all other streams or parts of streams over which Congress has jurisdiction, under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, permission is hereby given to construct dams therein, subject, however, to removal or reconstruction, without expense to the United States unless utilized by the United States, whenever the United States enters upon the improvement thereof for the purpose of making the same usable for interstate or foreign transportation: Provided, That any person who proposes to construct a dam in any such last-mentioned stream or part of stream may make application to the Secretary of War and thereupon may receive a permit under the conditions with all the rights and privileges herein provided for streams or parts of streams used for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce in their ordinary, natural, or improved condition. Nothing in this section shall be construed to grant any right to occupy or use any public land.

"Sections 7 and 10 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' approved September 19, 1890, and sections 9 and 10 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1899, so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 15. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, a bill containing practically the same provisions as this bill was introduced during the last Congress and passed by the Senate, but was so amended in the House that the committee of conference failed to agree upon it, and it did not become a law.

The bill now under consideration differs very little from that one, and as that bill was debated by the Senate for more than 30 days, I do not deem it necessary now to make any extended statement of the provisions of this bill or any argument in favor of it. I will content myself at this time with giving a brief statement of the proposed legislation and the differences between this bill and the one which was passed during the last Congress.

The bill provides primarily for the improvement of navigation in rivers under the jurisdiction of Congress with private capital, as distinguished from appropriations by Congress for that purpose, and, secondarily, for the development and utilization of the water power of those rivers resulting from such improvement, as well as that created by dams constructed and to be constructed under the authority of Congress. The secondary purpose of the bill is the inducement for the investment of private capital in the improvement of navigable streams and without which it would not be so invested or improvements made.

The provisions for the development of navigation, present and future, of navigable rivers are carefully prepared to accomplish that object, the improvement to be made in all cases in accordance with plans submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, and constructed under their supervision, all with a view primarily of promoting and protecting navigation facilities. In fact, the improvements are required to be made and maintained according to such plans and in such manner as if they were solely for navigation purposes and to be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States.

It is believed that the bill provides a way by which many of the navigable rivers of the country can be opened to commercial navigation, which, for the want of available means, can not for years be improved in the ordinary way by appropriations from the Treasury of the United States, provided the provisions covering the secondary object of the bill are broad enough and liberal enough to attract private capital desiring to invest in water-power development; for it is obvious, without great inducement of individual interest and advantage, private capital will not be invested in an improvement for the sole benefit of the general public.

It is also believed that the secondary object of the bill—that is, the development and utilization of the water power of navigable streams—is of equal importance to the primary object, although it is in a sense incidental to it, and it is believed that the provisions of the bill concerning this are ample to accomplish that purpose.

It is estimated that there is in the navigable rivers of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, and also of what may be developed by feasible storage projects, over 61,000,000 horsepower of water-power energy, not more than one-tenth of which is now improved and utilized. This great natural resource in all other civilized countries is developed practically to its fullest extent, and has and is now, by furnishing cheap power, contributing greatly to the wealth of those countries and the convenience and happiness of their people. The economic and industrial advantages to the people of the United States that will result from the development of hydroelectric energy produced by utilization of water power is difficult to overestimate. There are many things which can be accomplished by it that it is not practicable to accomplish by steam power produced in the consumption of fuel. The value of cheap power for manufacturing, lighting, and transportation purposes is, of course, recognized by everyone. Perhaps the greatest necessity and use for it at this time is in the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen for the manufacture of fertilizers and explosives, interests that are of too common information to need elaboration.

The prime reasons which have prevented the development of water-power energy in the United States is found in the restrictive policy of the present statutes concerning the matter, which experience has shown to be practically prohibitory of it.

The Congress, by an act passed September 19, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 454, secs. 7, 10), prohibited the construction of any wharf, dam, or other structure in any navigable water of the United States, in such manner as would obstruct or impair navigation, without the permission of the Secretary of War, and by an act passed March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. L., 1151, secs. 9, 10), prohibited the construction of any bridge, dam, dike, or other structure in or over any navigable water of the United States until the consent of Congress to the building of the same should be first obtained and the plans submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, with the provision that where the proposed improvement was on any river the navigable portions of which lie wholly within the limits of a single State the consent of the general assembly of that State was sufficent.

Previous to the enactment of these statutes the riparian proprietors of navigable rivers could construct dams in them when they desired, provided they did not obstruct navigation, but subject to removal whenever they were deemed an obstruction by the authorities of the Federal Government. But under these statutes no structure can be built over or in any navigable water without first obtaining the consent of Congress by special act for that purpose.

This prohibition is not removed by the statutes known as the general dam bills, approved June 21, 1906, and June 23, 1910. These acts, while providing the terms and conditions upon which riparian proprietors may construct dams in navigable waters with the approval and under the supervision of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, do not change the law requiring that the consent of Congress be first obtained in every case. The delay and difficulties of procuring special acts for this purpose have caused great embarrassment to those who propose to furnish the capital to make such improvements, and has been and is a great obstruction to the improvement of waterways for navigation and the development of water power. The present bill authorizes the Secretary of War to consent to the construction of dams, properly safeguarding the public interest, and under it they can be built without the delay incident to a resort to Congress.

The act of June 23, 1910, which repeals by implication that of June 21, 1906, provides for and authorizes conditions upon which the permit may be granted that render the terms of the investment so uncertain and the continuance of the permit or tenure of title so defeasible that those having capital can not safely and will not make investments under them.

The Secretary of War is authorized by this act to increase the aggregate of the investment at any time by requiring additional locks and appurtenances to be constructed to such an extent that it may exceed any possible earnings that can be realized from the water power developed and arbitrarily declare the permit forfeited, from which action there is no appeal. The permit can not exceed 50 years, at the expiration of which time it is automatically annulled. Charges and forfeitures of the most arbitrary character are provided for.

There are no provisions for the protection of the property interests of the investor when the permit may for any cause be terminated, and there is an utter absence of any provision for preferences in favor of public-utility companies and for the protection of the public from excessive and unjust charges and rates by the grantee for hydroelectrical energy and other products of the water power developed. In other words, the conditions of the act offer no protection to investors or consumers and are objectionable and unjust to both.

These objections are attempted to be obviated by the present bill. The total investment which the grantee will be required to make can be ascertained and fixed when the permit is granted. The permit is for 50 years and thereafter the grantee remains in possession at the will and pleasure of the Secretary of War, who may extend it for another term, or the property be taken over by the United States and transferred to another grantee. Forfeiture of the permit for failure of the grantee to comply with the conditions provided in the bill and the lawful regulations of the Secretary of War are provided for. The charges and rentals imposed are to be expended in the improvement of the navigation of the stream in which the dams are constructed, and all controversies concerning the respective rights and interests of the grantee and the United States are made subject to judicial investigation and determination.

Preference is given in awarding permits to municipalities or other political subdivisions of States and public-utility companies where the power developed is to be used for municipal or public-utility purposes. The persons making the improvement and developing hydroelectricity or other products of water power and the rates charged by them for such products are made subject to the laws of the State and regulation by their duly constituted authorities having jurisdiction over such matters, except where such products enter into interstate commerce, in which case the Interstate Commerce Commission is given jurisdiction; and such charges are in all cases required to be reasonable, adequate, and nondiscriminatory.

The plant and other improvements of the grantee, other than those portions necessary for the development of navigation, are made subject to taxation by the States as other similar property within the States, and the power of the States to require the payment of royalties on the power developed is fully recognized and provided for.

There are also ample provisions to prevent the rights granted and the plants constructed from constituting a part of any trust, monopoly, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, and the right to alter or amend the act as the public welfare may require is expressly reserved.

The bill also provides for the lease of water power in excess of that needed for operation and navigation facilities, incidentally produced by dams heretofore or which may be hereafter constructed by the United States in the improvement of navigable rivers with preference as to grantees, control, and regulation of rates and charges of the grantee, and other regulations and limitations provided for in case of permits to construct dams with private capital.

The bill is so framed as to protect and maintain the constitutional power and control of the Federal Government over navigable streams, as well as the sovereignty of the States and the rights of riparian proprietors over and in the beds and waters of those streams, and allow the full exercise and enjoyment of the latter, subject to the paramount authority of Congress to regulate the same for navigation purposes.

It is believed that under the provisions of this bill the water-power resources of the country will be developed and utilized and future waste prevented, which is conservation in its highest and truest sense.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator a question. When this bill was up for consideration before I remember a good deal of discussion concerning it and it met my approval, because I voted in favor of it. I should like to have the Senator designate exactly what difference there is between the bill which he proposes now and the bill which we passed in the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, it was my intention to do that at this time, so that Senators may understand it fully without comparing this and the former bill. I will state in advance that these changes for the most part are of phraseology, with the intention of making the provisions of the bill clearer and more easily understood.

The first difference between this bill and the one passed at the last Congress by the Senate occurs in section 1. The first sentence of that section in the former bill was in these words:

That the United States hereby authorizes any of the persons as hereinafter defined, after obtaining the permit of the Secretary of War, as hereinafter provided, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam or dams or diversion structures and accessory works for the development and improvement of navigation and for water power or other purposes across, in, or along any of the navigable waters of the United States.

For that sentence there is substituted in the present bill the following:

SECTION 1. That the United States hereby authorizes any of the persons as hereinafter defined, after obtaining the permit of the Secretary of War as herein provided, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam or dams, diversion structures, reservoirs, and accessory works, in or along any of the navigable waters of the United States for the development, improvement, or preservation of navigation for the purposes of interstate and foreign commerce, and the development and utilization of water, water power natural or created by the improvement, and for other purposes.

I think, Mr. President, that is clearer and expresses the purposes for which the permit may be granted in more direct and satisfactory words than the provision in the former bill, although there is no material change in the effect of it.

The next difference occurs in subsection 2 of section 1 where, after the word "navigation" first appearing in that section, are inserted the words "in foreign and interstate commerce"; after the word "development," in the same line, the words "and utilization"; and in the last line of that subsection, after the word "navigation," are inserted the words "and other beneficial purposes."

Section 4 of the former bill was in these words:

That any such permit shall not have the effect to relieve the grantee from liability for any damage occasioned to the property of others by the construction, maintenance, or operation of any dam or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, and the United States shall in no event be liable therefor. When a grantee hereunder is a municipal corporation, or a political subdivision of a State, or a public-service agent of a State, or a public utility or service corporation, it may acquire the right to use or damage any lands or property of others necessary to the construction, maintenance, or operation of any such dam or diversion structure or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto by the exercise of the right of eminent domain in the district court of the United States for the district in which such land or other property may be located, or in the State courts. The practice and procedure in any action or proceeding brought for that purpose in the district court of the United States shall conform as nearly as may be with the practice and procedure in similar actions or proceedings in the courts of the State where the property is situated.

Substituted for that section as section 4 is the following:

That the grantee of the permit shall be liable for all damages occasioned to the property of others by the construction, maintenance, or operation of the dam, reservoir, or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, constructed under the permit, and in no event shall the United States be liable therefor. When the grantee is a municipal corporation, or a political subdivision of a State, or a public-service agent of a State, or a public utility or service corporation, and can not acquire by contract or purchase the right to use or damage the lands or property of others necessary to the construction, maintenance, or operation of any dam, reservoir, diversion structure, or the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, it may acquire the same by the exercise of the right of eminent domain in the district court for the United States in which such land or property may be located or in the State courts. The practice and procedure in any action or proceeding for that purpose in the district court of the United States shall conform as nearly as may be with the practice and procedure in similar actions or proceedings in the courts of the State where the property is situated.

This, I think, is clearer than the same provision in the former bill.

The next difference between this bill and the former is in section 5. In the old bill section 5 read:

That unless revoked for cause as provided in section 8 of this act the rights under any such permit shall continue for a period of 50 years from the date of the permit, and after the expiration of said 50 years such rights shall continue until revoked for cause as provided in section 8 of this act or until terminated and compensation has been made to such grantee for its property as provided in section 6 of this act.

The section substituted for that section is as follows:

The permit granted under the provisions of this act shall be for the term of 50 years from the date of the permit, subject to be revoked for cause as provided in section 8 of this act: Provided, That after the expiration of said term of 50 years the grantee may continue the maintenance, occupation, and operation of the dam or dams, reservoir, and accessory works and appurtenant property under the terms and restrictions of the permit and this act, unless revoked for cause as provided in section 8 of this act, until the property is acquired, taken over, and compensation made to such grantee therefor by the United States or a new grantee, or a new permit is granted to it, as provided in section 6 of this act.

This, I believe, makes it clearer that the permit determines absolutely upon the expiration of 50 years, and the permittee remains in possession merely at the will or option of the United States for the care and protection of the property from deterioration and the benefit of the consumers of the power generated.

Section 6 of the former bill, which is also section 6 of this bill, is amended so as to strike out the words "the fair value of" in providing what shall be paid for the property when taken over at the expiration of 50 years and inserting in lieu thereof "just compensation for," which is the language of the Constitution providing for compensation to be paid for property condemned for public use, the meaning of which can not be a subject of controversy.

A further provision of section 6 in the former bill was in these words:

In the determination of the value of said property for any purpose as between such grantee and the United States or any State no value shall be claimed by or allowed to the grantee for the rights hereunder granted.

After the word "granted" in the present bill is added the words "or for good will or anticipated profits." The remainder of section 6 in the former bill after the words just stated is in these words:

When the permit expires by limitation, or is terminated under the provisions of this act, the United States may take over, acquire, occupy, and use all the property of the grantee herein described and upon the terms herein provided for such purposes as may be authorized by then existing laws; or the Secretary of War may grant a permit to any other person or persons, defined in sections 1 and 10 of this act, upon the same terms and with the same restrictions and preferences provided in this act, and as may be authorized or required by the existing laws, who shall take over the property of the original permittee upon the payment of its fair value in all things as the United States is authorized and required to do; or the Secretary of War may renew the permit to the original permittee upon the same terms and with the same restrictions and preferences and as may be authorized and required by then existing laws.

In lieu of that provision this bill contains the following:

When the permit expires by the limitation of 50 years or is otherwise terminated under the provisions of this act the United States may acquire, take over, and occupy all the property of grantee herein described upon the terms herein provided, to be used, operated, or disposed of as may be authorized by the acts of Congress then in force; or the Secretary of War may grant a new permit to the original permittee or its successors upon the terms and conditions and with the restrictions provided in this act and authorized and required by subsequent acts of Congress; or the Secretary of War may grant a permit to another person or persons defined in sections 1 and 10 of this act upon the conditions and terms and subject to the restrictions and preferences herein provided and as may be required or authorized by then existing laws of the United States, who may acquire and take over and operate the property of the original permittee or its successors upon the payment of the reasonable value of the property and the assumption of contracts in all things as the United States is authorized and required to do. The district court of the United States wherein the property is situated is hereby vested with jurisdiction to enforce the provisions of this section by appropriate proceedings in equity.

I think this is clearer than the same provision in the former bill.

The next difference in the two bills occurs in section 7. The proviso contained in that section in the former bill is in these words:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any State in which such dam with its appurtenant property is located, or in which such business is to be conducted, from making and enforcing any lawful regulations with respect to the property or business of such grantee.

That is stricken out and a provision in these words appears in the present bill:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the sovereign powers of the several States of the United States over the navigable waters within their respective boundaries and the property rights they hold therein in trust for their people, or their right to control those streams, including that to grant permits for the use of the waters and water power thereof, and to require the payment to the States of such charges and royalties for such use as may be authorized by the constitutions and laws of the respective States, subject, however, in all cases, to the paramount power of Congress to regulate foreign and interstate commerce and navigation upon all the navigable waters of the United States.

This clearly defines the respective jurisdictions of the Federal and State authorities over navigable rivers, as held and declared by the Supreme Court of the United States in numerous cases.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator a question which he has not referred to in regard to the differences between the two bills. Are there any differences between the present bill and the bill that was passed in the Sixty-fourth Congress relative to the power of the State to tax the improvements or to tax the property of the corporation that may put up these plants, or does it remain the same as in that bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. This bill contains the same provisions as the former in regard to State taxation. They are to be found in section 7 of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no question, then, but what the State has the power to tax the improvements and the property of the corporations that may take advantage of this act in constructing dams and water-power plants?

Mr. SHIELDS. None whatever. Mr. President, I have stated that the general objects of this legislation and the differences between the bill as passed in the last Congress and the one now under consideration. I am not going into any general discussion of the merits of the several provisions, for, as I have heretofore stated, they were all debated at very great length at the former session when the first bill was favorably acted upon by this body.

There are, however, one or two matters to which I shall call attention. This bill authorizes persons and companies owning or acquiring riparian rights upon navigable rivers, complying with the laws of the State concerning such matters, to construct dams in them, first having obtained a permit to do so from the Secretary of War upon the terms prescribed in the bill and those which it authorizes that officer to impose. This is necessary for a workable bill. The conditions and terms upon which the persons and companies may be authorized to construct dams or other obstructions in navigable streams are proper subjects of legislation and should be prescribed by the Congress, but the mere location of a dam in accordance with such legislation is a matter of administrative detail which the War Department, having charge of the improvement of navigable rivers, can best investigate and determine, so as to fully protect the interest of navigation.

The construction of dams is a local matter. For more than a century Congress left the control of it entirely to the States wherein the rivers were situated, and no other permit was required than that of the general assembly of the State, the structure subject always to be removed if deemed by the Federal authorities an obstruction to navigation. This contingency was sufficient to prevent interference with navigation by structures, and there was no friction between the Federal Government and the States or those to whom they granted permits concerning dams in navigable streams.

Congress, by an act passed in 1899, to which I have referred, forbade all structures without a special act giving its consent. Why this change was made and the great burden of administrative detail assumed by the Congress does not appear. It does not appear that there was any special demand for the legislation or that the question was debated or that it received deliberate consideration when the law was passed. A general dam law which requires the action of Congress in each separate project is one in name only. It is not within the power of this or any future Congress to control the legislative policy of their successors. Congresses are constantly changing membership, and new Members will always have different views concerning the improvement of navigation and water-power development, which would be written in each separate act consenting to a particular project, and this would absolutely destroy uniformity in legislation of this kind and assure discrimination and inequality in the terms of different permits.

The delays which occur in procuring the consent of Congress by special acts and the uncertainty as to what the provisions of the acts were have in the past discouraged capital and caused it to seek other investments free from such embarrassments, and it will continue to do so. Congress has conferred upon the War Department jurisdiction over all navigable rivers, and intrusted to its officers the improvement of them, with appropriations from the Public Treasury, with full discretion in the location and the construction of dams, locks, and other facilities for navigation, and there is no valid reason why these same officers should not be intrusted with this discretion when private capital is used in making the improvements.

Congress before enacting special acts for this purpose has generally referred them to the War Department for report, so far as the project affected navigation, and given great weight to such reports. This provision does not carry with it any appropriation from the Federal Treasury or concession of public property, but is a delegation of a part of the police power of Congress to regulate commerce by the improvement of navigable rivers.

I think it is now generally conceded that this plan is preferable to special acts authorizing the construction of dams. Authority to grant permits for water-power development upon the public domain has been given the Secretary of the Interior and found to operate satisfactorily. The police power has also been conferred upon other departments of the Government over matters within their respective jurisdictions with satisfactory results.

The statement has been made and given wide circulation that there is an effort by some unknown interest, vaguely spoken of as a water-power trust, without the slightest evidence of the existence of such a thing, to appropriate the great natural resources of our navigable streams. There is undoubtedly an effort to appropriate these resources, but not by private interests. It is to be found in the proposed unconstitutional and confiscatory legislation which this bill proposes to repeal. The proposition is to take from the States and their people the natural resources found within their borders and turn them over to the United States, to be distributed among the people of all the States.

This bill fully recognizes the sovereignty of the States over navigable streams within their borders and the property rights in their waters and the interest and welfare of their citizens, and ample provisions are made to protect them all. Companies proposing to construct dams for the development of water power or other purposes are required to first obtain authority to do so from the States where the dams are to be built and the plants located and operated. The property and the business of the companies are made subject to State taxation, and the rates to be charged for the water power and hydroelectricity furnished, generated, and sold are to be regulated and fixed by the laws of the States through their public-utility commissions, and such other agencies as the States may in their discretion provide for that purpose, and special provision is made against the monopolization of waters and water power.

Mr. President, the navigable rivers of the United States are perhaps the greatest natural resources of our country. We have about 50,000 miles of these rivers which are navigable for commercial purposes, and about one-half of them have obstructions, such as falls, rapids, and shoals, which must be removed or submerged.

The maximum water-power horsepower in the United States is estimated to be 61,780,000, exclusive of available storage, only about one-tenth of which is developed and utilized. That in the navigable rivers alone is estimated to be about 27,000,000 horsepower, of which a comparatively small portion is developed. Our present arbitrary and oppressive laws controlling these rivers have absolutely prohibited and strangled water-power development in them, the total development since they were enacted being less than 140,000 horsepower. There never was a time in the history of this country when the necessity for improving the navigation in these streams and utilizing this natural energy, now going to waste, was greater than at the present. Our magnificent railroad systems—and we have the greatest in the world—have utterly failed to answer the demands of the commerce of the country, and transportation has been congested for months. The further construction of railroads to any important extent seems improbable, as the mileage in the last two years has been less than that of any one year for half a century. The opening of our rivers for navigation has become an imperative necessity, but the Government is embarrassed in accomplishing it because of the great expense required.

We must have cheap power in large quantities for manufacturing fertilizers, steel, chemicals, aluminum, and many other things necessary to the cultivation of our lands and to enable us to compete with other countries in the production of those articles. The cost of foodstuffs of all kinds has reached a mark that is oppressive to a large part of the people of the country, resulting from diminished supply and increased population. Our lands have deteriorated in fertility and must be fertilized to make them produce larger crops. We must have cheaper nitrogen and phosphorus for the manufacture of fertilizers, which are only obtainable by the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen and electrical treatment of phosphate rock. We can not obtain the hydroelectricity for these purposes without the development of our water powers.

The capital to open these rivers for transportation and develop and utilize this energy can be obtained by repealing the present prohibitory statutes and enacting proper laws which will safeguard and protect the property of the investors, at the same time affording ample protection to the rights of the people in these great natural resources. It is unjust to the American people to longer delay legislation of this kind; indeed, it seems to me little less than a crime that we should arbitrarily prohibit the development of our rivers for these beneficent purposes, which would contribute so much to the happiness and prosperity of our people. The time for personal exploitation, publicity, and false conservation has passed, and practical methods and policies ought to be adopted and followed by legislation of the character now proposed without further discussion at this time. I submit the bill to the Senate with confidence that it will be speedily and favorably disposed of. There should be no delay about so important a matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether the amendments to which he has referred have been printed with the bill which is now before the Senate?

Mr. SHIELDS. These are not really amendments; they are provisions contained in the present bill that were not in the former bill or, rather, provisions of the former bill rewritten in other language.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood that, Mr. President; but it occurred to me that if the Senator would have the bill reprinted with these suggested changes printed in italics, so that the Senate might without difficulty understand what the proposed changes are, it would facilitate its consideration. I merely make that suggestion.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have no objection to the bill being printed in that way; but my object in reading those changes in the bill a while ago was that Senators might find the matter in the RECORD, and thus be advised of what was the difference between the two measures.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But, Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator that it would be much more convenient for Senators if he would have the amendments printed in the bill, so that Senators could have the matter before them. Could the Senator not have that done?

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will ask that a reprint of the bill, with the proposed changes in italics, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, be made.

Mr. STONE. That the bill be reprinted?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I ask my friend, who is in charge of the bill, when he thinks he will bring this bill to a vote?

Mr. SHIELDS. I should prefer to go on with the bill this afternoon and to keep it before the Senate until it is passed; I am perfectly ready to do so; but I understand from numerous Senators that there is a desire of some of them to be heard upon the bill, and that they are not ready to speak this evening. I have been requested to let the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, that is an old story in the Senate. Some Senator who is opposed to a bill, or two or three or more Senators who are opposed to a bill, want it to go over; they are not ready to speak. We had an example of that yesterday on a bill which had been continued here from day to day until the Senator in management of the bill refused to give in an inch and demanded action upon the bill. When the bill was pressed we got a vote upon it. If we are going along in this way, just because some Senator or Senators say they are not ready to speak, that they want time, no man can tell, Mr. President, when we shall ever get a vote on this most important measure, the passage of which I favor most heartily.

I wish, however, my friend from Tennessee not to forget that this bill, important as it is in his estimation, and which I am supporting, is not the only bill on the calendar. There are other important measures on the calendar that ought to be taken up and disposed of. I am opposed to the mere waste of time on a particular bill, which ought to be disposed of speedily, and delaying, probably absolutely preventing, a consideration of other measures on the calendar in which Senators are deeply concerned, and in which I believe the Senate itself will be deeply concerned when they are presented to the Senate and Senators become familiar with them.

Here it is quarter to 3 o'clock. Are we going to put the bill aside for the convenience of whom? Of the Senate, or of some Senator? Is this a new bill? Why, the Senator from Tennessee knows that it has been before this body for months and months, and to tell me that a Senator who has been here through these months is not prepared to discuss it to-day, but may be prepared to-morrow or the day after, is rather an incredulous statement for that Senator to make to me. He must simply desire delay for some purpose.

I am going to follow my friend; I am not going to antagonize him; I know his interest in this measure, and I am with him; but I do not want this bill to take the remainder of this session up to Christmas, for after the holidays we will have a lot of war measures in here piling one upon another, and important measures on the calendar will go to the scrap heap. I do not want some of them to go to the scrap heap in that way.

Mr. President, I have said this because of my intense desire to have measures of great importance now on the calendar, like this one, forced to some sort of issue and conclusion, so that we can take up something else on the calendar. I have heard Senators say here to me—I give no names—that we ought not to take up anything during this session of Congress except war measures. I do not believe that for one moment. War measures must have precedence; to that I agree; but there are questions of great domestic emergency and importance that we might attend to. We must not forget that we have things at home to look after while we are looking after war matters, although that war matters shall have precedence I agree.

There are several measures on the calendar now of great importance to the whole country that have not anything particularly to do with the war and that ought to be considered now or they will never be considered at all. Senators who are opposed to them, I can understand, try to take up this, that, and the other measure and postpone them in this way and in the other way, so that they will never be reached. Now, I think the measure of which my friend the Senator from Tennessee is in charge, now before the Senate, is in an essential way, for the reasons he has stated, not only to-day but previously, a measure of great war importance. I believe that, but I am not putting it on that ground. Even if it were not, it is a question of great national import, and it ought to be disposed of. I do not like for a moment the policy which seems to be pursued here of the Senator in charge of a bill—I am not criticizing my friend from Tennessee, but it is a common practice—arranging after an hour or two of consideration to put over a bill until to-morrow and then to put it over until the next day by some arrangement. I do not like that. I think we ought to go on with the business we have before us and dispose of it as we come to it, just as we did yesterday with the foreign export trade bill, and finished it, when it might have been here to-day and might have been here to-morrow and the next day. We must end these things; and I am in favor of that policy as against the policy of delay in the consideration of measures of importance now on the calendar of the Senate.

I beg the Senator's pardon, but I just wanted to say this to such Senators as are here.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I am heartily in accord with all the Senator from Missouri has said about pressing business. I agree with him that practically nothing has been done here for several days; for only an hour or two, as a usual thing, has the Senate remained in session. While the bill disposed of yesterday afternoon was under consideration I was here all the time, every day, hoping that that bill would be disposed of, and opposing adjournments in order that I might call up this important measure. So the delay in connection with that measure was not with my consent.

This morning Senators on both sides of the Chamber came to me and insisted that they were not ready; they wanted this bill to go over until to-morrow, or until Monday some of them said. I am very anxious to dispose of it; I should like to go on with it this afternoon. I see no reason why there should be a long debate on the bill. It was discussed for more than a month during the last Congress; every possible objection was made to its provisions; all questions were thoroughly thrashed out; and the Senate by more than 2 to 1 passed the bill—practically the same bill now before the Senate. I would be delighted to go on with it this afternoon and finish it, but after the understanding which was reached by Senators generally that it would not be pressed this evening I feel that it would be discourteous to them to press it.

Mr. STONE. May I ask my friend from Tennessee what the understanding is?

Mr. SHIELDS. That it would not come to a vote this afternoon, and really that it might go over until Monday; but since then I have understood that a session to-morrow is desired for certain purposes, and there will be such a session, as I understand.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. MARTIN. I expect the House to-morrow immediately on its assembling to pass a joint resolution extending the period of availability of the fund voted at the last session for war purposes and placed at the disposal of the President, amounting to $100,000,000, some thirty-odd million dollars of which has been disposed of. It will require additional legislation to make the remainder of that fund available after the latter part of this month. The House, I understand, expects to pass a joint resolution providing for the extension of the period of availability for so much of that fund as remains unexpended, and also providing mileage for Senators for the present session. I had expected, and still expect, to ask the Senate to sit to-morrow to consider that joint resolution if it comes over, as I confidently expect it will come. So there ought to be a session of the Senate to-morrow for that purpose.

Mr. STONE. I had hoped the distinguished leader of the Democratic side would insist upon a session to-morrow aside from the subject he mentioned.

Mr. MARTIN. If the Senator will excuse me, I was coming to that after disposing of this matter which comes more directly under my control. I say I think the Senate ought to sit to-morrow for the purpose of considering that joint resolution which we expect from the House. The first thing to-morrow I expect to ask for a meeting of the Committee on Appropriations to pass on that joint resolution before 12 o'clock by anticipation; and if the Senator from Tennessee is at liberty, in view of what has passed between him and other Senators, to press this bill to-morrow it will be very satisfactory to me. I think it ought to be pressed and it ought to be passed, and I hope it can be passed to-morrow. I know of no reason why it should be delayed, but there may be reasons unknown to me. The Senator from Tennessee may have had conversations with other Senators which would make it inconsistent with fair dealing for him to press the consideration of the bill to a vote to-morrow. I will have to leave that to him. If, however, he is in a position to give notice now on the floor of the Senate here at this moment that he will press it to-morrow, I will be much gratified; and if he is not in a position to do that, he will have to determine it. All I can say is that I expect to ask the Senate to adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow in order to consider the joint resolution to which I have referred, and I will be much gratified if the Senator from Tennessee can give notice that he will to-morrow press the bill of which he is in charge.

Mr. SHIELDS. Under the understanding reached by Senators, I can not further press this bill this afternoon; and I therefore ask that it be temporarily laid aside; but I will now state that I will ask that the Senate proceed with it to a final vote to-morrow when the Senate meets. I give that notice now to Senators who are absent, unless they have made such arrangements under the understanding to-day that it will be impossible for them to do so. I, of course, would violate no agreement, express or implied, with any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the doors be closed and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 14, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 13, 1917.

JUNIOR HYDROGRAPHIC AND GEODETIC ENGINEERS IN COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Stanley T. Baker, of Massachusetts, to be junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, vice Douglas Karr, promoted. (By promotion from aid.)

Raymond A. Wheeler, of Washington, to be junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, vice C. T. Bussell, promoted. (By promotion from aid.)

EXPLOSIVES INSPECTOR.

Lewis A. Griffith, of Upper Marlboro, Md., to be explosives inspector for the State of Maryland, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

Maj. Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, to be Chief of Ordnance with the rank of major general for a period of four years from November 22, 1917, with rank from October 6, 1917.

MEDICAL CORPS.

Capt. Bertram Foster Duckwall, Medical Reserve Corps, to be captain in the Medical Corps with rank from November 6, 1917.

First Lieut. John S. C. Fielden, jr., Medical Reserve Corps, to be first lieutenant in the Medical Corps with rank from August 25, 1917.

To be first lieutenants to fill original vacancies.

Maj. John Michael Hewitt, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 25, 1917.

Capt. Claude Wiggins Cummings, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 25, 1917.

First Lieut. James Monroe Troutt, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 26, 1917.

First Lieut. Alan De Forest Smith, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 27, 1917.

First Lieut. Frank Macbeth Ende, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 27, 1917.

First Lieut. Samuel Augustus White, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 28, 1917.

First Lieut. Albert Wright Greenwell, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 28, 1917.

First Lieut. Francis Moylan Fitts, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 29, 1917.

First Lieut. Eric Adolphus Fennel, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 29, 1917.

First Lieut. Paul Edgar McNabb, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 30, 1917.

First Lieut. Harvey Edmund Webb, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 30, 1917.

First Lieut. George Franklin Aycock, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 31, 1917.

First Lieut. Henry Wiley Grady, Medical Reserve Corps, from August 31, 1917.

First Lieut. Philip Jefferson Lukens, jr., Medical Reserve Corps, from September 1, 1917.

First Lieut. Norman McLean Scott, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 1, 1917.

First Lieut. Marion Rudolph Mobley, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 2, 1917.

First Lieut. Frederick Karl Herpel, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 2, 1917.

First Lieut. Horace Sumner Villars, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 3, 1917.

First Lieut. Donald Gardner Russell, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 3, 1917.

First Lieut. Allen Deming Lazenby, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 4, 1917.

First Lieut. Patrick Francis McGuire, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 4, 1917.

First Lieut. James Walsh McClaran, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 5, 1917.

First Lieut. Louis Frank Boyd, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 5, 1917.

First Lieut. Tom Sperring Mebane, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 6, 1917.

First Lieut. Edmund Benjamin Spaeth, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 6, 1917.

First Lieut. Philip Louis Coulter, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 7, 1917.

First Lieut. James Blaine Montgomery, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 7, 1917.

First Lieut. Percy Elisha Duggins, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 8, 1917.

First Lieut. Brown Shirk McClintic, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 8, 1917.

First Lieut. Henry Kurtz Baumgardner Hufford, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 9, 1917.

First Lieut. Joseph George Fernbach, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 9, 1917.

First Lieut. Howard Henry Dignan, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 10, 1917.

First Lieut. Charles Wallace Sale, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 10, 1917.

First Lieut. Robert Henry Lowry, jr., Medical Reserve Corps, from September 11, 1917.

First Lieut. Hertel Philip Makel, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 11, 1917.

First Lieut. Ward Stanley Wells, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 12, 1917.

First Lieut. Seymour Crandall Schwartz, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 12, 1917.

First Lieut. Burgh Smith Burnet, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 13, 1917.

First Lieut. Karl Frederick Kesmodel, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 13, 1917.

First Lieut. Ross Golden, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 14, 1917.

Capt. Curtis Dudley Pillsbury, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 14, 1917.

First Lieut. Nelson Allen Myll, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 15, 1917.

First Lieut. John Robin DeVelling, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 15, 1917.
First Lieut. Roy Lorraine Scott, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 16, 1917.
First Lieut. William White Southard, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 16, 1917.
First Lieut. George Hamilton Dorsey, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 17, 1917.
First Lieut. Laurent Lescelles LaRoche, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 17, 1917.
First Lieut. Henry Cheesman Dooling, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 18, 1917.
First Lieut. Frank Smeeton Matlack, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 18, 1917.
First Lieut. Cleon Joseph Gentzkow, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 19, 1917.
First Lieut. James Porter Crawford, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 19, 1917.
First Lieut. Robert Alexander Hale, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 20, 1917.
First Lieut. Allen Richmond Howard, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 20, 1917.
First Lieut. Benjamin Beresford Rowley, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 21, 1917.
Capt. Henry Colmore Bradford, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 21, 1917.
Capt. Harry Hunt Towler, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 22, 1917.
First Lieut. Oral Bevoly Bolibaugh, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 22, 1917.
First Lieut. Joseph Roy Jones, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 23, 1917.
First Lieut. Harold Edward Clark, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 23, 1917.
First Lieut. Roland Albert Davison, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 24, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Reif Snyder, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 24, 1917.
First Lieut. Arthur Lee Hichew, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 25, 1917.
First Lieut. Haskett Lynch Conner, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 25, 1917.
First Lieut. Edward Bailey Macon, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 26, 1917.
First Lieut. Farrar Burr Parker, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 26, 1917.
Capt. Percy James Carroll, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 27, 1917.
First Lieut. Virginius Minervini, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 27, 1917.
First Lieut. James Vincent Falisi, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 28, 1917.
First Lieut. William Daugherty Petit, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 28, 1917.
First Lieut. Glenn Holway Reams, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 29, 1917.
First Lieut. Jay De Pew Mingos, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 29, 1917.
First Lieut. Allan Wilson Dawson, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 30, 1917.
First Lieut. John Williams McKeever, Medical Reserve Corps, from September 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Ottis Lee Graham, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 1, 1917.
First Lieut. Edwin Howerton Roberts, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 1, 1917.
First Lieut. Arthur Maynard Bacon, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 2, 1917.
First Lieut. John Jay Moore, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 2, 1917.
First Lieut. Anthony Joseph Vadala, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 3, 1917.
First Lieut. Maurice Stevenson Weaver, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 3, 1917.
First Lieut. John Marion Stanley, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 4, 1917.
First Lieut. Arthur Howard Nylen, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 4, 1917.
First Lieut. Myron Parkhill Rudolph, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 5, 1917.
First Lieut. Noble DuBois McCormack, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 5, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Edward Sima, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 6, 1917.
First Lieut. Bascom Headen Palmer, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 6, 1917.
First Lieut. Harold Dana Rogers, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 7, 1917.
First Lieut. John Randolph Hall, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 7, 1917.
First Lieut. Arthur Raymond Gaines, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 8, 1917.
First Lieut. William Love Starnes, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 8, 1917.
First Lieut. William Archdall Boyle, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 9, 1917.
First Lieut. Manton Leonard Shelby, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 9, 1917.
First Lieut. Egbert Hayes Wesson, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 10, 1917.
First Lieut. Paul Henry Streit, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 10, 1917.
First Lieut. John Edwin Robinson, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 11, 1917.
First Lieut. Lewis Edwin Joel Browne, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 11, 1917.
First Lieut. Ernest Kenneth Stratton, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 12, 1917.
First Lieut. James Archibald Orbison, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 12, 1917.
First Lieut. Paul Maxwell Neuman Kyle, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 13, 1917.
Capt. William Cotman Whitmore, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 13, 1917.
First Lieut. Albert Berchmans Pavy, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 14, 1917.
First Lieut. Francis Edgerton Evans, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 14, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Earle Brenn, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 15, 1917.
First Lieut. Francis Thomas Duffy, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 15, 1917.
First Lieut. Leonard Webster Weaver, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 16, 1917.
First Lieut. Louie Felger, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 16, 1917.
First Lieut. Leo Stewart Trask, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 17, 1917.
First Lieut. Raymond Albert Tomassene, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 17, 1917.
First Lieut. Lowyd Whitcombe Ballantyne, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 18, 1917.
First Lieut. Otto Richard Brown, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 18, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Elmer Yoho, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 19, 1917.
First Lieut. Cornelius Anthony Denehy, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 19, 1917.
First Lieut. Joseph Patrick Madigan, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 20, 1917.
First Lieut. Robert Keith Simpson, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 20, 1917.
First Lieut. Patrick Sarsfield Madigan, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 21, 1917.
First Lieut. Frederick Bryton Little, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 21, 1917.
First Lieut. Chester A. Stayton, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 22, 1917.
First Lieut. Herbert Wilson Rogers, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 22, 1917.
First Lieut. John Robert Evers, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 23, 1917.
First Lieut. Ralph Elmer Curti, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 23, 1917.
First Lieut. Daniel Clyde Hankey, Medical Reserve Corps from October 24, 1917.
First Lieut. Frederick Arthur Blesse, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 24, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Crawford Dickey, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 25, 1917.
First Lieut. George Beard Fletcher, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 25, 1917.
First Lieut. Walter Henry Mytinger, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 26, 1917.
First Lieut. John Joseph Carden, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 26, 1917.
First Lieut. Henry Earl Fraser, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 27, 1917.

First Lieut. John Ross Whisenant, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 27, 1917.
First Lieut. Harold Horton Golding, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 28, 1917.
First Lieut. Harry Philip Shugerman, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 28, 1917.
First Lieut. William Cramer Pollock, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 29, 1917.
First Lieut. William Walker McCaw, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 29, 1917.
First Lieut. Edward Howard Tonolla, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Earle Douglass Quinnell, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Harold Ogden Brown, Medical Reserve Corps, from October 31, 1917.
First Lieut. Douglas Hamilton Mebane, Medical Corps, from October 31, 1917.
First Lieut. Paul Barrus Johnson, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 1, 1917.
First Lieut. Irving Kennedy Lovett, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 1, 1917.
First Lieut. Montreville Alfred St. Peter, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 2, 1917.
First Lieut. Frank McAlpin Moose, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 2, 1917.
First Lieut. Percy Kenward Telford, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 3, 1917.
First Lieut. William Boyd Brigman, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 3, 1917.
First Lieut. Benjamin Franklin Pence, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 4, 1917.
First Lieut. Wayne Roscoe Beardsley, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 4, 1917.
First Lieut. Warren Stirling, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 5, 1917.
First Lieut. Don Guernsey Hilldrup, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 5, 1917.
First Lieut. Richard Samuel Magee, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 6, 1917.
First Lieut. William Alexander Smith, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 6, 1917.
First Lieut. Frank William Pinger, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 7, 1917.
First Lieut. Ivy Albert Pelzman, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 7, 1917.
First Lieut. Edward Spencer Murphy, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Leo Pecci Bell, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Richard Eugene Werlich, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 9, 1917.
First Lieut. Paul Kurt Sauer, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 9, 1917.
First Lieut. Herbert Rowell Stolz, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 10, 1917.
First Lieut. Louis de Keyser Belden, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 10, 1917.
First Lieut. Andrew William Smith, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 11, 1917.
First Lieut. Willard Samuel Howard, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 11, 1917.
First Lieut. Philip Palmer Green, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 12, 1917.
First Lieut. William Hulbert Barrow, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 12, 1917.
Capt. Gordon Fay Willey, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 13, 1917.
First Lieut. Frank Arents Plum, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 13, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Robert Irving, Medical Corps, National Guard, from November 14, 1917.
First Lieut. William Wiley Jones, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 14, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Clifford Hawke, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 15, 1917.
First Lieut. Noland Mackenzie Canter, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 15, 1917.
First Lieut. Pierre Numa Charbonnet, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 16, 1917.
First Lieut. James Claude Kimbrough, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 16, 1917.
Capt. Meredith Rutherford Johnston, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 17, 1917.
First Lieut. Merril Kirk Lindsay, Medical Corps, National Guard, from November 17, 1917.
First Lieut. William Drummond Middleton, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 18, 1917.
First Lieut. Leon Hastings Cornwall, Medical Corps, National Guard, from November 18, 1917.
First Lieut. Read Benedict Harding, Medical Corps, National Guard, from November 19, 1917.
Capt. James Wesley Duckworth, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 19, 1917.
First Lieut. Bradford Massey, Medical Corps, National Guard, from November 20, 1917.
First Lieut. Edgar Henry Howell, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 20, 1917.
First Lieut. George William Snyder, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 21, 1917.
First Lieut. Paul Stanislaus Wagner, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 21, 1917.
First Lieut. John Alfred Parsons Millet, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 22, 1917.
First Lieut. Joseph Daniel Foley, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 22, 1917.
First Lieut. Lewis Alfred Newfield, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 23, 1917.
First Lieut. Thomas Maurice Leahy, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 23, 1917.
First Lieut. Louis Anatole La Garde, jr., Medical Reserve Corps, from November 24, 1917.
First Lieut. Edward Lane Moore, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 24, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Augustus Pfeffer, Medical Reserve Corps, from November 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Louis Martin Field, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
Capt. Clarence Edward Burt, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. John Andrews Rogers, Medical Corps, National Guard, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Gilbert Octavius Crank, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
Capt. Harmon Paul Buffum Jordan, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
Capt. William Patrick Joseph Ruddy, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
Capt. Harmon Hadley Ashley, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Walter Leland Richards, Medical Corps, National Guard, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Newton Washington Sentell, Medical Corps, National Guard, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Stanley Gibson Odom, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Rees Stephen Lloyd, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Richard Samuel Moynan, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. William Davies McLelland, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
Capt. James Roy Hudnall, Medical Reserve Corps, from December 8, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles Rice Lanahan, Medical Corps, National Guard, from December 8, 1917.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 24, 1917.

First Lieut. De Lancey Bentley, One hundred and eighth Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. William Paton Rauch, Infantry, National Guard.
Private John Aethuruld Garvin, Troop A, Twenty-ninth Division, Military Police, New Jersey National Guard.
First Lieut. Daniel Denison Streeter, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Randolph Russell, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Brock Putnam, Infantry, National Guard.
Corpl. Leland Long Miller, Troop B, First Squadron, Cavalry, Virginia National Guard.
Second Lieut. Edwin Miles Sumner, Infantry, National Guard.
Private William J. McChesney, jr., Troop B, First Cavalry, New York National Guard.
Private Joseph Sheehan, Headquarters Company, Twenty-fifth Cavalry, Regular Army.

Sergt. James Madison Currin, Troop B, First Cavalry, Virginia National Guard.
Second Lieut. Thomas Henry Green, Infantry, National Guard.
Corpl. William H. C. Grimes, Troop D, First Cavalry, New York National Guard.
First Class Private Russell Crayden Winchester, Troop D, First Cavalry, New York National Guard.
Sergt. James Stevenson Rodwell, Medical Department.
Sergt. Charles Francis Choate, 3d, Headquarters Company, One hundred and first Field Artillery, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Charles Diller Ryan, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Nathaniel Holmes, Infantry, National Guard.
First Class Private Kirk Broaddus, Troop B, First Cavalry, Virginia National Guard.
Sergt. Paul Blackmer, One hundred and first Field Artillery, National Guard.
Corpl. Herbert Aladdin Suman, Troop L, Seventh Cavalry.
Second Lieut. Harold de Beaumont Bruck, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Donald Anderson Young, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Hans Charles Minuth, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Edwin Clarence Gere, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. John Martin Sweeney, jr., Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. George Gill Ball, Infantry, National Guard.
Sergt. Samuel C. Skemp, Troop I, Seventh Cavalry.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 25, 1917.

Second Lieut. Jacob Monroe Carter, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Thomas Pierrepont Hazard, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Francis Charles Dossert, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Washington Ewing, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Crawford Clark Madeira, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Poultney Davis, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Robert Kilbourne, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Elmer Edward Finck, Cavalry, Troop I, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Hodges Semmes, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clifford Arthur Eastwood, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Guy Allegre Russell, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Fenton Stratton Jacobs, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Catesby ap Catesby Jones, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Wharton, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. W. Dirk Van Ingen, Sixth Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Herbert Vaughn Scanlan, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Sigurd von Christierson, Eighth Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Kenneth Osborne Spinning, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Curt Eric Hansen, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Vincent Paul Ryan, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Raymond Charles Blatt, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clinton de Witt, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Harold J. Adams, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Booth Van Auken, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Kitson, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Boies, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Raymund Gross, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Irvine L. McAlister, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Gale Breene, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Irving Gibbon, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter Carter Butler, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Don Briley, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Howard Forrest Long, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Benjamin Lufkin, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Burton Curtis Andrus, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold E. Lewis, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Newell Phipps Weed, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arthur Henry Besse, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles W. White, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Royer Lindsey, honor graduate, of Illinois.
Second Lieut. George L. Snelling, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Duane Lenton Tice, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Jason Budd Hart, Second Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Roland Harman Rogers, honor graduate, of Ohio.
Fred New Raymond, honor graduate, of New Hampshire.
Glenn William Keith, honor graduate, of Kansas.
Roscoe Cuffe Brabazon Ellard, honor graduate, of Missouri.
Robert Chandler Knowlton, honor graduate, of Vermont.
Richard Hervey Pinney, honor graduate, of Massachusetts.
Garland Cuzorte Black, honor graduate, of Missouri.
George Albert Delaney, honor graduate, of Missouri.
Joseph Andral Nichols, honor graduate, of South Carolina.
Albert George Hunt, honor graduate, of Vermont.
Egbert Frank Bullene, honor graduate, of California.
Arthur Wood Stanley, honor graduate, of Vermont.
Harold Edwin Brailey, honor graduate, of Vermont.
Carleton Burgess, honor graduate, of Maryland.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 26, 1917.

Frederick Hukill Vandegrift, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Harry Eugene Dodge, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Forrest Palmer, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Jay Dolph Donald Marcellus, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lewis Downey Cooper, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Jester Davis, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George William Outland, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Menifee Moose, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Nelson Revitt Perry, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Innes Randolph, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carl Beecher Byrd, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Brady, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Gilbert Xavier Cheves, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Wingate Battle, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Binkley Warfield, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Wade Carpenter Gatchell, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Henry George White, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Norman Dean Twitchell, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Andrew Jackson Wynne, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Howard Charles Wiener, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter Frank Goodman, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Thomas Mardenbro Benson, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Edward Forrest Porter, of North Dakota.
Second Lieut. Lucian King Truscott, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Erland Alstead, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Arthur Sewell Kelley, of Kentucky.
Second Lieut. James Hugh Akerman, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Raymond Thomas Connell, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Nicholas Winn McClure, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Gabriel Requa Mead, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Millard George Harnden, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. David McKay Wilson, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leonard Mortimer Mertz, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ernest Arthur Williams, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Daniel Herman McCarthy, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Slocum Kingsbury, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Harrison Millholland, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Gardiner Scudder Platt, of New Jersey.
Minor George Fitzer, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Roy Irwin Phares, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Donald Ross Dunkle, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Chester Earl Davis, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Holmes Gill Paullin, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Francis Royal Kenney, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Monroe Payne Smith, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Hamilton Irving, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Evan Dhu Cameron, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Francis McLaughlin, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Glenn Smith Finley, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Manly Foster Meador, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ernest Francis Sexton, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Stephen Webb Davis, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lynn Boyd Conde, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clarence Beryl Werts, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Henry Roberts Miller, jr., Cavalry, Officers Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Henderson Gay Reilly, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Herman Unger, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Donald Tabor, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Horace S. King, of California.
Second Lieut. Edward Maynard Fickett, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Couzens Van Ingen, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Callie Hammond Palmer, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Charles Rawlings Chase, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Thomas Francis Mishou, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Robert Bruce Jackson, of Texas.
Second Lieut. Christopher Columbus Strawn, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Allyn Raymond Brownson, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Russell Breitinger, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert David Beer, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alfred Joseph de Lorimier, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Malcolm Gray Lowry, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Osce Coleman, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Herbert Reading Sargent, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Elgin Ketchum, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Arwed Charles Baltzer, of Idaho.
Second Lieut. James Walter Ewing, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Wallace Van Cleave, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Karl Warren Curtis, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carl Emet Rankin, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Earl Tallant, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Nelson Monroe Utley, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Alexander MacDonald, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Henry Hale Cheshire, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Nathan Bartholomew Reynolds, of Texas.
John Andrew Wood, of New Jersey.
Venable Moore, of Virginia.
Guy Littleton Furr, of West Virginia.
Second Lieut. Joseph Augustus Blake, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter McLaren Robinson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Sylvester Peters, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Herbert Ludwell Earnest, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Verne Austin, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Willis Holcombe Ryder, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Alden Hamilton Torrey, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Morris Towar Whitmore, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Samuel Leask, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Guy Edward Dillard, of Tennessee.
Second Lieut. Ray Tyson Maddocks, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Alexander Frazier, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Victor Robert Sladek, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James William Husted, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Nelson Atwell, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Elliott, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Bayne Locke, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Morris Simpson Daniels, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Starr Pope, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Glenn Davis, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Morris Cherry, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Alfred Theodore Wyman, of Massachusetts.
Roger William Sawyer, of Oklahoma.
John Hanna Welsh, of Missouri.
Edward Perry Morton, of New Jersey.
Second Lieut. Edwin John Kratzenberg, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Dudley Coye, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Almet Francis Jenks, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Parsons Gifford, of New York.
Second Lieut. Vern Hinkley, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Claflin Allen, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. A. Herman Stump, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Orland Lawrence, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Williamson Glover, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Ralph Evans, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. John Knox Galley, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Warren Lambert Shumaker, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Read Simmons, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Van Valkenburg Shufelt, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Harold Davidson, of Pennsylvania.
Herbert Anson Welch, of Nebraska.
Second Lieut. Hobart Raymond Gay, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Rutherford Leon Hammond, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Paul Humiston Alling, of Connecticut.
Second Lieut. Ervin William Harrison, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Raymond Gordon Clark, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Elisha Carpenter Wattles, of Massachusetts.
Brooks Shumaker, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Parker Gillespie Tenney, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Pat Pattison, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Mordaunt Verne Turner, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Norman E. Waldron, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Herbert Johnson Burke, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leo Lawrence Gocker, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Carleton Swasey, of Connecticut.
John Hickman Ransdell, of Louisiana.
Second Lieut. Edwin Wilds Godbold, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Louis Gerisch Forney, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Hugh Brooks, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Gilbert White, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edwin William Meise, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Raymond Carmichael Gibbs, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leo Francis Crane, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Clark Boden, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alfred Grace Ford, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Rohland Andrew Isker, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Madison Graham, jr., Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Wallace Graham Corwin, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Reginald Maxwell, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Peter Ditmar Larson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Arthur Horger, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Oney Wright, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arthur Dickinson Soper, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Conrad Grey Wall, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Andrew Wilson, jr., of New Jersey.
Second Lieut. Roger Lee Branham, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Albert Davis, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Lloyd Arthur Houchin, of Minnesota.
Second Lieut. Charlie Edward Hart, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Richard Thomas Lyons, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Hugh Arthur Barnhart, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Wade Jenkins, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
George Henry Howard, jr., of California.
Second Lieut. Frank Wideman, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arthur Chittenden Crunden, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Parker, of Oklahoma.
James Thomson Donald, of Oregon.
Edward Gillett Knowles, of Colorado.
Guy Tilghman Orme Hollyday, of Maryland.
Francis Vincent Terry, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Tolman Douglas Wheeler, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Edward Dissinger, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Martin George Charles, of New York.
Second Lieut. Earl Maxwell Abbott, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Harvey Morris Breaks, of Indiana.
Second Lieut. Williamson Wells Simons, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Bage Kerr, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Samuel Vallance Hyatt Danzig, of New York.
Second Lieut. George Frederic Neilson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Dean Ambrose Jones, of Texas.
Second Lieut. Hugh Franklin Conrey, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Callistus James Ennis, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Venance LeMay, of Kansas.
Edward Longworth Morss, of Massachusetts.
Paul Carson Febiger, of California.
David Nelson Sutton, of Virginia.
Second Lieut. Alexander Dyer Mason, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Eskridge Duke, of Virginia.
James Jerome Roach, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Paul Juneau King, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Edmund Pendleton, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas McPheeters Glasgow, of Virginia.
Second Lieut. John McLean, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Fred Thomas Cunningham, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Benton Frank Munday, of Missouri.
Second Lieut. Gyles Merrill, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Copers Bowie, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Wilfred Ernest Willis, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Blaine Seaton, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Paul Sweeney, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Sutphen Miesse, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Montagu Adamson, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Everhardt Sheldrake, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Kenneth Melville Harris, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Max Harry Nippell, of Iowa.
Charles Morton Stewart, 3d, of Maryland.
Second Lieut. Philip Sheridan Weadock, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Stewart F. Miller, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Joe Carroll Rogers, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Albert Allen, jr., Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Matthew Griswold, 3d, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Guy Orth Kurtz, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Louis Joseph Compton, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Frederick Sanborn, of Minnesota.
Second Lieut. Clarence Augustus Lefferts, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Nables Fred Ryan, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
George W. Barber, of Kansas.
Francis Minot Weld, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Read Wipprecht, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Claire Morton Daugherty, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ceylon Otto Griffin, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Edward E. Hamilton, of Wisconsin.
Erle Fletcher Cress, of Oklahoma.
Dimetrio Peter Harkins, of California.
Harold Grant Hathaway, of Virginia.
Bruce Magaw McDill, of Ohio.
Loren Francis Parmley, of South Dakota.
Second Lieut. Edward Herendeen, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Floyd Manley Friar, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Anthony Anheier, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Grayson Hunter Bowers, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas W. Herron, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alfred Roy Teter, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Glenister Clarke, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alden Humphrey Seabury, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Joseph Sarsfield Sweeney, of Connecticut.
Fred William Koester, of Kansas.
Marvin Banks Perry, of Georgia.
Second Lieut. Clarence Arthur Shannon, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alexander Bull MacNabb, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Hicks Van Deusen, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Campbell McCall, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Neely Todd, jr., of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Walton Whittingham Cox, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Dudley Miller, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Kelly Egan, of Illinois.
Thomas Reed Taber, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Earl Wilton Henderson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ross Ernest Larsen, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles William Burton, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Duncan Bishop, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter Alfred Stover, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Samuel Greenwood Mitchell, of Massachusetts.
Calvert Lewis Estill, of West Virginia.
Nathan Cockrell, of Florida.
Second Lieut. Channing Clarence Beeth, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Cecil Junior North, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Milton Eichelsdoerfer, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Edmund Hope Driggs, jr., of New York.
Second Lieut. James Tolmie Watsen, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Roswell Emory Round, of Virginia.
William Donald Thompson, of Kansas.
Graham Train Winslow, of Massachusetts.
Edward Brooke Harry, of the District of Columbia.
Herbert Delmar Bowman, of New York.
Second Lieut. Albert Gordon Klapp, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Fred Paul Clark, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Perry Thurber, of Massachusetts.
Edward Abbott Titcomb, of Arizona.
Henry Chace Tatnall, of Pennsylvania.
Harry Leroy Jones, of Illinois.
John William Middendorf, jr., of Maryland.
Second Lieut. Calvin Ray MacGillivray, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Stanley Clarke, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Harold Paul Stewart, of Missouri.
Second Lieut. Harold La Roy King Albro, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ward H. Porter, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Elias Lyman, jr., of Vermont.
Charles Lemon Baker, of Kansas.
Darrow Menoher, of the District of Columbia.
Mark Andrew Devine, jr., of California.
John Linton Pettibone, of Ohio.
Second Lieut. Edwards Hall Berry, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Ernest Taft, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Max George Werner, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Gerald Fitzgerald, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Paul Schulze, jr., of Illinois.
Henry C. Banks, of Connecticut.
Chauncey Ryder McPherson, of New Jersey.
Daniel Crossley Robinson, of Minnesota.
Thomas Nast St. Hill, of New York.
Second Lieut. William H. Killian, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carl Julian Dockler, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alfred Porter Tenison, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Olin Coke Newell, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Laurence Mather Selleck, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lawrence W. Fox, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lawrence Tracy Brown, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Augustus McColn, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carroll Edward Patterson, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Maurice Robertson, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Ruckel McKay, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clark Wesley Johnson, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Winston Reese Withers, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Ashley Hearn Conard, of California.
Frank Earle Noyes, of Maine.
Second Lieut. Ferdinand Blekre, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Earl Flack, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Steele Tyler, of California.
Second Lieut. Aubrey Russell Bowles, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frederick A. Gray, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Charles Thomas, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Robert Lowry, jr., Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Talbot Taylor Speer, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Minor Lile, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Morton Denny, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Sidney Reed Smith, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Russell Frank Locke, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Underwood Fisher, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Harold Stephen Thurber, of Connecticut.
Second Lieut. Arthur Tillinghast Huston, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Kerlin Ennis, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Raymond Shener Jett, of Kentucky.
Warren Crenshaw Brown, jr., of Alabama.
Second Lieut. Clarke Oler Kimberly, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Paul Clarence Boylan, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Guy Russell Chamberlin, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lewis Berry Angel, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Jack Raymond Burke, of Pennsylvania.
William Hobart Little, of Pennsylvania.
Second Lieut. Harold Philip Heckenberger, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Emerson Wiley Jarman, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Roger Eugene Williams, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George James Waggner, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Claude Newbury, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Reid Baker, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Deane Childs Howard, jr., of Panama.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

Maj. John B. Huggins, Medical Corps, to be lieutenant colonel from September 23, 1917, vice Lieut. Col. Robert B. Grubbs, retired from active service September 22, 1917.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 13, 1917.

ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF THE TREASURY.

Russell C. Leffingwell to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.
Thomas B. Love to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Commander Charles L. Hussey to be a captain.
Lieut. Commander Ernest J. King to be a commander.
The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade):
Andrew L. Haas and Raymond Asserson.
The following-named surgeons to be medical inspectors:
Charles St. J. Butler,
Herbert O. Shiffert,
John H. Iden,
Louis W. Bishop, and
Ulys R. Webb.
The following-named passed assistant surgeons to be surgeons:
Clarence E. Strite,
Howson W. Cole,
Edgar L. Woods,
Robert C. Ransdell,
Edwin L. Jones,
Thomas G. Foster,
Condie K. Winn,
John B. Kaufman,
Matthew H. Ames,
Ausey H. Robnett,
James P. Haynes,
Abraham H. Allen,
Andre E. Lee,
Heber Butts,
Philip E. Garrison,
Thomas W. Raison, and
John O. Downey.
The following-named assistant surgeons of the United States Naval Reserve Force to be assistant surgeons:
Carlton L. Andrus,
Esdras J. Lanois,
Floyd G. Tindall, and
George A. Alden.
Oliver S. Powell to be an assistant paymaster.
Civil Engineer Charles W. Parks, with rank of commander, to be a civil engineer in the Navy with rank of captain.
Gunner Henry McEvoy to be a chief gunner.
Pay Clerk William R. Parker to be a chief pay clerk.
Commander John R. Y. Blakely to be a captain.
The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders:
Henry C. Mustin and
Harry K. Cage.
Lieut. George P. Brown to be a lieutenant commander.
Lieut. William L. Calhoun to be a lieutenant commander.
The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders:
Walter B. Decker and
Leo F. Welch.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) Stephen B. McKinney to be a lieutenant.
The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants:
Harold S. Burdick,
Fitzhugh Green,
William N. Richardson, jr., and
Dennis E. Kemp.
Ensign Frank G. Kutz to be a lieutenant (junior grade).
The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade):
William E. Malloy,
Thomas F. Downey, and
Charles A. Macgowan.
Midshipman Earl S. Hurlbut to be an ensign.
The following-named medical inspectors to be medical directors:
Robert M. Kennedy,
Norman J. Blackwood,
Sheldon G. Evans,
Adrian R. Alfred,
Charles M. De Valin,
Lewis Morris,
James F. Leys, and
Frank C. Cook.
Surg. Barton L. Wright to be a medical inspector.
The following-named surgeons to be medical inspectors:
Ralph W. Plummer,
John J. Snyder,
Edward M. Blackwell,
George F. Freeman,
Robert E. Ledbetter,
Samuel S. Rodman,
John M. Brister,
Frederick A. Asserson,
Henry A. Dunn,
Allan Stuart, and
Charles M. Oman.
The following-named assistant surgeons of the United States Naval Reserve Force to be assistant surgeons:
Lawrence K. McCafferty,
Stephen R. Mills,
James A. Brown,
Albert N. Champion,
Alvin L. Mills,
Millard F. Hudson,
Isaac Dellar,
Harold E. Ragle,
Lawrence T. Hopkins,
Richard A. Kern,
John C. Roe,
Nelson W. Sheley,
David Ferguson, jr.,
Lewis G. Jordan,
William C. Blake,
LeVal Lund,
George N. Herring,
Brockton R. Lyon,
Alvin E. Kuhlmann,
Jack S. Terry,

Herold P. Hare,
Charles L. Dugan,
W. Newton Long,
Walter N. Secord,
Wilbur F. Thayer,
Walter S. Harmon,
James L. Reycraft.
George M. Constans,
James E. Harvey,
Warren D. Horner,
John N. N. Osburn,
Rollo W. Hutchinson,
Albert E. Leggett,
Francis J. Tenczar,
George F. J. Kelly,
William F. McAnally,
Norman S. Cooper,
Frank H. Clements,
John S. Cronin,
Edward F. Mullaly,
Harry H. Slominski,
Joseph C. Keller,
John L. Frazer, jr.,
Rudolph E. Kriz.
George O. Cummings,
Hugh J. Duffy,
Daniel W. Sooy,
Joseph A. Hubbell,
John R. Poppen,
Frank P. Werner,
Arthur J. White,
Linwood H. Johnson,
Edwin W. York,
Joseph P. Corgan,
James M. Brown,
Eugene C. Lowe,
William McC. Miller,
Luther W. Boggs,
William P. Gilmer,
John L. Fisher,
Edward D. Andrews,
Albert K. Dunlap,
Charles S. Neves,
Edward C. Melton,
James R. Byrne,
Hardy V. Hughens,
Edwin C. Ebert,
George W. Millett,
Thomas J. Courtney,
Vachelle E. Harmon,
John T. Stringer,
Frank H. Cantlin,
Austin I. Dodson,
Martin J. Costello,
George A. Eckert,
Edward F. Stadtherr,
Leland M. McKinlay,
Ransom H. Holcomb,
Milton B. Clayton,
John H. Robbins,
James E. Miller,
James D. Rives,
Elmer F. Lowry,
Elwood A. Sharp,
Cola Castelloe.
George L. McClintock,
Edward M. Lundegaard,
Alton L. Grant, jr., and
Archibald O. M. Wood.

Pay Inspector Barron P. Du Bois to be a pay director.

Paymaster William T. Gray to be a pay inspector.

Paymaster Robert H. Orr to be a pay inspector.

The following-named paymasters to be pay inspectors:

Charles Morris,
George C. Schafer,
George R. Venable,
Trevor W. Leutze,
Theodore J. Arms, and David V. Chadwick.

Passed Asst. Paymaster Harry E. Collins to be a paymaster.

Passed Asst. Paymaster John H. Gunnell to be a paymaster.

Asst. Paymaster David T. Chalmers to be a passed assistant paymaster.

Machinist Charles O. Hathaway to be a chief machinist.

Pay Clerk John H. Seifert to be a chief pay clerk.

Pay Clerk Joseph O'Reilly to be a chief pay clerk.

The following-named officers to be lieutenant commanders:

Emil A. Lichtenstein,
Albert M. Cohen,
George M. Ravenscroft,
Arie A. Corwin,
Harry J. Abbett,
George McC. Courts,
Charles W. Crosse,
Frank D. Pryor,
Claudius R. Hyatt,
Roy P. Emrich,
Jacob H. Klein, jr.,
John S. Barleon,
William T. Smith,
Jacob L. Hydrick,
Stephen B. McKinney,
Louis F. Thibault,
Baxter H. Bruce,
Henry R. Keller,
Walter F. Lafrenz,
George C. Logan,
Clarence McC. McGill,
George H. Laird,
John B. Earle,
Harold V. McKittrick,
Henry G. Shonerd,
Charles T. Blackburn,
George T. Swasey, jr.,
Ellis Lando,
Ralph B. Horner,
Thomas A. Symington,
Harlow T. Kays,
Robert C. Giffen,
Richard E. Cassidy,
Richard S. Galloway,
Clarence N. Hinkamp,
Riley F. McConnell,
Ralph R. Stewart,
George Joerns,
Ralph C. Parker,
Leslie E. Bratton,
Ezra G. Allen,
Emanuel A. Lofquist,
Henry C. Gearing, jr.,
Elmer W. Tod,
Thaddeus A. Thomson, jr.,
William F. Amsden,
George W. Simpson,
Reuben R. Smith,
Samuel L. Henderson,
Homer H. Norton,
Charles S. Keller,
Alfred H. Miles,
Harold H. Ritter,
Joseph Baer,
Carl C. Krakow,
James Parker, jr.,
Elmo H. Williams,
Charles F. Pousland,
John F. Cox,
Grattan C. Dichman,
George N. Barker,
Harry A. McClure,
Charles C. Windsor,
Louis J. Gulliver,
Newton L. Nichols,
Francis A. L. Vossler,
Cortlandt C. Baughman,
Richard B. Coffman,
Jonas H. Ingram,
Emory F. Clement,
Louis C. Scheibla,
Schuyler F. Heim,
Edmund D. Almy,
Jere H. Brooks,
Robert F. Gross,
Patrick N. L. Bellinger,
William T. Mallison,
Newton H. White, jr.,
Burton A. Strait,
Seymour E. Holliday,
Forney M. Knox,
Samuel A. Clement,
Herman E. Welte,

Richard F. Bernard.
Richmond K. Turner.
Alexander M. Charlton.
John W. Rankin.
Henry F. D. Davis.
Kirkwood H. Donavin.
Oscar Smith, jr.
Herbert A. Jones.
Henry T. Markland.
William R. Smith, jr.
William W. Turner.
Joseph J. Broshek.
Frank J. Wille.
Haller Belt.
Eugene E. Wilson.
Abel T. Bidwell.
Harold W. Boynton.
Rensselaer W. Clark.
Walter K. Kilpatrick.
Elwin F. Cutts.
Edward J. Foy.
Edward H. Loftin.
Harry B. Hird.
Nelson W. Pickering.
Harry A. Badt.
James B. Oswald.
Clyde G. West.
George H. Emmerson.
Norman R. Van der Veer.
David C. Patterson, jr.
Francis W. Rockwell, and Sydney M. Kraus.

The following-named officers to be lieutenants in the Navy:

George Marvell.
Benjamin H. Page.
Frank J. Cunneen.
Allan W. Ashbrook.
Raymond A. Deming.
Charles T. S. Gladden.
Benjamin S. Killmaster.
Robert A. Dyer, 3d.
Raymond S. Hatch.
James E. Boak.
William A. Heard.
Charles H. Mecum.
George T. Howe.
Rudolph F. Hans.
Simson C. Stengel.
Wilder D. Baker.
Julius M. Moss.
Boleslaw L. Dombrowski.
Robert S. Wyman.
Lewis H. McDonald.
Thomas F. Downey.
Horace H. Jalbert.
George S. Arvin.
Foster C. Bumpus.
Harold J. Nelson.
William C. Burgy.
Frank P. Thomas.
Ralph O. Davis.
Francis K. O'Brien.
Sifrien F. Maury.
Martin Griffin.
Marion Y. Cohen.
William F. Roehl.
Malcolm W. Callahan.
Thomas C. Slingluff.
Donald F. Washburn.
Stuart D. Truesdell.
William S. Popham, jr.
Frederick D. Powers.
Robert H. Maury.
Thomas C. Latimore.
Robert W. Cary.
Karl R. Shears.
Lloyd J. Wiltse.
Leon O. Alford.
Paul W. Fletcher.
Lawrence J. K. Blades.
Henry W. Hoyt.
Robert C. Starkey.
William D. Austin.
Joseph C. Arnold.
Philip R. Weaver.
Charles A. Macgowan.
Robert P. Luker.
Clarence J. McReavy.
Oliver O. Kessing.
John F. Moloney.
Delorimier M. Steece.
Wallis Gearing.
William K. Beard.
Paul Fitzsimons, jr.
John H. Brown, jr.
William D. Bungert.
Haiden T. Dickinson.
Lewis J. Stecher.
Malcolm L. Worrell.
Ralph G. Pennoyer.
Harry J. Reuse.
Walter D. Snyder.
John D. Pennington.
Thomas L. Shannon.
Morris J. Lenney.
Lynde D. McCormick.
Mark L. Sperry, jr.
Arthur C. Davis.
Wesley J. Shofner.
Oliver H. Ritchie.
Merrill T. Kinne.
Arthur D. Struble.
Walter A. Hicks.
Warner P. Portz.
Leverett S. Lewis.
Frederic P. Culbert.
Frederick W. Pennoyer, jr.
Howes Bodfish.
Benjamin F. Perry.
Richard W. Bates.
Louis R. Moore.
Claude O. Kell.
Roy de S. Horn.
James M. Shoemaker.
Winfred H. A. Pike, jr.
Gerard H. Wood.
Melville C. Partello.
Kendall Preston.
Robert O. Glover.
Lloyd V. H. Armstrong.
John F. Bates, jr.
Melville W. Powers.
John H. Rockwell.
Howard L. Vickery.
Archie E. Glann.
Vincent H. Godfrey.
Harry H. Chenoweth.
Hugh G. Eldredge.
Stuart B. Clark.
Edward E. Hazlett, jr.
John C. Lusk.
Norwood G. Calvert.
Leon B. Scott.
Charles F. Osborn.
George P. Lamont.
William H. Bowman.
Walter M. A. Wynne.
Scott Umsted.
Myron J. Walter.
Finney B. Smith.
William J. Lorenz.
Powell McC. Rhea.
Edouard V. M. Isaacs.
Henry P. Burnett.
Edwin S. McCoach.
Hubert E. Paddock.
Donald MacL. Dalton.
Theodore E. Chandler.
Herbert V. Wiley.
Ivan M. Graham.
Samuel R. Shumaker.
Frank D. Wagner.
Stephen H. Matteson.
Otto Nimitz.
Glenn H. Easton.
Burton W. Chippendale.
Allan R. Wurtele.
Thomas G. Peyton.
Samuel P. Jenkins.
Cornelius W. Flynn.

Nelson J. Leonard,
William Granat,
Robert T. Darrow,
Robert M. Farrar,
Armit C. Thomas,
Ryland D. Tisdale,
George W. Grove,
Walter J. Confer,
Alan Barnett,
Julius C. Delpino,
Homer W. Graf,
John D. Small,
Romeo J. Jondreau,
Robert W. Clark,
John B. Kneip,
George C. Hill,
Francis S. Low,
James P. Brown,
Francis M. Mail, jr.,
Winthrop Winslow,
Frank C. Huntoon,
William J. Nunnally, jr.,
Earle W. F. Childs,
Alexander S. Wotherspoon,
Philip C. Morgan,
Robert M. Fortson,
Marcus C. Miller,
Forrest B. Royal,
John L. McCrea,
Morris H. Spriggs,
Frederick G. Richards,
Marshall B. Arnold,
Noble Withers,
Roswell H. Blair,
Tully Shelley,
Elmer R. Henning,
Dallas D. Dupre,
Nathaniel M. Pigman,
John S. Farnsworth,
Horace D. Clarke,
Edward Breed,
Thomas G. Brown,
James E. Maher,
Irving R. Chambers,
Alexander G. Hatch,
Allan E. Smith,
Leighton Wood,
Chester E. Lewis,
Harvey E. Overesch,
Stuart A. Maher,
Homer H. H. Harrison,
Ralph Kiely,
Allen G. Quynn,
John Morris Field, jr.,
David McL. Collins,
Archer E. King, jr.,
Daniel W. Armstrong,
Harold O. Hunter,
George C. Kriner,
Forrest K. Libenow,
Clifford G. Richardson,
Dewitt C. Watson,
James M. Lewis,
Raymond Burhen,
Jonathan H. Sprague,
Millard G. Gamble, jr.,
Myron W. Hutchinson, jr.,
John H. Campman,
Isaac Schlossbach,
Henry S. Clark, jr.,
John J. Mahoney,
Ralph W. Christie,
Robert M. Parkinson,
Lewis L. Stedman,
James R. Kyle, jr.,
Preston Marshall,
William D. Thomas,
Lyman B. Hoops,
Hilbert A. Fisher,
William S. Hactor,
Samuel R. Deets,
John S. Ray,
William M. Snelling,
Claude C. Vickrey,
Joseph H. Chadwick,
Albert R. Stephan,
Arthur Landis,
Elmer B. Hough,
William D. Sullivan,
Albert Osenger,
Eugene G. Herzinger,
Richard S. Bulger,
Adolph J. Merkt,
Horace E. Burks,
Henry M. Mullinnix,
Norman P. Earle,
Ralph E. Davison,
Don P. Moon,
Russell S. Berkey,
Robert C. Bourne,
George F. Hussey, jr.,
Thomas J. Kelliher, jr.,
Osborne B. Hardison,
Hugo Schmidt,
Russell S. Hitchcock,
Clinton E. Braine, jr.,
Willis C. Sutherland,
Laurence F. Safford,
Arthur C. Miles,
William M. Fechteler,
Frank W. Wead,
Robert A. Awtrey, and Conrad A. Krez.

The following-named officers to be lieutenants (junior grade):

Joseph W. Paige,
Forrest P. Sherman,
William R. Nichols,
Ernest B. Colton,
Joseph W. Fowler,
William H. Hopkins, jr.,
William J. Malone,
Oscar H. Holtmann,
Lawrence B. Richardson,
James Fife, jr.,
Moses B. Byington, jr.,
Frank R. Dodge,
George T. Cuddihy,
William W. Warlick,
Vincent R. Murphy,
Ralph S. McDowell,
Henry A. Hutchins, jr.,
Charles W. Styer,
Thomas L. Sprague,
Owen E. Grimm,
Einar R. Johnson,
Martin J. Connolly,
Pal L. Meadows,
John D. Crecca,
Olton R. Bennehoff,
Frederick L. Douthit,
Frederick S. Holmes,
Thomas B. Inglis,
Earl E. Stone,
James D. Jacobs,
John J. Ballentine,
Edwin H. Price,
Everett B. Browne,
John R. Sullivan,
James V. B. Lawyer,
John D. Alvis,
John N. Whelan,
Daniel W. Tomlinson,
Edward F. McCartin,
Hayden H. Smith,
Donald A. Green,
Clifton A. F. Sprague,
Thaddeus A. Hoppe,
Clifton E. Denny,
Theodore F. C. Walker,
Joseph J. Clark,
George C. Hawkins,
Albert M. Bledsoe,
Bronson P. Vosbury,
Harold Biesemeier,
Miles R. Browning,
William C. Wade,
Herman E. Halland,
Roy T. Gallemore,
Stanley D. Jupp,
Albert F. France, jr.,

Perry R. Taylor,
Robert T. Whitten,
John S. McReynolds,
Walter S. Macaulay,
Staley H. Gambrill,
George G. Breed,
James L. Fisher,
David E. Cummins,
Robert B. Parker,
Julian D. B. Wilson,
Samuel H. Hurt,
Wilber M. Lockhart,
Henry Y. McCown,
William Busk,
George W. Johnson,
Henry E. Thornhill,
Jacob H. Jacobson,
Ion Pursell,
J. Warren Quackenbush,
Philip L. Emrich,
Gordon Rowe,
William H. Hartt, jr.,
Junius L. Cotten,
Christopher C. Miller,
James E. Waddell,
Donald W. Loomis,
John G. Farrell,
Mertin C. Wade, jr.,
Jack S. Phillips,
Elbert C. Rogers,
John W. Rowe,
Jerauld Wright,
Harry W. Need,
Charles D. Leffler, jr.,
William S. Garrett,
Lloyd G. Scheck,
Earle W. Mills,
Fred M. Byers,
Harry D. Hoffman,
Ford L. Wilkinson, jr.,
Francis S. Gibson,
Harold G. Eberhart,
Thomas G. Fisher,
Berwick B. Lanier,
Victor C. Barringer, jr.,
Martin R. Derx,
Graeme Bannerman,
Louis L. R. Habrylewicz,
Ernest A. Foote,
Henry D. Stailey,
Robert Poole,
Henry S. Kendall,
James D. Murray, jr.,
Stanley M. Haight,
William E. G. Erskine,
Edward W. Wunch,
Garry D. Custer,
John D. H. Kane,
Stanley C. Norton,
James W. Whitfield,
George O. Etheredge,
Bernard V. Eekhout,
Harold E. MacLellan,
Albert S. Marley, jr.,
Peter K. Fischler, jr.,
Francis J. Courtney,
Jay G. Huntoon,
Harry W. Von Hasseln,
Guy D. Townsend,
Arthur T. Moen,
Arthur B. Craig,
Ross P. Whitemarsh,
Ralph H. Henkle,
Leonidas M. Mintzer,
Francis B. Connell,
Gordon B. Woolley,
Vaughn Bailey,
Elmer E. Duvall, jr.,
Albert L. Hutson,
Walter L. Taylor,
Alphonsus I. Flynn,
Edmund J. A. Murphy,
Ellis H. Geiselman,
Ernest H. Krueger,
Herbert R. Sobel,
George E. Ross, jr.,
Jack H. Duncan,
Watson O. Bailey,
Andrew P. Haynes,
Proctor M. Thornton,
Roger F. Armstrong,
Leland P. Lovette,
Wallace M. Dillon,
Edmund J. Kidder,
Edward D. Walbridge,
Leroy W. Busbey, jr.,
Smith D. A. Cobb,
Malcolm A. Deans,
Ralph S. Riggs,
Carlos W. Wieber,
Harry K. Leventen,
Edwin D. Gibb,
John M. Haines,
William A. S. Macklin,
Thoms F. Remington,
John W. Rogers,
Cleeman Withers,
Lloyd E. Clifford,
Charles G. Moore, jr.,
John K. Jayne,
Joseph H. Brady,
William O. Baldwin,
Robert L. Mitten,
Mays L. Lewis,
Elmer V. Iverson,
Peyton Harrison,
Thomas J. Haffey,
John O. Plonk,
Chauncey R. Crutcher,
George R. Kalbfus,
Lisle Henifin,
Frank B. Hillhouse,
Clement B. White,
Allan P. Flagg.
William K. Phillips,
Robert M. Eaches,
Gordon B. Sherwood,
Ralph C. Alexander,
Alexander C. Kidd,
Willis M. Percifield,
Frank Fechteler,
Robert R. Ferguson,
William G. Moore,
James Dowling,
John F. Brooks,
Michael W. Gilmartin,
Hugh J. Duffy,
Edward J. Norcott,
William A. Cable,
Herbert Campbell,
Otto Fries,
Clifford H. Sheldon,
Theodore B. Watson,
John H. Lohman,
Simon Jacobs,
William Zeitler,
Albert F. Benzon,
Samuel Chiles,
Andrew Olsson,
Patrick Hill,
James T. Roach,
David F. Diggins,
Edwin N. Fisher,
Christian Crone,
William F. Foley,
James C. McDermott,
Charles Hierdahl,
Joseph Hill,
Thomas S. Aveson,
Adolph Hasler,
John W. Stoakley,
John D. Walsh,
Martin Fritman,
Dennis J. O'Connell,
William Johnson,
Arthur Smith,
Stephen Donely,
Conrad W. Ljungquist,
Otto E. Reh,
Wilhelm H. F. Schluter,

August C. Steinbrenner,
Belmar H. Shepley,
Thomas P. Clark,
Harry A. Davis,
William G. Smith,
John J. Murray,
Gustav Freudendorf,
John T. Swift,
Herbert A. Nevins,
Robert Rohange,
Benjamin P. Middleton,
Patrick Shanahan,
John Eberwine,
August Wohltman,
John A. Riley,
David White,
Edward J. Damon,
Oscar Borgeson,
Leonard Roll,
Thomas J. Hurd,
David B. Vassie,
George A. Messing,
Joseph Mitchell,
Michael J. J. Farley,
Thomas M. Cassidy,
Edwin Murphy,
James H. Morrison,
Thomas O'Donnell,
John E. Cleary,
Charles Hammond,
Harold I. Lutken,
Daniel Mullan,
Charles H. Hosung,
Samuel L. Wartman,
Robert J. Vickery,
Lemuel T. Cooper,
Ralph F. Nourse,
Francis P. Mugan,
David Purdon,
George C. Ellerton,
Clarence M. Wingate,
Murray S. Holloway,
Charles A. Rowe,
Ernest Evans,
William B. Stork,
Clarence R. Johnson,
William James,
Jannis V. Jacobsen,
Patrick Fernan,
George W. Johnson,
Frank Risser,
John Bryce,
Llewellyn H. Wentworth,
Rasmus Iversen,
Henry E. White,
Charles C. Holland,
Ellwood W. Andrews,
Cornelius J. Collins,
Adolph A. Gathemann,
William C. Gray,
William A. Macdonald,
Karl Rundquist,
Allen T. Webb,
Albion O. Larsen,
Thomas W. Healey,
Joseph Heil,
Frank Bresnan,
Peter Emery,
Claus K. R. Clausen,
Henry A. Stanley,
John McCloy,
Joseph E. Cartwright,
Harold S. Olsen,
John C. Rickertts,
Bernard T. Donnelly,
John G. Nicklas,
Daniel Duncan,
Arthur S. Pearson,
Edward T. Austin,
Harold V. Barr,
Henry Ernest,
Anthony McHugh,
Stanley Danielak,
James P. Dempsey,
Gotthilf C. Layer,
Edward G. Affleck,
John A. Oliver,
James J. Cotter,
Arthur A. Smith,
Edward G. Higgins,
John L. Barnswell,
Matthias A. Thormahlen,
Louis C. Higgins,
John I. Ballinger,
Augustine D. Devine,
Carl Johanson,
Fred W. Cobb,
William T. Robinson,
James L. McCormack,
Fred F. Ingram,
Frederick Meyer,
James Glass,
Nels Drake,
John Davis,
Gerald Ollif,
Owen T. Hurdle,
John Law,
Henry H. Richards,
Frederick W. Metters,
George E. McHugh,
Arthur D. Warwick,
William T. Baxter,
Emil Swanson,
William H. Leitch,
Franklin Heins,
Augustus Anderson,
Ulysses G. Chipman,
Charles J. Miller, and Kieran J. Egan.

Earl S. Hurlbut to be a lieutenant (junior grade).

Frank Stinchcomb to be an ensign.

Stanley M. Cox to be an ensign.

The following-named officers to be ensigns in the Navy:

Fleet W. Corwin,
Leland D. Webb,
William Knox,
Clyde C. Laws,
Henry E. Rung,
Edward J. Carr,
Benjamin F. Strawbridge,
Roy M. Cottrell,
Thomas E. Flaherty,
Charles W. Classen,
John B. Cooke,
Allen R. Chandler,
Maurice M. Rodgers,
Frank Hannon,
Harry F. Gray,
Walter C. Theimer,
Jay Smith,
Arthur R. Pontow,
Charles E. Weickhardt,
Hervey Z. Throop,
Marvin G. Fox,
William Klaus,
John F. Kennedy,
Learned L. Dean,
Frank I. Hart,
Henry E. Kellar,
Thomas F. Morris,
Mervin W. Arps,
Alvin Henderson,
John P. Miller,
John Kneubuehler,
Jerome L. Allen,
Harold F. McHugh,
Albert R. Colwell,
Ray C. Hopkins,
Edward C. McDonald,
Clarence M. Maloney,
Ralph Lane,
Carl J. Nerdahl,
Joseph W. Storm,
Glen R. Ogg,
Thomas F. Fahy,
Albert R. Myers,
Philip A. Wilson,
Harry D. Bolin,

James A. Maloney,
Willis M. Young,
Kenneth F. Horne,
Leonard W. Johnson,
John J. Arnaud,
Walter C. Haight,
John Sharpe,
Charles P. Porter,
Raymond S. Kaiser,
Charles E. S. Lines,
Milton E. Robison,
Samuel A. Wilson,
Steve V. Edwards,
Max P. Schaffer,
Karl Hart,
Julius Holbin,
Casper H. Husted,
Frederick A. Mack,
George F. Fredenberg,
William C. Procknow,
Robert E. Simon,
Frank Schlapp,
John A. Lemanski,
Arthur A. Travis,
Bea L. Jarvis,
Harry P. Quandt,
Felix M. Kelly,
Harry M. Dickerson,
Frank W. Dunning,
Frederick Seefeldt,
Louis H. Rassler,
Ferdinand H. Ehlbeck,
Glenn O. Twiss,
Edwin Brown,
William P. Bachman,
Hal W. Barnes,
Conrad F. Holzemer,
Albert L. Payne,
Charles W. Pearles,
Walter W. Blumenkrauz,
Henry C. Cressman,
Arthur C. Leonard,
Edwin T. Swarts,
Emil F. Lindstrom,
Robert Anderson,
Edwin V. Wilder,
Roscoe C. Bright,
Simeon L. Owen,
Robert H. Weaver,
Edo S. Carfolite,
Henry Plander,
Ray P. Helm,
Walter F. Marriner,
William P. Turner,
Oliver P. Kilmer,
Laurie C. Parfitt,
Clarence A. Hawkins,
Augustus A. Bressman,
Leo Mead,
Walter J. Fanger,
Ray H. Watkins,
Richard L. Reuling,
Alfred R. Boileau,
Eldred J. Richards,
Herbert Wycherley,
Jacob M. Gibson,
Manuel J. Cayton,
Martin J. Werner,
Warren A. Northrup,
Arthur G. Somers,
Grover A. Miller,
George A. Gast,
George Stone,
Marion C. Erwin,
James E. Drever,
Arthur P. Spencer,
William I. Denny,
Robert T. Bamford, and
Frank Dobie.

The following-named chief pharmacists to be assistant surgeons:

Alphonsus A. O'Donoghue,
Frank Fulton, and
Henry A. Harris.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 13, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rabbi Edward B. M. Browne, of the Mount Morris Park Synagogue "Ateress-Zvee," New York City, offered the following prayer:

Father, who art in Heaven, hallowed is Thy name. Thy kingdom came with the dawn of creation, and being established upon principles eternal and universal, its laws enforce themselves alike in all climes and in all ages. Therefore Thy will must be done amongst the celestials in Heaven even as it is done amongst Thy mortal children on earth. Thou hast endowed nature with productive energies, subservient to man's will, whereby Thou givest us this day our daily bread. By imparting to us Thy divine spirit, Thou hast enabled us to enact just laws which guard human society, so that human passions may lead us not into temptation but divine grace deliver us from all evil.

For the purpose of enacting just laws for our great Nation, there are here assembled its representative sons, and I pray that as Thou wast present with Moses on the peak of Moab, so here in this modern Sinai Thou canst send Thy shekinah upon every one of the Representatives present, so that while they represent the will of the people they will represent the will of Thee, who art our Father and our Lord.

And we pray, oh God, our special blessing upon the President of the United States, our olive-branch President, who is waging an olive-branch war in order to bring about an olive-branch, genuine peace amongst all the nations of the earth. Open Thy religious magnanimity to forgive those who trespass against us even as Thou forgivest our trespasses against Thee. And thus give us the power and the will to bring mankind to Thy feet as children of God and to democratize every human being in justice and in equality. We thank Thee, oh Lord, that You have selected our Nation as the chosen people of these days to bring about the peace which the bewildered world now wants. But let us not be vainglorious at the high position assigned us, bearing in mind that whatsoever we are in greatness, in influence, in power, we are so only through Thee. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. POMERENE, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. CUMMINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed, on December 7, 1917, joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2860. An act transferring Hardeman County to the Wichita Falls division of the northern judicial district of Texas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

"GARABED" PATENT.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I desire to direct the attention of the Chair to House joint resolution 174, No. 77 on the calendar, and to make a parliamentary inquiry. This is a joint resolution "for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the 'Garabed,' claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy." Now, that is on the House Calendar. The Committee on Rules, I may state as the reason for making this inquiry, proposes to report a rule for the consideration of this measure, and the question has arisen with some of the members of the committee as to whether this should not be on the Union Calendar. The form of the rule will be determined by that proposition. I submit the inquiry to the Chair now as to whether it is properly on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. What does it provide?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is the "Garabed" invention. It was considered before in the House, but the point has been made that there are some phases that we propose that will properly make it a subject for consideration in the Committee of the Whole. It does not carry an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. It does not have to carry an appropriation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It may carry an appropriation later.

The SPEAKER. If it necessarily involves an expenditure on the Treasury it ought to go on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It does not necessarily involve it, but the contingency is there. It does not necessarily carry an expense upon the Treasury. But it may do it. The possibility exists.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit, section 6 provides that if there is a successful demonstration of this device, then he shall be remunerated to the extent of the value of his discovery. That is a provision which may make a charge upon the Treasury. I think it properly should be on the Union Calendar rather than on the House Calendar, because it involves, though through a contingency, a liability on the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will read the section concerning which he is talking.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says:

SEC. 6. That after the successful demonstration of the "Garabed," if the United States Government wishes to purchase the right and title for the exclusive use of said discovery or invention, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian will comply with the request of the United States Government: Provided, That he shall be remunerated to the extent commensurate with the value of his discovery or invention, which shall be appraised by a committee of even number, one-half of the membership of which shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior and one-half selected by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, and the finding of said committee shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and of the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, before there would be an expenditure on the part of the Government it would require subsequent legislation. There is no expenditure provided for in this bill at all, or any contingent expenditure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is immaterial to me which calendar it is considered on.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit just one further observation, I will say that section 2 provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations and enter into such contracts as may be necessary to carry this resolution into effect.

The SPEAKER. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. There is not anything pressing about this, is there, this morning?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is immaterial to me which calendar it is considered on, but the parliamentary rule will be determined by the calendar it happens to be on. I should say that there is no chance to consider it to-day, and if at some time during the day we can learn what calendar it should go on, I am content.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the remarks made by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] show that any expenditure is purely speculative. It says, "If," and so forth and so on; so that it is not plain that there ever would be an expenditure. The Chair leaves it where it is, on the House Calendar.

PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

Mr. GARD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GARD. On behalf of certain members of the Committee on the Judiciary I desire to ask leave to file a minority report on Senate joint resolution 17, the so-called national prohibition amendment.

The SPEAKER. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. GARD. Two days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks leave to file a minority report on the prohibition amendment within two days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BEAKES VERSUS BACON.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the notice given last week, I rise for the purpose of asking now that the report of the committee on the contested-election case of Beakes versus Bacon, from the second district of the State of Michigan, be taken up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution and the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WATSON of Virginia, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted the following report:

Your Committee on Elections No. 3, having had under consideration the case of Beakes v. Bacon, second district, State of Michigan, after careful and, it believes, impartial inquiry, asks to submit this report of its deliberations.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there is any desire on the part of the House that the report of the committee be read. Unless there is a desire to have that report read, I ask that the reading of the report be suspended and that the resolution be reported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How long is it?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. About 12 pages.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the resolution be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter about which the House has very little information. I think the report should be first read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, it is not required to be read by the rules.

The SPEAKER. It has been objected to.

Mr. GARNER. It does not make any difference whether it has been objected to or not. The rule does not require that it should be read.

The SPEAKER. The House desires information on the election case.

Mr. GARNER. The House can get information in the way indicated by the rules.

The SPEAKER. What does the rule provide?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, if after the resolution is read anybody desires that the report be read, it can be done with the permission of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The only thing the House needs to have read is the resolution on which it is to act.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I would like to ask the chairman to request the reading of the report.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be read first, and then if any gentleman wants the report read I will have no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. Speaker, I ask if the gentleman from Iowa, who has the floor, will yield for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman undoubtedly had the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that he yield to me for a moment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] the floor?

The SPEAKER. Nobody claimed he had.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] said the gentleman from Iowa had the floor, and the Speaker said "undoubtedly he had."

The SPEAKER. The Speaker has sense enough to believe that he was talking about the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will ask if the gentleman from Virginia will yield for a moment?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is a case in which there is no minority report. Is not that right?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And, so far as the Republican side of the House is concerned, it has no information on this case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not that side of the House read the majority report?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no minority report in this case. What objection is there to have the majority report read for the information of the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no minority report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I said "majority report."

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I have no objection to its being read if anybody desires it. I ask that the report be read, but not in the time accorded me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks that the report be read, but not taken out of his time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The record in this case is unique in some respects and is in rather marked contrast with the generality of election cases.

First. No unworthy motive is ascribed to the principals concerned, and intentional wrong is not shown to have been done by any of the officials charged with the conduct of the election.

Second. There is little or no conflict of evidence respecting the material facts in issue, and the only question for decision is one of law and justice as applied to a conceded state of facts.

Third. While the controversy originally embraced the canvass and counting of over 50,000 ballots cast in the election, in the end the issue is narrowed to the proper disposition of the returns from only two precincts.

When it is recalled with what partisan bias contests of this sort have sometimes been wont to be waged in the past, and how frequently your body has had to deal with records of mutual reproach and even crime, the committee deems itself fortunate to be able to say at the outset that this contest has on the whole been conducted with admirable spirit and with the desire to elucidate the real merits of the case. Where the electors were so numerous and the ballot complicated mistakes and irregularities were inevitable and to be anticipated; but the irregularities shown here are mostly formal, and in the aggregate the mistakes comparatively few.

How the Contest Arose.

The official returns of the election for Congress, November 7, 1916, gave Bacon 27,182, Beakes 27,133—a majority of 49 for Bacon.

Reviewing the returns from the various precincts, contestant discovered that at first precinct, second ward, city of Jackson, he had run far behind the other candidates of his party, State and Federal; and unaware of any local sentiment or condition to produce such a result, he instituted unofficial inquiries to ascertain the cause. As the returns did not indicate that the contestee had polled any more votes there than the rest of his party ticket, it was obvious that the lost votes had not gone to his competitor. The matter became the subject of public discussion and of press comment, and a very general impression got abroad that a mistake had been made in the official count. Some of the election inspectors themselves concluded they had made a mistake. And when, two weeks later, the board of county canvassers met to canvass the returns, four of the inspectors who held this election sent to the board a written statement saying that, in compiling the vote for Congress, they had inadvertently failed to include 70 or more votes, and that therefore their return was wrong and did not reflect the true state of that poll.

Contestant, from this disclosure, believing a mistake had been made large enough to affect the result in the whole district, thereupon retained counsel to appear before the board and obtain a correction of the error, or, if this were not possible, a recount of the vote. In these proceedings contestee was likewise represented by counsel.

At this juncture the board, on the application of one of the candidates for the office of coroner, voted for at the same election, opened the boxes of this precinct and directed a recount of the ballots. Counsel for both of the parties to this contest being present, they concluded to examine unofficially the vote for Congress as the recount for coroner progressed, and in this way it was ascertained that, as the ballots then stood, the contestant was entitled to 87 votes more than the official returns had given him.

Application was then made to the board on the part of the contestant to correct the error, or award a recount. That a mistake had been made was openly acknowledged by counsel for contestee and conceded by the board (Rec., 50–62); but, deeming its functions to be only ministerial, the board felt unable to correct the returns and found no provision in the statute authorizing itself to hold a recount in case of a Federal office. Application was then made to the State board of canvassers for a recount of the vote, but with like result. The superme court was then asked for a mandamus, compelling a recount, but refused to award the writ. The laws of his State seeming to afford no remedy for a situation like this, contestant then determined to bring the matter before this House for decision upon its merits.

Character of Evidence in the Record.

As stated before there is no controversy of moment between the parties concerning the material facts in the record. Most of the evidence is of documentary character, composed chiefly of official returns, unofficial recounts with agreed results, and exhibits relating to these. The oral testimony is confined to persons connected with the election in some official capacity, and in that but little conflict is to be found. Most of the work of collecting evidence consisted in the recount of the ballots by counsel for the parties. Apparently the State law made no provision for such a proceeding in case of a Federal office; but, by agreement of counsel, the ballot boxes were produced by the clerk before a notary and in this way, first and last, the vote of practically the entire district was recounted—three precincts at the instance of contestant and the rest on behalf of the contestee. This agreement was productive of highly satisfactory results, and has spared your committee an immense amount of difficult and tedious labor.

Conceded Facts.

From contestant's brief (p. 24) it will be seen he concedes contestee 26,581 votes. This is exclusive, however, of two precincts in the city of Jackson (first precinct, second ward, and third precinct, sixth ward), and of the disputed ballots filed with the record as exhibits; but includes 211 votes officially returned for contestee at second precinct, sixth ward, city of Jackson. This concession was based in part on the agreement of the opposing counsel to accept the official returns at the last-mentioned precinct (Rec., 90), but that counsel having withdrawn from the agreement, the figures given above are subject to revision, and the 211 votes should be subtracted from the total stated above, leaving a balance of 26,370.

It was subsequently agreed to accept the official returns in the third precinct, sixth ward, city of Jackson (contestee's brief, p. 1), where contestee received 93 votes. This therefore should be added to the total above, making the number 26,463. Thereafter, in the oral hearing before the committee counsel agreed (committee hearing, p. 28) that the disputed ballots filed in exhibit should be counted, 31 for contestant and 21 for contestee. This would require, therefore, the addition of the 21 to the number already stated, making a total of 26,484 votes conceded to the contestee.

By brief (p. 25), contestee concedes contestant 26,499. To this should be added 31 from the disputed ballots referred to, which would make the total number 26,530.

The sum of the respective concessions stands therefore as follows:

Votes conceded to Beakes	26,530
Votes conceded to Bacon	26,484
Majority for Beakes	46

The foregoing figures cover the entire congressional district except the returns from two precincts—first precinct, second ward, and second precinct, sixth ward, Jackson city—and they present the only subjects of dispute left in the record.

I. First Precinct, Second Ward, of Jackson City.

By official returns the total number of electors at this precinct was 703 and the vote for Congress as follows:

Bacon	351
Beakes	233
Koch	5
Titus	3

(Rec., 42–3.)

By recount, 703 ballots were found in boxes and the vote for Congress as follows:

Bacon	352
Beakes	320
Koch	4
No choice	18
Total	703

(Rec., 24–5.)

The sole issue raised in regard to this precinct is whether the official returns shall stand or whether they should be corrected in accordance with the recount.

Contestant contends that, as the return is conceded to be erroneous, they should be set aside and a recount of the ballots had, while contestee insists either that the failure of the election officers in the first instance to seal the ballot boxes properly, or the failure of the clerk thereafter to kep them in safe custody discredited the ballots to such an extent as to make a recount unlawful, and hence that the official return must stand.

So the question is a mixed one of law and fact; but as there is not much conflict of evidence respecting the physical facts in the case, the question, in the last analysis, is one of law.

Error in the Official Returns Conceded.

That a mistake of material size was made in compiling the returns for Congress at this precinct is obvious from the record, and the fact was conceded by everybody who had to deal with the subject in any official or representative way.

When the board of county canvassers convened, November 22, 1916, to canvass the returns for the county, four of the six inspectors who conducted this election addressed to the board the following communication:

"We, the undersigned inspectors of election of the first precinct, second ward, of the city of Jackson, in said county, at the general election held November 7, 1916, at which election State, county, and district officers were voted for, including candidates for Congress, hereby certify that in preparing the statement in duplicate showing the whole number of votes cast for candidates for Representative in Congress and the number of votes received by each of such candidates, which statement was certified by the inspectors of election for delivery to the proper officers, as provided by statute, a mistake was made in that all the votes cast for the candidates for Representative in Congress were not included therein, and, through inadvertence and mistake, votes cast for each of such candidates were omitted from said statement; and that statement of the result of the election in said precinct, so far as it relates to the office of Representative in Congress, does not correctly represent the vote cast by the electors in that it does not show the whole number of votes cast for each of the candidates for said office—the votes not so counted aggregating 70 or more votes.

"Chas. F. Barcus.
"Geo. E. Van Camp.
"Gifford Billman.
"Henry Marriott.

"November 20, 1916."

(Rec., 49–50.)

Pending the proceedings before the board, a recount of these votes was had for the coroner's office, when this alleged error became manifest, and application was made to recount the votes for Congress. In reference thereto Mr. Miller, in attendance as counsel for contestee, said:

"There is no question but that an error has been made. I don't want you to think I am claiming there has not been a mistake made. I have the best of reasons and grounds for believing there has been a grave mistake, and I say Mr. Beakes and Mr. Bacon are entitled to every vote cast for them." (Rec., p. 50.)

Referring to the same subject, Mr. Flowers, one of the board sitting in judgment, said:

"It is an unfortunate error. I admit that." (Rec., p. 49.)

The inspectors summoned before the board to see if the error might be corrected, all admitted the error, but not being able to agree, without a recount of the ballots, upon its precise terms; and the board, deeming itself unauthorized to allow a recount, made a separate statement in its certificate to the State board, calling special attention to the situation of this precinct. (Rec., pp. 42–43.)

The inaccuracy in the return being conceded by everybody, the only question remaining is whether the ballots in controversy had been so preserved as to justify the recount subsequently made by counsel for both sides, February 22, 1917, before the notary, the result of which is not disputed. (Rec., p. 23.)

Sealing and Custody of the Ballot Boxes.

The only complaint raised on this head relates to the manner in which the boxes were sealed by the inspectors and the custody bestowed upon them by the clerk after they were delivered to his office.

The Michigan statute pertaining to the subject is:

"After the ballots are counted they shall, together with one tally sheet, be placed in the ballot box, which shall be securely sealed in such a manner that it can not be opened without breaking such seal. The ballot box shall then be placed in charge of the township or city clerk, but the keys of said ballot box shall be held by the chairman of the board and the election seal in the hands of one or the other inspectors of election." (Sec. 37, Elec. Laws Mich., revision 1913.)

As to whether this provision regulating the sealing of the ballot box is mandatory or merely directory, there is nothing in the statute to determine. The general rule applicable to the construction of such statutes is well stated by McCrary:

"If the statute expressly declares any particular act to be essential to the validity of the election, or that its omission shall render the election void, all courts whose duty it is to enforce such statute must so hold, whether the particular act in question goes to the merits or affects the result of the election or not. * * * But if, as in most cases, the statute simply provides that certain acts or things shall be done within a particular time or in a particular manner and does not declare that their performance is essential to the validity of the election, then they will be regarded as mandatory if they do and directory if they do not affect the actual results of the election." (McCrary on Elections, 225. See also to same effect Barnes v. Supervisors, 51 Miss., 305; Wheelock's Case, 82 Pa. St., 297; Allen v. Glynn, 17 Col., 338; Parven v. Wineberg, 130 Ind., 561; Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo., 145; State v. Van Camp, 36 Nebr., 91.)

"Those provisions of a statute which affect the time and place of the election and the legal qualifications of the electors are generally of the substance of the election, while those touching the recording and return of the legal votes received and the mode and manner of conducting the mere details of the election are directory." (Idem, 172, and Ill., Pa., Kans., and Mich., cases there cited.)

And where the question concerned the sealing of the ballots themselves the same author said:

"In accordance with the rule that the errors of a returning officer shall not prejudice the rights of innocent parties, it has been held that where it was the duty of a presiding officer to return the vote sealed up a return of them unsealed, in the absence of proof or suspicion of fraud, was good." (Idem 236.)

But statutory provisions regulating the conduct of elections and the preservation of the returns are, after all, only a means to an end, and that end is to secure a true expression of the will of the electors—a free ballot and a fair count. To this end all merely formal legal requirements must bend, and, if the returns are so made and preserved as to furnish satisfactory evidence of the will of the voters, that will must prevail. Upon that proposition, said the Supreme Court of Kansas in the great case of Guileland v. Schuyler (1 Kans., 569), "hangs our experiment in self-government."

The real question to be answered in this case is not whether the precise form of the statute was observed but whether the ballots recounted were the identical ballots cast at the election, and if their condition had remained unchanged. If so, their value as evidence is unimpaired, and in the absence of statutory restraint there can be no legal objection to their being recounted.

That this is the true principle from the standpoint of authority we quote:

"It is well settled that the statutes prescribing the mode of preservation of the ballots are directory merely, and if it be clearly and satisfactorily proved that they have been kept intact and inviolate in the same condition as when counted, the ballots are admissible in evidence, although not preserved in the manner prescribed by the statute." (15 Cyclop. Law and Proc., 426.)

"In determining this and similar questions in cases of contested election it should be kept constantly in mind that the ultimate purpose of the proceedings is to ascertain and give expression to the will of the majority as expressed through the ballot box and according to law. Rules should be adopted and construed to this end, and to this end only." (McCrary on Elections, 232; People v. Bates, 11 Mich., 362.)

"The better opinion seems to be that, if the deviation from the statutory requirements relative to the manner of preserving the ballots has been such as necessarily to expose them to the public or unauthorized persons, the Court should exclude them; but if the deviations have been slight, or of such a character as to render doubtful the identity of the ballots, the question of their identity will go to the jury to be determined upon all the evidence." (Idem, sec. 473, and People v. Livingston, 80 N. Y., 66.)

Judge Cooley said in People v. Cicott (14 Mich., 283, 325):

"The courts have always repelled the idea that the will of the electors plainly expressed in the forms prescribed by law can be defeated by the negligence, mistake, or fraud of the officers appointed to register the result of an election."

From the standpoint of precedent, also, we reach the same conclusions. On several occasions the House of Representatives has found it necessary, in the interest of justice, to set aside official returns and resort to a recount of the ballots.

In the Indiana case of English v. Peele, in the Forty-eighth Congress, an unofficial recount of the ballots was accepted in lieu of the official return for the vote of a whole county; and in the Iowa case of Frederick v. Wilson, of the same Congress, a recount was permitted to supersede the official returns from 10 different election precincts.

Having fully considered, as we think, the legal principles applicable to such cases, we may turn now to the facts of this case as disclosed by the record.

FACTS CONCERNING THE SEALING AND CUSTODY OF THE BALLOT BOXES AT THE FIRST PRECINCT, SIXTH WARD.

It is conceded that when the inspectors finished their work at the election and deposited the ballots in the boxes they locked them properly and sealed them in some manner; that they were delivered to the patrol wagon accompanied by two of the inspectors and delivered promptly by them to the city clerk at his office; that they were placed along with the boxes from other precincts, as they came in, in the outer office or lobby of the clerk's office in front of the clerk's desk through which the public passed during office hours, and where they remained until the next day, until stored away for final keeping in another room under lock and key; that when produced by the clerk before the county board of canvassers on November 23, 1916, and again before the notary on February 22, 1917, they were properly locked, and sealed over the openings left in the tops for the reception of the ballots, but not sealed otherwise; that they could not be opened or their contents removed without being unlocked, but being unlocked they could be opened without breaking any seal; that the total number of ballots in the box corresponded with the number called for by the poll book, and they were all regularly initialed by the inspectors; and that the unused ballots returned therewith were regularly numbered from 704 (inclusive) upward.

In addition to the facts conceded, the clerk testified that the key was delivered to him at the same time as the boxes, and that key and boxes had remained continuously in his possession ever since, except when before the county board and notary, and that he felt sure they had been tampered with in no way. (Rec., 14–15 and 74–75.)

Contestee's brief asserts that there is evidence in the record to show that the boxes, when they left the polling place, were probably sealed over the locks, and advances the theory that these seals were broken after the boxes reached the clerk's office, and hence draws the inference that the ballots had been tampered with. We can find no satisfactory evidence in the record to show that the boxes ever contained any other seals than those which appeared when they were produced before the county board, and therefore can find no warrant for the inference of fraud based upon the assumption that the boxes had before borne a different seal. The theory that the boxes were tampered with after delivery to the clerk seems to us not only most improbable but inconsistent with all the known facts of the case.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that there is no proof or reasonable suspicion of fraud connected with these returns, that they have at all times remained in safe and legal custody, and that their value as evidence was nowise impaired by the failure of the inspectors to seal the boxes in the precise manner required by the statute.

That this was once the view held by Mr. Miller himself, counsel for contestee, will appear from the record (p. 46), when he said in reference to the seals upon these identical boxes:

"I would like to make a statement that the boxes are sealed on the covers at the opening, but there are no seals over the locks. As far as I am concerned, I don't think, unless it should appear that the boxes have been out of the custody of the proper officer, it would be of any particular importance at this time."

To sum up the whole matter: The official return is conceded by everybody to be wrong; it ought not therefore to be made the basis of title to anybody's seat in Congress. If it can not be corrected, it ought to be rejected entirely. But we think the means are at hand whereby this error may be legally corrected. In the presence of a sworn officer of the law, counsel for both parties recounted these ballots and reached a result which is not in dispute; they found Bacon had received 352 votes and Beakes 320. We think that recount should stand in place of the original return as the true vote of the first precinct, second ward, city of Jackson.

II. SECOND PRECINCT, SIXTH WARD, CITY OF JACKSON.

By official return the total number of electors at this precinct were 577, and the vote for Congress was:

Bacon	211
Beakes	329

The evidence shows a chapter of accidents at this and the third precinct in the same ward, which resulted in the admixture of the ballots of the two precincts in well-nigh hopeless confusion, and ultimately created a situation very hard to untangle. It will therefore be necessary for a while to consider the returns from these precincts together.

By the returns the electors at the third precinct were 247, and the vote for Congress:

Bacon	93
Beakes	138

There were no irregularities in the conduct of the election at either of these places, nor in the count and canvass of the vote, nor in the sealing and delivery of the ballot boxes (with one exception, to be noted presently). No trouble of any kind was experienced with these returns until the attempt was made by the contestee to recount the vote, when great confusion ensued. The trouble arose over an unintentional mixing of the ballot boxes of the two precincts at the time of the election. It must have happened in this way, as was shown by subsequent events:

The ballot boxes for the city were all labeled with the numbers of their respective precincts and wards, but by mistake on election morning one box labeled "third precinct" was delivered at second precinct, and one box labeled "second precinct" was delivered at the third precinct. At the close of the election the canvassed returns at the second precinct were placed in three boxes—two belonging to the precinct and properly labeled, and one, the box labeled "third precinct" already described, while at the third precinct all the ballots were put in the box labeled "second precinct" aforesaid, and delivered to the clerk's office.

The situation was still further complicated by the fact that when the work of the election ended at the second precinct the inspectors failed to return to the clerk's office along with the rest of the returns one of the ballot boxes containing a considerable number of the ballots, and left it in the polling booth uncovered and unlocked (though the polling booth was locked), where it remained until it was discovered by the clerk four months afterward, when he went to prepare for another election. He of course covered and locked the box, and carried it to the clerk's office for safe keeping.

ATTEMPTED RECOUNT.

So when contestee reached these returns in the prosecution of his recount on March 28, 1917, when the second precinct was called for, the clerk, not knowing of the mixing of the boxes on election day, produced three boxes labeled with the precinct number, one of them being the box he had found open in the polling booth. The place and condition in which this box was found being made known, it was agreed by counsel for both sides that it would be improper to recount the ballots of this precinct, as all of them had not been preserved as required by law. (Rec., 169–170.)

A recount was actually made, however, with results widely differing from the official returns from the precinct.

The third precinct being called for, the only box labeled with that number was produced, and a recount of its contents disclosed likewise large variance from the official return. (Rec., 169–170.)

On April 30 following contestant entered upon his rebuttal testimony, and the inspectors of the two precincts were summoned to explain if they could the discrepancy disclosed between these ballots and their returns. As the ballots were all regularly marked with the initial letters of the inspectors' names, there was no difficulty in identifying the precinct in which they were cast, and in this way it was discovered that of the 535 ballots recounted on March 28 for second-precinct returns, only 288 of the number were cast at that poll, and that the residue, 247, belonged to the second precinct. Likewise it was found that the 289 ballots recounted at the same time for the third precinct were in fact voted at the second.

The ballots for each precinct having thus been identified, the total number in each was found to correspond with the number called for by the official returns. Hence was reconciled the discrepancy between the ballots and the returns. (Rec., 91–112.)

The former recount of the ballots of the two precincts, while they were commingled, when combined into one whole showed the following results:

Total number of electors by official returns	824
Total number of ballots found in boxes	824
Total number of votes for Bacon by official returns	304
Total number of ballots for Bacon found in boxes	303
Total number of votes for Beakes by official returns	467
Total number of ballots for Beakes found in boxes	467

(Rec., 169–170.)

The results, therefore, so far from casting suspicion upon the returns, afforded rather confirmation of their accuracy, and incidentally tended to show that the contents of the box left open in the polling place had not been disturbed.

In addition to these facts the unused ballots, numbered consecutively and returned with the ballots from these precincts, were found to show in both instances the number next in order to the last ballot voted.

PRECISE ISSUE AS TO THIS PRECINCT.

Both sides agree that they could not have a lawful recount of that portion of the ballots of the second precinct (and being mingled with those of other boxes they could not be separately identified) which were left in the voting booth after the election. And in that view we concur; for, though the ballots bore every internal evidence of not having been disturbed, yet would it be a hazardous experiment and dangerous precedent to permit a recount of returns unsecured and without lawful custody for four months.

Contestant holds the official returns should stand; contestee contends that the failure of the officers to preserve a portion of the ballots, as required by law, so discredits their conduct and official character as to invalidate their whole return, and that it should be set aside in toto; and, that being done, that a recount should be had of the ballots which were properly preserved and they be accepted for the vote of the whole precinct. (It will be remembered that 289 of the 577 ballots cast at the precinct were found in a box labeled "3d precinct," which had been properly cared for and in which the recount showed Bacon 172, Beakes 111.)

LEGAL PRINCIPLES APPLICABLE TO THE QUESTION.

"The presumption is that officers of the law charged with the duty of ascertaining and declaring the result [of an election] have discharged that duty faithfully." (McCreary, sec. 459.)

"The rule is that the returns must stand until impeached—i. e., until shown to be worthless as evidence, so worthless that the truth can not be deduced from it." (McCrary, sec. 515. Also Loyd v. Sullivan, 9 Mont., 577; and McDuffie v. Davidson, Mob., 577.)

"The return must stand until such facts are proven as to clearly show it is not true." (Idem, sec. 571; Blair v. Barrett, 1 Bart., 308; Knox v. Blair, 1 Bart., 521; Washburn v. Voorhees, 2 Bart., 54; State v. Comrs., 35 Kans., 640.)

Upon these principles our courts have acted from the earliest time, and in contested-election cases Congress has often had occasion to apply them.

The only known fact upon which it is asked to impeach this return is that one of the four ballot boxes in use on election day (for there was a larger box for the reception of ballots during the day in addition to the three in which the returns were placed) was left open in the polling booth by the inspectors after the election, and not delivered to the clerk as required by law. From this single act of omission we are asked to infer a willful violation of the law on the part of the inspectors, and contestee's brief charges it was perpetrated with intent to commit a fraud. Is this so? We are constrained to feel otherwise, and that such harsh conclusion is inconsistent with the other known facts and all the probabilities of the case.

1. There is nothing else in the record reflecting upon the character of any of the officers who held the election. One of them, at least, had long been a resident of the community. No citizen complained of their conduct during or after the election. There is nothing to show that any one of them had any personal or political interest in the election of the contestant. It is not known that any of them even voted for him. Indeed, it was asserted by counsel in oral argument before the committee (committee hearing) that nearly all the inspectors in the city were Republicans in politics, and the statement was not denied. If this be true, even barring the question of personal character, it is inconceivable they would perpetrate a fraud to elect the Democratic candidate.

2. It is difficult to imagine how it was possible to consummate a fraud by the method chosen in this case. The poll book showing the identity and number of electors and the formal certificate showing the votes for the candidates having been returned to the clerk along with the other ballot boxes, it is not seen how the result could have been affected by anything done to the ballots in the box that was left. The only theory, consistent with crime under the circumstances, would seem to be that the officers had all conspired in advance to frame up a false return, and had retained this box with enough ballots to be altered so as to sustain the return. How this could have been accomplished where the vote was canvassed in public, as required by the Michigan law, is not attempted to be explained. But if such a scheme had been executed, surely such wary criminals would have contrived in some way to "deliver the goods," and not have left the highly finished work of their hands exposed to the uncertainties of fortune in a remote corner of the city. With an official ballot in use and no extra ballots obtainable, it is not probable that outsiders could have been expected to aid materially in "doctoring the returns."

3. The facts that the total number of ballots collected from this and three other boxes (one of which was from another precinct) corresponded with the number called for by the poll books; that they were all properly initialed by the inspectors; that the unused ballots returned bore the right serial numbers; and that the vote of the candidates for Congress shown by the ballots was substantially the same as that polled for the other candidates of their respective parties are all strong internal marks to show that no fraud had been practiced upon those returns.

4. The record shows that it was 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the second day before the inspectors finished their work; they had been continuously on duty thirty-odd hours. Under such conditions is it not reasonable to suppose that the box was inadvertently left behind and without thought of wrong?

PRECEDENTS IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

In the precedents of the House we have found no case in which the official returns have been set aside except for one or more of the following causes:

1. Want of authority in the election board.
2. Fraud in conducting the election.
3. Such irregularities or misconduct as render the result uncertain.

In the Missouri contested-election case of Lindsay v. Scott, Thirty-eighth Congress, a case arose resting, we apprehend, upon the same legal grounds as obtain here. An official return was sought to be set aside because of the subsequent destruction of the ballots; but the ballots having been regularly numbered and counted and the vote entered on the poll book, in the absence of any other proof of fraud, the Election Committee reported unanimously in favor of the return and the House sustained the report without a division. (2 Hinds' Precedents, 21.)

In the long line of cases, embracing nearly every variety, adjudicated by the House we can find no precedent for the contestee's proposal that the official return in this case be set aside and the portion of the ballots preserved be counted for the vote of the whole precinct. Regarding certificates of election based on partial returns of an election district—a somewhat analogous question—the House, in the case of Niblock v. Walls (42d Cong.), rejected a county return because the county canvassers did not include all the precincts in the county.

"If a part of the vote is omitted and the certificate does no more than show the canvass of part of the vote cast, * * * it is not even prima facie evidence, because non constat that a canvass of the whole vote would produce the same result." (McCrary, sec. 272.)

At the precinct in question 577 duly qualified voters participated in the election; 289 of these were so fortunate as to have their ballots properly preserved; 288—the other half—without any fault on their part were so unfortunate as to have their ballots left or to become mixed with others that were left at the polls and not preserved according to law. Under these conditions we know of no principle of law or of morals that would justify us in disfranchising one-half the electors of that precinct and substituting the will of the other half for that of the whole. The very statement of the proposition carries its own refutation.

We find no sufficient cause why the official return from the second precinct, sixth ward of the city of Jackson should be rejected, and are of opinion it should be accepted as a true record of the vote cast for Congress at that poll.

RÉSUMÉ.

Votes conceded to Beakes (see ante)	26,530
Votes awarded Beakes on recount of vote first precinct, second ward, Jackson (see ante)	320
Votes accorded Beakes by official returns, second precinct, sixth ward, Jackson (see ante)	329
		27,179
Votes conceded Bacon (see ante)	26,484
Voted accorded Bacon on recount, first precinct, second ward, Jackson (see ante)	352
Votes accorded Bacon on official returns, second precinct, sixth ward, Jackson	211
		27,047
Majority for Beakes		132

CONCLUSION.

For the reasons named, though imperfectly stated, your committee respectfully recommends to the House the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. That Mark R. Bacon was not elected a Representative to this Congress in the second district of the State of Michigan, and is not entitled to retain a seat herein.

2. That Samuel W. Beakes was duly elected a Representative in this Congress for the second district, State of Michigan, and is entitled to a seat herein.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. DYER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DYER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. Is it the intention to fix a time for general debate on this contest?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Speaker, that there being no difference of opinion among the members of the committee which had this matter under consideration and no minority report, I had not anticipated that there would be any contest over the matter. I have no desire, of course, to precipitate any contest or to prevent any contest, but if there is to be any contest I shall be very glad to agree with gentlemen on that side and on this who differ with the report of the committee as to the time.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that I would like to have 15 minutes.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Will the gentleman tell me who else on that side of the aisle would like to speak?

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that I do not speak for anybody else except myself, but from the looks of the situation and the fact that there is no minority report, it would appear, so far as the Republicans are concerned—although I am not speaking for the leaders on this side—that there is no intention to oppose the unseating of Mr. Bacon and the seating of Mr. Beakes, the contestant. Personally I ask for 15 minutes to discuss the report.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If it be only an hour, Mr. Speaker, and nobody else cares to speak, I can yield to the gentleman 15 minutes out of my time, if that is all that is desired. Is there anybody else on that side of the House who desires time?

Mr. GILLETT. I understand that no member of the committee on this side desires to speak.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. May I ask if there is anyone on this side who desires to be heard?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No!

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] 15 minutes when he desires it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the issues involved in this contested-election case from the second Michigan district are very simple. They are none the less important on that account.

There are no disputes in this record concerning the essential facts in the case. The question which will be presented to you for decision is a question of law and of justice. Concerning that question, gentlemen, I am not aware that there is any difference of opinion among the members of your committee who have had the case under consideration. Your committee has given this case very careful and, I believe, impartial consideration. And in that connection I hope the House will pardon me if I refer for a moment to a statement made in the Washington Post this morning to the effect that the Democratic caucus which met in this Chamber on yesterday evening had reached the conclusion that the sitting Member should be unseated and that the contestant in this case should be seated. I am sure I need not say to experienced Members of this body that such a statement as that is without foundation in fact. Everybody here knows that no Member on either side of this House would be bound by caucus action in a matter of this character, and consequently his own experience would discredit a statement of that sort made in the public press. I only pause to say that not only was this matter not considered in the Democratic caucus, but it was never suggested for consideration and never mentioned for any such purpose.

In this election district there were over 50,000 votes cast for Congress. On the face of the returns the sitting Member had 49 majority. A contest arose concerning the returns from a single precinct, and it happened that in the subsequent progress of that contest these gentlemen, by agreement among themselves, recounted practically all of the ballots cast in the congressional district. And by such agreement they were able to reach a conclusion concerning every vote cast in the election with the exception of those cast in two precincts, in which precincts 1,280 votes were cast out of a total of more than 50,000.

By the recount which was conducted by these gentlemen, where the legal effect of marking the ballot was construed in accordance with the local law of Michigan, the contestant, up to the point where the two contested precincts were reached, had 46 majority. I hope the House will keep that in mind—that by agreement, after an actual count of the ballots, 46 majority was ascertained in favor of the contestant in this case. That left two precincts in dispute—the first precinct of the second ward of the city of Jackson, where 703 ballots were cast, and the second precinct of the sixth ward of the city of Jackson, where 577 ballots were cast.

The contestee and the contestant were unable to agree as to what was a proper disposition of the returns from these two precincts. Your committee has found that if you accept the official returns from these two precincts as they left the hands of the election officers, Mr. Beakes, the contestant, has a majority of the ballots cast in the district; that if you reject the returns in toto of these two precincts, the effect is to elect the contestant; and that if you accept a recount of the ballots cast at these precincts the effect is still the same—to elect Mr. Beakes.

Mr. DYER. If that is the fact, will the gentleman state why Mr. Beakes was not given the certificate of election in the first instance?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Because by mutual consent they had a recount of the more than 50,000 votes, and in that recount they found other mistakes of the election officers, and the net result of it is, as I have stated to the gentleman from Missouri—if he will make the calculation he will see that I am not mistaken—that if the two precincts in dispute are treated in either one of the three ways suggested, the effect will be to seat the contestant.

Mr. DYER. That is on the theory that we accept the recount. Is not that the fact?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I can not understand any theory based on our unwillingness to accept facts the parties themselves have agreed upon.

Mr. DYER. I do not want to take the gentleman's time unnecessarily, but as I understand it from the gentleman's statement the contestee was elected upon the face of the returns as officially made?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. By 49 votes.

Mr. DYER. And then, after a recount was had, the contestant was shown to be elected on the recount. Is that correct?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. When a recount had been had in all the precincts of this district with the exception of two, by agreement between these parties and their counsel, the contestant had 46 majority as a net result.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Both parties were represented in that, were they?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Represented in person and by counsel. Continuing, gentlemen, I repeat that if the official returns from these two precincts in dispute are accepted, the contestant in this case is entitled to be seated. If the returns are rejected the contestant is entitled to the seat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does that apply to the returns from the second precinct, sixth ward, where one of the ballot boxes was held up for four months?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If the official returns from that precinct and from the first precinct of the second ward, which is the other one in dispute, are accepted the contestant is elected. If the official returns from both are rejected, the contestant is elected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The report of the majority sets forth a peculiar circumstance, to which I want to call the gentleman's attention. It says:

> The situation was still further complicated by the fact that when the work of the election ended at the second precinct the inspectors failed to return to the clerk's office along with the rest of the returns one of the ballot boxes containing a considerable number of the ballots, and left it in the polling booth uncovered and unlocked (though the polling booth was locked), where it remained until it was discovered by the clerk four months afterwards, when he went to prepare for another election. He, of course, covered and locked the box, and carried it to the clerk's office for safe keeping.

That is a peculiar condition developing in an election case, a ballot box remaining uncovered and unlocked for four months, and being produced in evidence later on, I presume. When the gentleman says the contestant would be elected anyhow, does his statement cover the entire number of ballots found in this ballot box, which was not produced for four months?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. My statement was intended to apply to all the ballots cast in that precinct, and to all the ballots cast in the other contested precincts—the first precinct of the second ward.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Confusion is referred to in the recount.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. There was no formal recount in that precinct. Both sides objected, but the ballots were examined by both sides and a record kept of the result.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman said there was an agreement between the parties for a recount.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. But when they came to that precinct they could not agree, and hence the matter is here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that precinct is thrown out, would the contestant be elected?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If that precinct is thrown out altogether, and if the House decides that the confusion which existed in the first precinct of the second ward should not be regarded, and accept the official returns, which everybody says is wrong, then the sitting Member is entitled to the seat, and that is the only way in which it would be adjudged him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is to say, when the circumstance of the ballot box not discovered for four months is taken into consideration, then there would have been a chance for the contestee if there had not been confusion in respect to the ballot.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. While there was no recount in pursuance of the law under which they were operating of the ballots in the abandoned box, as a matter of fact they did inspect the ballots and actually count them; and if you accept the recount, which the committee does not think ought to be accepted, the contestant is entitled to the seat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that is the finding of the committee?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HELM. In the first precinct of the second ward Mr. BACON carried that precinct, according to the official returns, by 118 votes.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HELM. In the second precinct of the sixth ward—and that is the precinct the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred to—Mr. Beakes carried that precinct by exactly 118 votes. So that the first precinct of the second ward and the second precinct of the sixth ward exactly balance each other. The gentleman from Virginia is correct in saying that whether you accept the official returns in the first precinct of the second ward and the second precinct of the sixth ward, or whether you reject them, Mr. Beakes has overcome the majority of the sitting Member of 49 votes and has been elected by a majority of 46 votes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will pardon me further, the holding up of the ballot box for four months is a suspicious circumstance in a contest. It might have been held up for the very purpose of meeting some such situation as this.

Mr. HELM. In either case whether the ballots had not been properly preserved, then you necessarily fall back to the official count, which was 118 majority for Beakes, and if there was any irregularity in the first precinct of the second ward you fall back to the original or official count. There were irregularities in the first precinct of the second ward and in the second precinct of the sixth ward. Mr. BACON carried one and Mr. Beakes carried the other by precisely the same majority of votes, and the conditions prevailing in the first or the second are almost identical.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia if he will not explain the unusual—I will not say suspicious—evening up of the vote in the manner stated by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to carry out a line of thought which I left when the gentleman from Pennsylvania interrupted me. I will complete that and then address myself to the question he has in mind. At the risk of repetition I want to say again that if these two precincts in controversy are accepted in accordance with the official returns, the contestant is elected. If they are rejected in toto, the contestant is elected. But I will go a step further and say that if the recount—the actual, physical recount—which was had in the two contested precincts is accepted, the contestant is elected.

There is but one way in which these returns can be so treated as to give the sitting Member a title to a seat on this floor. That is by an exceedingly fantastic and artistic manipulation. You have got to take the returns of the first precinct of the second ward, which everybody knows are incorrect, which the election officers themselves appearing before the county canvassing board in a written statement declare to be incorrect, because they had made a mistake.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only a portion of the election board certified to that—four out of six.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Wisconsin is the most punctilious man I know of in the House, a most careful man about small details. I pay him a compliment in that respect and do not mean to criticize him. He has read a part of the record, but he has not read it all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman made a statement that the election officials of the first precinct of the second ward had certified that there was an irregularity.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. They certified that there was a mistake, not an irregularity.

Mr. STAFFORD. A mistake; and I ask him whether all the election officers certified that a mistake had been made. Was it not four out of six?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If the gentleman will turn to the record——

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me say to the gentleman that I have tried ever since August to obtain a copy of the record, but have not succeeded.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If the gentleman will turn to a copy of the brief which I saw in his hands a few moments ago, or turn to a copy of the report, he will find the written statement signed by four inspectors of the election who acted in that precinct. If he will read the record, he will find that a fifth inspector corroborated that statement. He will find there that there appeared before the board of canvassers Mr. Lewis, a fifth inspector, who said that a mistake had been made in that precinct. They were the five inspectors who acted in the first precinct of the second ward. So that while I may have been technically inaccurate in saying that they signed a written statement presented to the board of canvassers, the exact fact is that four signed the written statement and the other appeared in person before the board corroborating it.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman tell the committee if these five members who said there was a mistake specified the basis of that mistake and how it occurred?

Mr. LANGLEY. And the extent of the mistake?

Mr. DILLON. And the particulars of it?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I am afraid, gentlemen, I shall have to take more time than the rule allows me to answer all these questions.

Mr. DILLON. The point I am making is whether this is a mere conclusion or whether it is a conclusion based upon a statement of the facts.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the written communication to which I refer is a communication signed by four of the inspectors of that precinct and is addressed to the board of county canvassers, which met a few weeks after the election, and is as follows:

> We, the undersigned inspectors of election of the first precinct, second ward, of the city of Jackson, in said county, at the general election held November 7, 1916, at which election State, county, and district officers were voted for, including candidates for Congress, hereby certify that in preparing the statement in duplicate showing the whole number of votes cast for candidates for Representative in Congress, and the number of votes received by each of such candidates, which statement was certified by the inspectors of election for delivery to the proper officers, as provided by statute, a mistake was made in that all the votes cast for the candidates for Representative in Congress were not included therein, and, through inadvertence and mistake, votes cast for each of such candidates were omitted from said statement; and that statement of the result of the election in said precinct, so far as it relates to the office of Represenative in Congress, does not correctly represent the vote cast by the electors in that it does not show the whole number of votes cast for each of the candidates for said office—the votes not so counted aggregating 70 or more votes.
>
> CHAS. F. BARCKUS.
> GEORGE E. VAN CAMP.
> GIFFORD BILLMAN.
> HENRY MARRIOTT.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. A statement to the same effect was made by Mr. Lewis, the fifth inspector, before the board of canvassers in person. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LANGLEY. Did the committee in its investigations determine how many of those omitted votes were cast for the one candidate for Congress and how many for the other?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It did. I say to the gentleman further that not only did the election officers who conducted this election say a mistake of seventy-odd votes had been made in the returns, but the counsel for the contestee, present himself before that board to represent the contestee, stated in emphatic terms that it was obvious to everyone that a mistake had been made, and that he was not there to deny the fact. On page 50 of the record counsel for the contestee says in reference to these returns:

> There is no question but that an error has been made. I don't want you to think I am claiming there has not been a mistake made. I have the best of reasons and grounds for believing there has been a grave mistake, and I say Mr. Beakes and Mr. Bacon are entitled to every vote cast for them. (Rec., p. 50.)

Mr. Flowers, one of the board of county canvassers, in response to a situation as obvious as this, commenting upon it, said:

> It is an unfortunate error, and I admit it.

Mr. DILLON. What I was directing my inquiry to was how did this error occur?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I am going to try to explain that. Counsel for contestee in this case is asking the House to accept the official returns from that precinct which the officers of election say are wrong, which he himself said were wrong, and which the board of county canvassers said are wrong, and which, in their certificate to the State board of canvassers, they call attention to as being wrong. The proposition is to accept those returns when they are conceded to be wrong by everyone, and so declared to be by the election officers who made them. Gentlemen inquire how much they were wrong, and how did they come to be wrong. There was no prima facie evidence on which the returns could be corrected. The election officers were functus officio as to the matter when they had signed them. They could not recall from memory exactly what their mistake was. Three of them put it seventy-odd votes, and the other two could not agree as to the exact number, so that apparently under the Michigan law the county board of canvassers, possessing only ministerial power, had no opportunity for the correction of those returns. There was but one remedy under these circumstances, and that was a recount of the ballots, which were the best evidence as to what was the intention of the electors in that election. Your committee thought that under the circumstances these ballots ought to be recounted. The only objection to the recount was the suggestion of counsel for the contestee that they had not been properly preserved, consequently that they were not the identical ballots which were voted in the election, and that they were not in the same condition they were in when they were voted. In that statement your committee did not concur, for the reason that they found no sufficient evidence upon which to base the assumption that any change had taken place in the condition of those ballots or in their identity.

The objection was raised to the recount in the brief of the contestee's counsel where it was suggested either that the ballot boxes were not sealed in accordance with the Michigan law, or, if so sealed, that the seals had been subsequently tampered with and prior to the time the boxes were produced before the county board of canvassers a fortnight later. I want to say to you that you may read that record in vain to find where any human being has stated those boxes were ever sealed differently than in the manner in which they appeared when presented to the county board.

The Michigan statute does require the ballot box to be so sealed that it can not be opened without breaking the seal. The boxes in question were locked and sealed, but not in strict conformity with the legal requirement as to the sealing. After being unlocked they could be opened without breaking any seal. It is conceded that the boxes had seals on top of the lids over the apertures through which the ballots were deposited. It is conceded that they were properly locked. It is likewise conceded that if you had a key and could unlock the box you could get in without breaking the seal. Counsel for contestee has suggested that there is evidence in the record that these boxes were differently sealed when they left the polls; that in addition to the seals which appeared on them when they were brought before the board of county canvassers they were sealed also over the locks in the first instance. No single witness whose testimony is recorded has stated that there was any other seal than that which appeared upon it. The deputy clerk said that he thought that they were differently sealed; but when cross-examined it turned out that the deputy clerk was not there when the boxes were received at the clerk's office, and he was not positive that he could make any statement in reference to the seals.

One of the election officers stated that the boxes were sealed and when asked how they were sealed he said one of the other officers sealed them on top and "I sealed them with a lock and key," showing that he was talking about locking, and that was the thing in his mind when he was discussing the question of the seal. I have not the time to point out the names of these witnesses and read the language to you. I must content myself with telling you that that is the substance of their statements; and if you will read the record carefully I am satisfied you will find nothing to disagree in substance with the statement I have tried to present.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I notice it says here that in one of these precincts the basis of the contest was on some sheets that were made of sample ballots, which was discovered by some one by the name of Barckus, who climbed into a window.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I would say to the gentleman that the committee has absolutely paid no attention to the tally sheet, but has eliminated it entirely from all consideration in this case.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does that precinct have anything to do with the result?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That is one of the contested precincts; but in its findings concerning it the committee reached no conclusion based in whole or in part upon the alleged tally sheet referred to by you.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Is it a fact that the official tally sheets in this particular precinct were made upon the backs of sample ballots?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That is a question that is absolutely academic and immaterial. I would say to the gentleman that a piece of yellow paper alleged to have been used as a tally sheet in place of the official tally sheet, containing certain figures and other memoranda, did figure in the record and is filed as an exhibit in this case.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Was the official tally sheet in that precinct made upon the back of a sample ballot?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Upon which the committee bases its action?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No; that official tally sheet is here; it is in the RECORD; it is an exhibit. Now, gentlemen, the only real objection to a recount and a correction of this mistake which the election officers said they had made, which everybody confesses has been made, rests upon the fact that the ballot boxes from these precincts were carried to the clerk's office on the afternoon of the day after the election and, instead of being put at once under lock and key, were placed in an outer room or lobby of the clerk's office immediately in front of the clerk's desk along with all the other ballot boxes from that city, some 38 in number, through which the public passed during office hours, and kept in that position from the afternoon of one day until the forenoon or the afternoon of another day. On the assumption that other seals had been on those boxes, and that somebody had gone to the clerk's office during this interim and broken those seals—about which there is not a scintilla of testimony in this record—you are asked to hold that these ballots had been tampered with, that they were not the identical ballots cast in the election, and that their condition was not the same, and hence that they ought not to be recounted for the purpose of correcting this mistake. Now, gentlemen, that is the proposition as far as the first precinct of the second ward is concerned. You are asked to assume a fact which does not exist, and from such assumption to infer a fraud and thereby discredit the returns of honorable officials as evidence in this case.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I desire to ask the gentleman if the official returns from this first precinct——

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The one we are discussing?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; the one the gentleman is discussing—were accepted as being the proper returns from that precinct, and your findings on the other precincts as they are, would Mr. Beakes be elected?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Undoubtedly, sir, by 46 votes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In other words, if you would concede to Mr. Bacon what he claims in this precinct, it would still elect Mr. Beakes?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. By 46 votes.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. JUUL. I wish to ask the gentleman if any of the four inspectors mentioned a little while ago as signing a certain certificate, or all of them, were responsible for the safe-keeping of the ballot box that apparently was left in one of the polling places?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. On the conclusion of the canvassing of the votes, which was 3 o'clock of the afternoon of the day after the election, two police patrolmen called in a wagon for those ballot boxes. Two election inspectors took the ballot boxes, got into the wagon of the police patrol, and carried them to the clerk's office and delivered them, together with the key, to the clerk of the city of Jackson.

Mr. JUUL. If the gentleman will pardon me, that hardly answers my question. What I want to know is, there was a certitficate signed by four inspectors. Were any of those four inspectors connected with the polling place where the ballot box was left, according to the statement here?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No; that is a different precinct entirely.

Mr. JUUL. That is what I wanted to get clear.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It has nothing to do with the other.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. As to the 70 missing ballots, were they found in the election booth or were they in the ballot box and were not counted?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The 70?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I am very glad the gentleman asked that question, as I had about abandoned that stage of the discussion. There was a recount had of these ballots first on the 22d day of November. The office of coroner was in dispute, and in the coroner's election a recount was asked for, and incidental to the recount for the office of coroner these gentlemen, the contestant and the contestee, and their counsel, were in attendance, keeping tab upon those ballots as they were recounted for coroner.

And then they discovered for the first time not only that it was a mistake of 70 votes, but that there had been a mistake of 88 votes in the returns for Congress; that Mr. Beakes, the contestant, was entitled to 87 more votes than the official returns had given him, and Mr. Bacon was entitled to 1 more vote than the official returns had given him. Your committee has reported, gentlemen, that under these circumstances the recount held on the 22d day of February of those same ballots, before the notary and in the presence of these same gentlemen and their counsel, with a result agreed upon among themselves under Michigan law, showing a gain of 87 for the contestant and 1 for the contestee, should stand in lieu of the official returns—that the official returns should be corrected to that extent.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. As I understand, your committee arrived at the conclusion that if you reject the ballots of these two particular precincts as being tinctured with fraud and irregularity, then the contestant must prevail, and if you do not reject them, then the contestee must prevail? Am I correct?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No. If you accept the official returns from both precincts, the contestant still prevails.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. HARDY. Am I correct in this conclusion which I draw? If you omit to add those 87 votes for Mr. Beakes and 1 vote for Mr. Bacon, then is it not a fact that in the congressional race

Beakes is short by 80 or 90 votes? In other words, those votes had to be added or else the vote for Congressman was short?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I thank the gentleman for that suggestion. I neglected to state to the House that if you add these 87 votes to the returns for the contestant you bring his vote up to the average of the vote received by the candidates of his party on all the rest of the ticket. The Democratic presidential electors at the first precinct of the second ward received on the average of 310 votes. The Republican electors in that precinct received on the average of 354 votes. If you add your 87 votes found by those who conducted the recount to have been omitted, you will give contestant 329 votes in that precinct, a few in excess of the number of votes received by the electors of his party.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman said a few moments ago that they were not counted.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Where the error had been made and they were left out.

Mr. WHEELER. They were not counted?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. In the official returns from that precinct the candidate of the Democratic Party for Congress ran some 80 votes behind the rest of his ticket. In the official returns the candidate of the Republican Party ran neck and neck with the rest of his party candidates. If you correct the official returns in accordance with this recount you place the Democratic candidate on the same footing with the other candidates of his party in that precinct.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the committee just assume that those votes were cast for Mr. Beakes or does the ballot show they were cast?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I am little understood if I have not made it plain that on two separate occasions—once on the 22d of November, 1916, in the presence of a notary public and in the presence of the county board of canvassers—a recount of those ballots was had for the office of coroner. That was attended by these gentlemen and their counsel. Incidentally with the recount for coronor they inspected the vote for Congress and ascertained that, instead of the official returns being correct, Mr. Beakes had not received in that return 87 votes to which he was entitled, and Mr. Bacon had not received one vote to which he was entitled.

Mr. LANGLEY. Was that a precinct where the ballot box was not turned in?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. LITTLE. As I understand it, one man had 49 majority and one had 46, on your finding?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No, sir. On the finding of your committee the contestant has 132 majority.

Mr. LITTLE. Eighty-six of his gain was in the first precinct——

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Of the second ward.

Mr. LITTLE. Where was the rest of the gain made?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Between these gentlemen they had a recount of over 50,000 ballots.

Mr. LITTLE. You might just specify where the other 46 were gained.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. There were countless precincts in that district, some in one county and some in another. When they got up to these two precincts, by mutual agreement, Mr. Beakes was 42 ahead.

Mr. LITTLE. Where did he gain the 46?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If you take the 49 which the official returns gave to the contestant——

Mr. LITTLE. You are not able to specify the precincts?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The statement I made was the net result of the losses and gains over the district.

Mr. LITTLE. You can not at the moment give the precinct in which he gained the 46?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I can give you the net result, but not the particular precincts.

Mr. ROSE. Before this recount was made to which you refer, does the evidence before your committee show where the ballot boxes were kept during the interim?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. With the city clerk, under lock and key, with the exception of the afternoon of the day after the election and the noon of the day after that, during which they were kept in the clerk's office, through which the public passed.

Mr. ROSE. To which they had access?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I take it the clerk's office was a public place and the public had that kind of access.

Mr. ROSE. Were they kept in accordance with the local law of Michigan?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The local law of Michigan requires the clerk shall have the custody of the ballot boxes and that they shall be preserved by him, but I do not know for how long a time.

Mr. ROSE. Was it shown to the satisfaction of the committee that no examination of the ballot boxes was permitted in the meantime?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The clerk testified on oath—he swore—that since they were delivered to him he was sure that nobody had access to them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I assume from the chairman's statement that these 87 ballots that were not counted were straight Democratic ballots. Is that the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that I have no information about that, because I was not present, of course, at the recount. I can not answer that question. I do not know.

Mr. WHEELER. In your statement you say that if those 87 votes were added to the Democratic electors they would make 210 or 229——

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Three hundred and twenty-nine for the Democratic candidate for Congress; the ballots were not examined as to vote for President.

Mr. WHEELER. Or 329; whatever it was?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes; 329.

Mr. WHEELER. I assume, then, that those ballots were straight Democratic ballots.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I think most of them were.

Mr. WHEELER. It might be easy to make a mistake if there should be 20 or 30 or 40, but an odd number could hardly be lost and not counted for a Congressman. They might be lost for coroner, or something of that kind.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. Has the gentleman any information on that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Virginia has used all but 15 minutes of his time and that those 15 minutes had been allotted to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER]. Does the gentleman wish longer to continue the use of his time?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 30 minutes. He has spent most of his time in giving information to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A request for unanimous consent is made that the gentleman proceed for 30 minutes. Is that it?

Mr. CRISP. The request is that his time should be extended for 30 minutes, which would give him 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PURNELL. There was so much confusion in the Chamber that I did not hear what questions and answers were made; but after the 87 votes were found, that were added to the total for Mr. Beakes, and the 1 for Mr. Bacon, how did their votes compare with the votes of other candidates on their own ticket?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. They ran substantially the same.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. As I understand it, if those votes had not been counted there would have been 87 voters in that precinct who did not vote for Congress at all. Is that correct?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman gives the impression that the Democratic candidate for Congress is the only one on the Democratic ticket whose vote falls far behind the vote cast for the head of the ticket. I think that is not true. Is it not a fact that the votes for county treasurer and probate judge and the vote of other candidates on the Democratic ticket run 60 or 70 behind the votes for the head of the ticket?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I did not examine the returns for local candidates, because there were so many local issues involved in the election of local candidates. I only examined the tickets of candidates for Federal offices.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that my investigation and my recollection lead me to believe that the votes for Democratic county candidates were approximately the same as the votes reported for the Democratic candidate for Congress.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that, realizing——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That fact alone, standing alone, that the Democratic candidate for Congress received a small vote, does not indicate that all of his votes were not counted for him.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I did not mean to give the impression that such a conclusion would follow from that fact alone. I was comparing the votes of the candidate for Congress with the votes of the candidates of his party on the Federal ticket. I was not comparing it with the votes of other candidates for local offices, in which personalities were so likely to prevail.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is not this the fact, as to that situation, not that the 87 votes were not counted by the judges of election but that the tabulation of 87 votes, so far as it related to Mr. Beakes, was not added to his other votes for that precinct?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I think that is an accurate statement of the case. The 87 votes were not included in the returns of the election officers.

Now, your committee thinks, gentlemen, that these ballot boxes had been properly cared for. It found no evidence that they had been tampered with. It saw no reason why there should not be a recount in this precinct, and there is no shadow of doubt as to the result of the recount; and it seemed to your committee that it would be a monstrous proposition to accept the official returns from a precinct where the election officers had appeared in public and declared them to be wrong, where the county board found they were wrong, where the counsel for the contestee himself had pronounced them wrong, and which no man who has read this record believes to-day correctly represents the will of the electors. Under such conditions, it seemed to your committee that there was but one thing in law and justice to do, and that was to accept this recount, conducted under the solemnity of law, and of the correctness of which there is no shadow of doubt.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the officials knew that the election returns were wrong, why did they not correct them before the certificate of election was given?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Nobody on this earth, except the Pope, is supposed to be infallible, and these officers made a mistake.

Mr. KNUTSON. Was not this case carried to the courts of Michigan?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The board of election officers came together before the contest was completed and stated to the board that they had made a mistake and asked to have it corrected. That was no crime.

Mr. RAMSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEY. Assuming as a fact that the recount in first precinct, second ward, of Jackson City showed Mr. Beakes to be entitled to 87 more votes, and then taking into consideration this part of your record [reading]:

> The evidence shows a chapter of accidents at this and the third precinct in the same ward, which resulted in the admixture of the ballots of the two precincts in well-nigh hopeless confusion and ultimately created a situation very hard to untangle.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. We are not talking about that precinct.

Mr. RAMSEY. I know that there are two precincts which resulted in a Democratic success, the ballots of which were in a well-nigh hopeless confusion and ultimately created a situation very hard to untangle. We assume that Mr. Beakes was entitled to 87 additional votes in the other precincts, and if the two precincts were thrown out, who would be elected?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Beakes, the contestant, by 46 majority.

Mr. RAMSEY. How does the gentleman arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. For the reason which has already been stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM], that in the precinct which I have just been discussing the official returns gave the contestee, Mr. Bacon, 118 majority. If you take the other precinct and go by the official returns, the contestant has 118 majority there, so that they neutralize each other and leave the thing where it was before.

Mr. RAMSEY. Permit me to call your attention to the report. Mr. Bacon received 211 votes in one precinct, Mr. Beakes 329, a difference of 118 in favor of Mr. Beakes.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. That is the one we are just talking about.

Mr. RAMSEY. And in the other Mr. Bacon received 93 and Mr. Beakes, 138, which is a difference of 45, the total being 163. Now, if these two precincts are so entangled and unintelligible as to be unable to be counted, and if they are eliminated, who would be elected? Mr. Bacon, would he not?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that the third precinct, to which he referred, which was once in dispute, has been eliminated from the contest by agreement of counsel and by agreement of the parties, so that the third precinct is no longer involved in this contest.

Mr. RAMSEY. But the language of your report is that it is so unintelligible as hardly able to be counted.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. If the gentleman will read that carefully, and will read what follows, unless I have failed to make myself clear, I do not think there can be any misapprehension.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am going by your report.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I wish you would go a little further. If you will follow it a little further, you will find I have not made any such statement as that.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] said there was a discrepancy between the vote for judge of probate and some of the county officers. Is it not a fact that the attorney for Mr. Bacon appeared before the committee, and did the attorney for Mr. Bacon on that occasion make any contention that any of the Democratic nominees had run behind the ticket, as the returns in the congressional district showed?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I do not think the point was raised at all, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Now, gentlemen, I have tried to make myself clear in connection with this precinct known as the first precinct of the second ward, and I have stated—imperfectly, I am sure, in the time which has been allowed me—the reasons why your committee think that the recount of the ballots in this precinct should be accepted in lieu of the official returns, which everybody conceded to be wrong.

Now, I come to the second precinct of the sixth ward, which is the precinct in which the ballot box was left at the polls unlocked and uncovered for a period of four months, until it was discovered there by the clerk who went to prepare for another election. I want the House to understand that the election officers at this precinct went on duty at 7 o'clock on the morning of the election, receiving in all 577 ballots during the day; that the polls closed at 8 o'clock of that day; that they sat up all night canvassing these returns. There were nine different things voted for at that election in the city of Jackson—bond issues, constitutional amendments, and various other propositions. They sat all election day and all that night and all the next day until 3 o'clock in the afternoon canvassing those returns. Now, they had at that polling place certainly as many as four ballot boxes, one big iron can 5 feet high, the record shows, in which the ballots were deposited unassorted as they were received during the day. There were three other ballot boxes in which the ballots were deposited when they had been canvassed and straightened out and folded together in preparation to be returned to the clerk's office.

There were no complaints as to the conduct of the election officers at that precinct. There were six of them in all, and, as far as this record discloses, men of good character. One of them, who seems to have been the leading officer, had been a resident of that town for 25 years. I do not know anything about their politics, except that the statement was made in oral argument before your committee by one of the counsel that nearly all these election officers in the city of Jackson were Republicans. It does not make any difference to me whether they were or whether they were not. As far as this record discloses they were men of intelligence and good character.

When the patrol wagon came from the clerk's office to receive these ballot boxes—on the afternoon of the day after the election, these men having been on duty thirty-odd hours—along with the big ballot box, which it seems in the city of Jackson is allowed to remain within the polling place, they left one of the boxes in which canvassed returns had been placed uncovered and unlocked. I do not know how many ballots were in that box. When months after they took the ballots out of this box they emptied them onto a table, without first counting the number, into a common pile of ballots from this and another precinct; so, on account of the confusion thus arising, it was not possible afterwards to determine how many ballots had been in that particular box which had been unlocked and uncovered. But the fact is that one of the boxes was left at the polling place under the circumstances I have described until the 6th of March following, when the clerk went there to prepare for another election.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will allow me, that is not the place where the man came in at the window and got the tally sheet?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Oh, no; a different place. Now, the official returns from this precinct had been made up. Under the Michigan law, when the polls have closed the straight party tickets are separated and placed by themselves, and then the split and mixed tickets to themselves. They have three kinds in Michigan. The Democratic ballots are segregated in one pile, the Republican ballots in another, the Socialist ballots in another, and then the mixed and split tickets are put together in another pile. The public is invited in under the Michigan law to see the canvassing of the vote. Everything is done openly and aboveboard, as it should be.

Mr. LANGLEY. Was it developed whether any Republican ballots were crossed for the Democratic candidate for Congress?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It appeared from the testimony that nearly every precinct had split tickets, which were tickets marked in the party column and then separate cross marks made opposite the names of particular candidates of another party.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have heard of cases where after the election was over they took the straight ballots and crossed them for certain candidates of the other party. Of course, they do not do this in Kentucky [laughter], but it has been done.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I do not see how that could be done in this case. The votes are counted in public, canvassed in public, the returns signed in public, and the result openly announced.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course, it would have to be done surreptitiously and not at the time of the public inspection required by law.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It seems to me the Michigan law has gone as far as any law can go to secure a faithful canvass and certification of the returns. At this precinct the Michigan law was complied with as far as the record discloses.

Now, the return of that precinct awarded the contestee 211 votes and awarded the contestant 329 votes. The votes in this particular precinct were never sought to be recounted by the contestant. The contestee in this case asked for the recount. When the ballots were produced he discovered that one of the ballot boxes containing some of these ballots had been left in the polling place for four months and not returned to the clerk's office, as required by law. Thereupon counsel for the contestant said, "These ballots have not been preserved in accordance with the law and I object to a recount." Whereupon, the contestee's counsel acceding to that proposition, they both agreed that there could not be a recount of that precinct, for the reason that the ballots had not been preserved in accordance with the law.

Now, both sides agreeing that there could not be a recount, what are you going to do with the returns of that precinct? There were no irregularities there except the fact that the ballot box was left. There was no proof of fraud, unless the mere leaving of the ballot box constituted proof of fraud. I would hate mightily to charge a man with committing a fraud who had been at work 35 hours, who when the time came to go home had simply left one of several ballot boxes behind him at the polls. Especially so if, when I came to examine the box, I could find no internal evidence of fraud. Under the Michigan ballot I do not see how those returns could well have been doctored without leaving conclusive proof of the deed.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. If this precinct had been counted it would have given the contestant 118 more votes?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes; if you accept the official returns he has 118 more than if you do not accept them.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Were these ballots crossed at the top of the Republican column or the Democratic column?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I have no knowledge as to these particular ballots in this box.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman does not know whether they were straight or split ballots?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It is more likely that they were straight Democratic tickets.

Mr. JAMES. But there is no evidence of that?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand, Mr. Beakes got the full Democratic vote there.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Beakes did not lose any votes there.

Mr. LANGLEY. Unless they were Republican ballots, afterwards fraudulently crossed for him.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Here is what would follow from that suggestion. There were so many Democratic presidential ballots cast and so many Republican presidential ballots cast at that precinct. I forget the exact figures returned, but if you will add them together I think you will find that there was not sufficient margin of split or mixed ballots left to make it possible by subsequent doctoring to alter materially the vote of either candidate for Congress.

Now, if the purpose of leaving the ballot box at the polling place was to perpetrate a fraud, I think you will agree with me that in this case it was gone about in a most haphazard way.

If fraud had really been the aim, the chances are that the ballot box would not only have been locked but sealed most carefully according to all the law, and its contents secured against all outside interference. The mere fact the box was left there, open and exposed, so that anybody could see it is strong presumptive evidence, to my mind, that there was no fraudulent purpose in leaving it there. Had fraud been really meditated its perpetrators would hardly have abandoned the work of their hands and left it to the uncertainties of fate in a remote corner of the city where it might never be found; but, on the contrary, would have found a way to land the doctored ballots at the clerk's office, there to be counted in case of need.

As I view this matter—and I think I speak for the committee—the leaving of this ballot box was nothing in the world but an accident, an act of forgetfulness on the part of sleepy men who had been working for thirty-odd hours.

Now, remember that this is the only irregularity in the conduct of the election officers at that precinct.

Remember there is no other evidence of improper conduct on their part. Remember also that when the contents of this box were gone into and examined it was found that not only every ballot was there that ought to be there but each one bore the initials of one or the other election officers; that the package of unused ballots which under the Michigan law was required to be returned to the clerk's office was there; and that it so happened that the next number on the package of unused ballots, 577 ballots having been voted, turned out to be exactly what it ought to have been—578. That was the number marked on the package of unused ballots. This of itself, to my mind, is proof almost as strong as Holy Writ that nothing unlawful had happened to the contents of that box during the four months it remained at that polling place, and that these returns had been undisturbed by any hands during that period. What, then, are you going to do with the returns from that precinct? The contestant thinks and your committee thinks that, under the circumstances, the simple failure to return one of the ballot boxes to the clerk's office does not discredit or invalidate the returns made by the election officers. Your committee thinks these returns ought to be received. The impression made upon the mind of some by the circumstances we have been discussing may be the same that has been made upon the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] who characterized it as a "suspicious circumstance." If the circumstance is so suspicious to your mind as to discredit these returns, what in law and in logic should you do with them? If the mere failure of these gentlemen to return the ballot box to the clerk's office so discredits the work of their hands that you can not accept their returns, why, in common sense and logic, you ought to reject the returns in toto and throw out the precinct.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is the law, as a matter of fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARD). The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I want to ask one question along the line of the possibility of tampering with the ballots in that box which the gentleman has just been discussing. If after the returns had been made the ballots had been improperly doctored there would have been a variance then between what the ballots showed and the original returns?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And the only way anything improper could have been effected to compass the advantage of Mr. Beakes would have been in this fashion, for the original returns to have been fraudulent and then subsequently the ballots doctored so as to make them conform to the returns?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I think that is undoubtedly true.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. May I ask one other question? Is not this a fact in the case, that five election officers at the precinct where this 87-vote error occurred all agree that there was an honest inadvertent error committed with respect to those 87 votes and that Mr. Beakes is entitled to have them counted in his favor?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. All agree as to the error.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I am not quite sure that I have followed the gentleman in regard to the ballots in the first precinct of the second ward. As I understand, the ballot box abandoned was in the second precinct of the second ward.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. If we assume that the gentleman's calculation regarding the vote in the first of the second to be correct, and we throw out the second of the sixth, and then assume that the agreement was correct that Beakes had 46 majority outside of these two precincts, what result would you have?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The result of the calculation about which the gentleman inquires would be to leave the contestant elected by 14 votes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I did not quite get that. Will the gentleman please state it again?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The gentleman asked if the report of the committee is accepted as to the first precinct of the second ward, which was the first topic I undertook to present to you, and if the second precinct of the sixth ward, which we are now discussing, be rejected in toto, what would be the result upon the parties to this contest. My answer is that the result would be the election of the contestant by 14 votes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman arrives at that by finding that Mr. Beakes had a majority in the first of the second of 118?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No; not 118.

Mr. CRISP. I understand the gentleman to state that in the recount of the entire district the contestee and the contestant and their counsel agree that Mr. Beakes had a majority of 46, leaving only in dispute these two voting precincts in Jackson, Mich.?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. And if you accept the returns of those districts is Mr. Beakes elected?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. And if you accept the recount is Mr. Beakes elected?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. And if you reject the vote is Mr. Beakes elected?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes. If the official returns from these two precincts in controversy be accepted, the contestant is elected. The gentleman from Georgia also asks if the official returns from these two precincts be rejected, and they be discredited in toto, whether the contestant is elected and I answer yes. He asked also if a recount be made of all the ballots in controversy in these two precincts, if the result would show the election of the contestant, and I again answer yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman think of the general proposition of establishing as a precedent the recounting by Congress of votes taken from a ballot box that was not discovered for four months after election and which was not sealed at all?

It is not sealing a box by locking it. It was locked only; it was not sealed at all; and putting a seal over the slot in the top in which there were deposited the votes did not seal the box at all. It did not have a Yale lock at all. It had a lock that could have been easily opened and that was accessible to anybody that might desire to change the votes. I am not saying they were changed, but there was an opportunity there for the greatest sort of fraud. Of course you can not prove the fraud. There was nobody who saw anybody do anything to it, and perhaps they did not, but nevertheless this box was not sealed at all. It was locked and not sealed.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. It was neither covered, nor sealed, nor locked, but wide open.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And left there for four months?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. From the 7th day of November until the 6th day of March following. The gentlemen asked what I think of this as a precedent, and I want to answer it in the language of the committee report:

> Both sides agree that they could not have a lawful recount of that portion of the ballots of the second precinct (and being mingled with those of other boxes they could not be separately identified) which were left in the voting booth after the election. And in that view we concur; for, though the ballots bore every internal evidence of not having been disturbed, yet would it be a hazardous experiment and dangerous precedent to permit a recount of returns unsecured and without lawful custody for four months.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, will the gentleman permit me right there, because some people consent to what the gentleman himself and his report characterizes as a hazardous experiment, does the gentleman think that we ought to adopt a hazardous experiment, thereby establishing a precedent? And another thing. If the official returns of those two precincts are taken, then the contestee is elected? Is that so?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. No, sir; not elected. That is certainly not true, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I misunderstood the question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the committee does not propose to have any recount of those returns, and it does not think it ought to be recounted, but I state to the gentleman——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I misunderstood the gentleman entirely.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I stated to the gentleman from Georgia that if an actual recount was held that the result, if accepted, would be the election of the contestant in this case; but your committee does not think there ought to be a recount.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. As I understand, there were only two precincts in question, in the first place. Then, Mr. Bacon and Mr. Beakes had a recount of the ballots of the district. I want to ask the chairman this question: Did Mr. Beakes gain enough votes in the balance of the district so that he could concede to Mr. Bacon the figures which he claimed as to those two contested precincts and still be elected?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I can not answer that question categorically, Mr. Speaker, for the reason I do not know what Mr. Bacon claims as to those two precincts.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If you take the original returns——

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then, those two precincts may be accorded to Mr. Bacon——

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Those two precincts, if you stand on the original return, added to the majority conceded the contestant in the rest of the district, would undoubtedly elect the contestant in this case.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then Mr. Beakes gained enough in the uncontested portion of the district to offset the contested portion?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman, who is on the committee.

Mr. HELM. Is it not a fact that after a recount was had in the first precinct Mr. Beakes gained in the entire congressional district the total of 95 votes? In every precinct in the congressional district Beakes had a net clear, clean-cut gain of 95 votes, and this recount in the entire district was taken by Mr. Bacon with exception of the first precinct of the second ward. After Mr. Beakes took the proof in the first precinct of the second ward and made this showing of 87 gain, then Mr. Bacon proceeded to take a recount in the entire congressional district, and on the recount Mr. Beakes made a net clean-cut gain of 95 votes. Now, subtracting Bacon's majority on the returns of 49 from 95, and you have 46 votes outside the first precinct in the second ward and the second precinct in the sixth ward, in which Bacon carries one by 118 votes and Beakes carries the other by 118 votes, and there are irregularities in the first precinct of the second ward and the second precinct of the sixth which stand on all fours, so if you recount one you have to recount the other. If you throw out one you have to throw out the other, and that is the whole case, and Beakes is elected by 46 majority. That is the whole case in a nutshell.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. WHEELER. The statement of the chairman was that on a recount and then eliminating the two precincts in question and let that count remain as it was, Beakes would be elected by a 14 majority?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. The gentleman did not understand me accurately. Eliminating these two precincts the contestant's majority is 46. Now, gentlemen, the only question left for you to decide is what to do with the returns from this precinct where the ballot box was left at the voting place and stayed there for four months unprotected.

Your committee thinks that the evidence and circumstances surrounding the case show the act to have been unintentional, and they have not been able to see any suspicion of fraud connected with it. For that reason they think that the official returns from that precinct ought to stand. If gentlemen do not concur in that view and think the abandonment of this box is in itself fraudulent conduct and sufficient to vitiate the work of the hands of the election officers, then there is but one logical thing to do and that is to discard the returns from this precinct and throw them out altogether. Which will you do? If you accept the official returns, the contestant is elected; if you reject them, the contestant is elected.

Mr. AYRES. If you accept them he is elected by how much?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. By 132.

Mr. AYRES. And if rejected he is elected by 14?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. By 14.

Now, gentlemen, the only way in the world to resist the conclusions I have indicated and seat the contestee is, as I said in the beginning, to manipulate the returns in dispute in a manner contrary to both reason and law. There are only two ways you can arrive at such a result. You must refuse to correct a conceded error in the first precinct of the second ward, where the contestee had 118 majority, and then reject the returns from the second precinct of the sixth ward, where contestant had 118 majority; or, having corrected the error in the former precinct, you must then do what contestee's counsel proposes, reject the official returns from the latter precinct and set up in their place the contents of one of the ballot boxes used there, in which a recount showed Bacon had 172 and Beakes 111. I can not conceive this House will refuse to correct the conceded error in the first instance, nor that it will undertake to substitute the will of only a portion of the electors for that of the whole in the second instance.

In the long past the House of Representatives has had some very curious election cases. Some Democrats have been elected here who were not elected at home, and though I stand on this side of the aisle [Republican side], I venture to say that sometimes Republicans have been elected here who were not elected at home. It has been said that the House of Commons has done everything except make a man a woman and a woman a man. The House of Representatives has done that thing, because a lady has been admitted to the membership of this body and exercises all the attributes of a Representative in Congress. But in all the exigencies of political strife in the past no political party here has ever been willing to vest title to a seat in this body upon the fragment of returns charged to be wholly fraudulent, because that fragment forsooth was preserved under lock and seal. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] was to have had 15 minutes out of my original time of an hour. Through the courtesy of the House I have trespassed upon you much longer than that, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may have 15 minutes in which to address you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] was allotted 15 minutes, and the Chair now recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised to hear from the Democratic side the cry "Vote!" after one speech has been made, and the only speech in this matter involving a seat in Congress now held by a Republican, and that they ask that all debate shall be closed and the verdict rendered. That has been the policy of the Democratic Party in the past, and I suppose it will be in the future in election contests. I do not, Mr. Speaker, take the floor for the purpose of saying anything against the contestant nor of his right to the seat which he has contested. I do not know anything about the facts in this case to justify me in saying that the report that has been submitted should not be adopted, but I do rise to say that upon this side of the House, where sit almost as many Republicans as there are Democrats upon the other side, there ought to be somebody among the leaders upon this side or the members of the Elections Committee in this case, to get up and give information to us in order that we may act intelligently and not be compelled to act alone upon the report of Democratic members in this election contest.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Does the gentleman think he is justified in saying that this is a report of the Democratic members of this committee?

Mr. DYER. I say this, that the report is prepared by the distinguished chairman of this committee, Judge WATSON, of Virginia, for whose ability I have the greatest esteem and for whose personal character and work I have the greatest respect, and that the other members—five Democrats and three Republicans—making nine altogether, have accepted this report as their own, perhaps not all of them signing it, or any of them—I do not know as to that—but presenting no minority report here. And I understand they do not agree in full, all of the members of the committee, with the facts as stated. They probably agree with the conclusion.

But here is a proposition that is as serious as can come to any Member of this House and to the country. Here is a man sent from the great State of Michigan, given a certificate of election to this House. That certificate of election entitled him to come here and take a seat, to be sworn in as a Member, and to accept the emoluments and the responsibilities of the office; and he has had them now for nearly a year. Notwithstanding that, that certificate of election was attacked before the board of canvassers of the county in which the election was held. It was attacked before the State board of canvassers of the State of Michigan and was carried to the Supreme Court of that State. And yet in all these bodies there was no relief given to the contestant in this case, and they, in effect, put their seal of official approval, at least, upon the certificate of election that was given to the contestee in this case. And I say that under those circumstances it was the duty of the members on the Republican side sitting upon this Elections Committee, and of the leaders upon this side, to do something and give us some information in the shape of a report, even though it might, in the end, concur in the views of the report of the majority.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman for a question, but not for a speech. I have only 10 minutes left.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will not make a speech. Is it not a fact that under the laws and decisions of the State of Michigan these various boards and courts that you have mentioned——

Mr. DYER. Oh, I know all about that. The gentleman need not tell me what the Michigan law is.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They dealt with the case on its merits. You said they placed the stamp of their approval on this.

Mr. DYER. I said their "official approval," because they denied the contestant relief in this case.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. You should have said it.

Mr. DYER. I do not think anybody misunderstood me.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to another matter, not only a matter of dereliction but a matter of neglect of duty on the part of this side of the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. DYER. Not at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DYER. Where a man's seat is involved and where we on this side who are not members of this committee know absolutely nothing about it except what we have heard to-day from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] and from reading his report, we ought to have more information about this case than is available.

In addition to that, we have here a report submitted by the Committee on Elections No. 3 of the House of Representatives in which they say that in this case—and I would like to have the attention of the Members of the House——

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the House is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. DYER. I want to call the attention of the membership of this House to the fact that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON], the chairman of this committee, says that the time has come in this country when partisanship is abandoned in an election contest. Now this same Committee No. 3 in the Sixty-third Congress made findings of law upon statements of facts absolutely different from what they made in this case.

In that Congress they said that if there was fraud proved in connection with the ballots, with special reference to misconduct in counting the ballots, then they could not correct the vote and separate the good from the bad, although officials of the State, the commissioners of election, appointed by the governor of the State, a Democrat, had had those ballots gone over one by one, recounted, tabulated, and corrected, and full testimony in detail taken about them. In that case this Committee on Elections said they could not accept that recount because some mistakes in this regard had been discovered and some evidences of fraud had been found, not on the part of the gentleman who held the seat or his party, but upon the part of the Democratic officials of election themselves. They said then that all the ballots must be thrown out and all the voters of the several precincts disfranchised. They then presented precedents for that action, the same as they have presented precedents in this case for directly the opposite thing. They say in this report that if you find mistakes and can correct them, then you should let them stand. Those positions are directly opposite, and in both instances favor a Democrat.

I call that to the attention of the House because I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that where a man's seat is at stake in the House of Representatives every Member should rise above partisanship and act upon the facts in the case. And that is why I take the floor now, gentlemen, to see if it is not possible, in my humble way, to urge that the Democratic Members of this Congress will look at contests in the future from the standpoint of facts and of the law and not blind partisanship. I have nothing to say, as I said in the beginning, by way of criticism of the gentleman who is the contestant in the case. I intend to vote to seat him. I have served with him in this House before, and I know that he is a man of honor. I know that he has been an efficient and creditable Member. But what I do rise to say is that it is an outrage for Members of the House of Representatives on the Republican side to be compelled to vote without any report on the part of the minority or any statement from the leaders, and thus put us in the position of having to say by our votes that here for nearly a year a man has been sitting in this House and drawing the pay and bearing the responsibilities of membership without right, and we sit idly by and make no defense of his election and no report to show why he came here.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. I understood the gentleman to say that he was going to vote to seat him.

Mr. DYER. I said I was going to vote to seat Mr. Beakes, because there is nothing else to do in the case.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If it is true that the Republican members of this committee have not submitted any facts in behalf of Mr. BACON in this contest, which is so vital to him, is not that in fact a conclusion that nothing in his behalf can be presented for him?

Mr. DYER. I will have to answer the gentleman's question in the affirmative, because no other conclusion can be drawn from the fact that the minority have presented no report, and under the circumstances I shall cast my vote to seat Mr. Beakes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DOWELL. I ask unanimous consent to make just a brief statement. I merely desire to state that I have given some three weeks' time to this case and have gone into every phase of it with the other Republican members of the committee, and we concluded not to file a minority report. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resoluton 195.

1. That Mark R. Bacon was not elected a Representative to this Congress in the second district of the State of Michigan, and is not entitled to retain a seat herein.

2. That Samuel W. Beakes was duly elected a Representative in this Congress for the second district, State of Michigan, and is entitled to a seat herein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WATSON of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER ELECT.

Mr. BEAKES appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named gentlemen be, and they are hereby, elected members of the Committee on Woman Suffrage:

1. JOHN E. RAKER (chairman), of California.
2. EDWARD W. SAUNDERS, of Virginia.
3. FRANK CLARK, of Florida.
4. BENJAMIN C. HILLIARD, of Colorado.
5. JAMES H. MAYS, of Utah.
6. CHRISTOPHER D. SULLIVAN, of New York.
7. THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is that the whole committee?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; those are just the majority members. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] will offer a resolution naming the minority members.

Mr. GILLETT. I can offer it now.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will do that, then the committee will be complete.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. I offer the following resolution, naming the minority members of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and hereby are, elected members of the Committee on Woman Suffrage:

8. Miss RANKIN,
9. Mr. MONDELL,
10. Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts,
11. Mr. MEEKER,
12. Mr. LITTLE, and
13. Mr. ELLIOTT.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. I desire to offer an amendment to strike out one name and substitute another. Am I in order?

The SPEAKER. You are.

Mr. LONDON. Then I move to strike out the name of CHRISTOPHER D. SULLIVAN and to substitute the name of MEYER LONDON, of New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to strike out the name of CHRISTOPHER D. SULLIVAN and to insert the name of MEYER LONDON. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the vote I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-one Members present. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order now to move to increase the number of Members who are to constitute the committee?

The SPEAKER. Not after the previous question has been ordered.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] any further business to offer?

Mr. KITCHIN. No further business.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. MOON, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of a special assistant to the Attorney General to assist in the defense of cases against the United States arising out of the transportation of the mails, and in other cases and matters affecting the postal revenues, $6,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to obtain information from the chairman of the committee as to the status of the work in charge of this special assistant to the Attorney General. As I understand, this position is occupied by the former Second Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Joseph Stewart. I understood it was originally created for the purpose of defending the Government side of the divisor proposition, and also to look after other cases arising out of railway transportation problems. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether that litigation has been concluded? As far as the divisor proposition is concerned, I know that has been decided by the Supreme Court favorably to the Government, at a saving of many millions of dollars.

Mr. MOON. I understand the other has not. The question of railway mail pay and the substitution of space for weight will come before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I understand Mr. Stewart is special counsel to look after these matters and some others that have not yet been determined.

Mr. STAFFORD. On the question whether the space basis should be used rather than the tonnage basis, I wish to inquire whether the Interstate Commerce Commission have made any decision as to which of the respective bases should be used by the department?

Mr. MOON. No; I understand that under the provisions of the law the Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered an experiment or test of the question on about 90 per cent of the roads of the country and that the facts are not all before them, and that there are no final decisions in the matter at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee when a decision is likely to be reached as to the respective merits of the space basis and the tonnage basis?

Mr. MOON. I am not advised as to when the Interstate Commerce Commission will be prepared to act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, and superintendents of registry, 10, at not exceeding $3,200 each.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, in looking over the bill I see that the first and second class offices are liberally taken care of in the way of provision for clerk hire, and in some measure for third-class offices. I want to ask the gentleman if this bill carries any relief for fourth-class postmasters whose offices have been made central accounting offices?

Mr. MOON. No; that will require some legislation.

Mr. LANGLEY. I know some cases where the work has been practically doubled, and the postmasters tell me that they can not do the work without additional clerk hire, and that unless they get speedy relief they will be compelled to resign.

Mr. MOON. That will probably come up for legislation in a bill we are now considering.

Mr. LANGLEY. Then there is a good chance for some relief at this session, is there? May we infer that from the gentleman's statement?

Mr. MOON. We hope that there will be help for everybody.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope so, too. I hope also that the gentleman's committee will act speedily in this matter. I do not wish to be understood as criticizing him or his associates on that committee, but I do say that a large part of the employees of the Postal Service have not been treated fairly and justly in the matter of compensation. Whether those in authority have intended to discriminate against them or not, I do not pretend to say, but the effect has been unwarranted discrimination against them. Take, for example, these fourth-class offices which have been made central accounting offices. Gentlemen who understand the actual conditions, and I assume that all of you do, must know that the work added to their duties as a result of this new scheme has imposed an unbearable burden upon them, and I can not understand why when that scheme was inaugurated those who were sponsors for it did not foresee that such would be the situation and provide in advance an adequate sum to enable them to employ additional help. There is not a single fourth-class office in the district that I represent which has been made a central accounting office, but that their work has increased so enormously that they can not possibly do the work with the help they now have without the postmaster and his assistants working an unreasonable number of hours, which the Government ought not to exact of them in these abnormal times. With the cost of living doubled and their work doubled, it is no wonder that many of them are threatening to resign. The same is true to a great extent of the third-class offices which have been made central accounting offices. I would offer an amendment to this bill which would remedy this injustice, but I know it would be futile, because it would involve additional legislation, as the chairman has just stated, and therefore would be subject to a point of order; and since the chairman has indicated that the committee is considering a proposition of this kind, and since my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is a potent member of that committee, has just assured me privately that these matters will be provided for in a separate bill later in the session, I shall content myself with calling attention to the situation.

While I have the opportunity I wish to call attention to another rank injustice that is being done to another class of employees of the Postal Service. I refer to the star-route carriers. I have never been able to understand why this great and powerful Government prepares its contracts so as to bind these contractors hand and foot, giving all the advantage to the Government, and then insist upon their pound of flesh, regardless of the changed conditions and increase of work which in many cases makes it absolutely impossible for the contractor to carry out his obligations to the Government without great loss and oftentimes resulting in the contractor losing what little he has and putting an unjust burden upon his bondsmen. I recently traveled over a considerable portion of the mountain section of Kentucky which is traversed by these mail carriers. At this season of the year the roads in many places are almost impassable, and notwithstanding that fact and the further fact that in many instances the weight of the mail which they have to carry since they entered into the contracts has almost doubled, the department insists upon them carrying out their contracts to the letter, and when they apply for an increased allowance they are reminded of the provisions of the one-sided contract which the Government prepared for them to sign. I know of one instance where a contractor has been doing his utmost to carry out his contract, although it costs him more than his contract provides, without counting his own time and the wear and tear upon his team and wagon with which he hauls the mail. And I saw that man stuck in a mudhole, with the wagon wheels embedded to the hubs, and yet that man was probably fined for being late, and when he applied for relief he was referred to the terms of his contract with the department. I say with regret that such things as these are a discredit and disgrace to this Government, and I hope that some official of the department who shares responsibility for this branch of the service will read what I have said and will be induced thereby to take some steps to relieve this intolerable situation.

I wish to say further that I am gratified to learn that it is the purpose of the committee to give a substantial increase in the compensation of postal employees who were not included in the horizontal increase voted the other Government workers by the Sixty-fourth Congress. I thought at the time, and I think now, that it was a grievous error and injustice to omit them from the list of those who were the beneficiaries of that advance; and in view of the fact that the cost of living since the maximum wage standards of these employees were fixed 10 years ago has so advanced as to be almost equivalent in effect to a 50 per cent reduction in their wages, I hope and believe that the allowance to them will be such as to make up that difference. These are times when the greatest exactions are imposed by the Government upon its servants, and it can not be too liberal to suit me in fixing their rates of compensation.

Mr. LONERGAN and Mr. SIEGEL were given leave to extend remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of clerks in fourth-class offices.

The Clerk read as follows:

Auditors, and superintendents of mails, 10, at not exceeding $3,000 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads have at the request of the department added fourteen hundred clerks to this section of the bill. The committee in considering the bill agreed to certain estimates of the Post Office Department for additional clerks. They did not agree to the proposition of the Post Office Department to increase the pay for supervisory clerks. In printing the bill the language of the old bill was used, leaving out the additional number of the clerks that come along under each one of the appropriate heads. There will be a number of amendments offered in that particular, changing the number of clerks in certain classes and reducing them in others. Now, in line 14, page 5, the word "ten" should be stricken out and the word "fifteen" substituted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 14, by striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "fifteen."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the purpose is to have the number of supervisory officials increased to conform with the recommendation of the department providing for promotion?

Mr. MOON. Largely; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In each respective class?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The other day I directed an inquiry to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] as to why the committee had not adopted the recommendation, and he stated that it was for the purpose of providing for their increase of salary in a general promotion scheme which the committee would consider later on.

Mr. MOON. No; it is the normal increases occurring every year.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is for the special purpose of increasing salaries.

Mr. MOON. No; not increasing the salaries, except the automatic increase. We do not give the increase of salaries recommended by the department. We give the clerks the normal salary.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the lower grades it results in increasing the salaries, and also in the higher grades.

Mr. MOON. It is automatic up to $1,200.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are no automatic increases, so far as the supervisory officials are concerned.

Mr. MOON. That is true; but there are automatic increases up to $1,200.

Mr. STAFFORD. The department makes recommendations for increasing the numbers in the respective grades, which is purely for the purpose of increasing salaries of officials by reason of increased efficiency and increased work.

Mr. MOON. They can not be increased except as they go up under the law, automatically increased up to $1,200, and they can not go beyond that.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no provision of law that provides for the increase of salaries except by increasing the number of places, which will give an opportunity to the department to provide promotions. I am in favor of making the additional places so as to provide for the promotions.

Mr. MOON. The only difference between the gentleman and myself is that I call it an automatic increase and he calls it a promotion. It is the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of mails, superintendents of delivery, and superintendents of mails, 20, at not exceeding $2,700 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, on page 5, line 17, I move to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "twenty-three."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 17, strike out the word "twenty" and insert "twenty-three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of mails, cashiers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, and superintendents of stations, 30, at not exceeding $2,500 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, line 24, page 5, by striking out the word "thirty" and inserting the word "thirty-five."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 24, strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "thirty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, bookkeepers, cashiers, finance clerks, stenographers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, and superintendents of registry, 50, at not exceeding $2,400 each.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does not the gentleman wish to strike out the word "fifty" in line 5 and increase that to "sixty"?

Mr. MOON. Yes; that escaped my notice. I move to amend by striking out "50" and inserting "60."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 5, strike out the word "fifty" and insert "sixty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of mails, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, finance clerks, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, and superintendents of stations, 55, at not exceeding $2,200 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "fifty-five," in line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 11, strike out "fifty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, bookkeepers, cashiers, examiners of stations, finance clerks, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, superintendents of inquiry, and superintendents of stations, 75, at not exceeding $2,000 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "seventy-five" in line 21, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and ninety." That is a misprint.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 21, strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and ninety."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, examiners of stations, finance clerks, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 65, at not exceeding $1,800 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "sixty-five" and inserting "one hundred and eighty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 6, strike out "sixty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and eighty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, examiners of stations, finance clerks, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 170, at not exceeding $1,700 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "one hundred and seventy" and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred and ninety," in line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 16, strike out "one hundred and seventy" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and ninety."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, examiners of stations, finance clerks, foremen of crews, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 290, at not exceeding $1,600 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 2, by striking out "two hundred and ninety" and inserting in lieu thereof, "four hundred and twenty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 2, strike out "two hundred and ninety," and insert in lieu thereof "four hundred and twenty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, examiners of stations, finance clerks, foremen of crews, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 950, at not exceeding $1,500 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 13, by striking out "nine hundred and fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof "ten hundred and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 13, strike out "nine hundred and fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "ten hundred and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, special clerks, examiners of stations, finance clerks, foremen of crews, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 1,710, at not exceeding $1,400 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 24 and 25, "one thousand seven hundred and ten," and insert in lieu thereof "two thousand six hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, lines 24 and 25, strike out "one thousand seven hundred and ten" and insert "two thousand six hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, examiners of stations, finance clerks, foremen of crews, special clerks, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 3,865, at not exceeding $1,300 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in lines 10 and 11, "three thousand eight hundred and sixty-five," and insert in lieu thereof "seven thousand one hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 10 and 11, strike out "three thousand eight hundred and sixty-five" and insert "seven thousand one hundred."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. By reason of the additional places provided in the grades above this class of thirteen hundred dollars, I assume that there have been vacancies created in this grade aggregating more than 1,000 places, and in addition you are almost doubling the number of places, from 3,865 to 7,100. That would provide, in rough numbers, for more than 4,000 vacancies to be filled from the $1,200 class to the $1,300 class.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that a large number of those additional places will be filled by promotions of clerks receiving $1,200, who will be appointed as special clerks under the provision made later in the bill providing for a certain percentage of promotions from $1,200 to the $1,300 class.

Mr. MOON. I imagine the gentleman is correct. The truth about it is that the department makes its estimate for this service and says that it needs so many, and that is about all that we know about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I only wish to direct attention to the fact that we are making a most liberal provision for additional places in the $1,300 grade, to provide for meritorious men who are receiving but $1,200, and who deserve promotions to $1,300, who are doing a class of work which entails a confinement in the post office in assorting the letter mail, demanding a close attention to their special work that is not paralleled in any other branch of the service except in the Railway Mail Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, chief stamp clerks, clerks, finance clerks, foremen of crews, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 19,500, at not exceeding $1,200 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "19,500" and insert "18,360."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 18 and 19, strike out "19,500" and insert in lieu thereof "18,360."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of stations, clerks, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 9,000, at not exceeding $1,100 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "9,000" and insert "7,700."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 22 and 23, strike out "9,000" and insert "7,700."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of stations, clerks, clerks in charge of stations, stenographers, superintendents of carriers, and superintendents of second-class matter, 3,300, at not exceeding $1,000 each.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "3,300" and insert "2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 1 and 2, strike out "3,300" and insert in lieu thereof "2,500."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitutes for clerks and employees absent without pay;

And to provide for the promotion of 85 per cent of the clerks in first-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade, and for the promotion of 15 per cent of the clerks in the sixth grade to the designation of "special clerk" in the $1,300 grade, and for the promotion of 15 per cent of the designated "special clerks" in the $1,300 grade to the designation of "special clerk" in the $1,400 grade, and to provide for the promotion of 85 per cent of the clerks in second-class post offices from the fourth to the fifth grade, and for the promotion of 15 per cent of the clerks in second-class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade: And provided further, That there may also be employed at first-class post offices foremen and stenographers at a salary of $1,300 or more per annum; in all, $50,508,700.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$50,508,700" and insert "$53,291,800."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee the need of the last proviso in the paragraph under consideration that authorizes the employment at first-class post offices of foremen and stenographers at a salary of $1,300 or more per annum? I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that in the classification of supervisory officials we have just passed in these various items providing salaries above $1,300 are listed foremen and stenographers, which would authorize the department to employ foremen and stenographers at salaries above $1,300. What is the need of this proviso when we have specially designated them at higher salaries in the classification of supervisory officials?

Mr. MOON. They want some more at lower salaries, I guess.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; the authorization I am directing the attention of the chairman of the committee to is to allow higher salaries than $1,300 to foremen and stenographers. In all classifications above the $1,300 grade we find the designation of foremen and stenographers running up almost to the highest grades. What is the need of that general authorization when you are already carrying these places in a separate classification?

Mr. MOON. I do not know there is any absolute necessity for it if they are being carried in the other classification. I take it the department wants this section so as to cover the question of their right to employ them at a higher or lower figure.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course they would have that right if they were designated in these respective grades. If it were not, then the old law of classification of employees would bar them from being paid more than $1,200, but having designated them to receive that higher salary I can not see the need of this proviso.

Mr. MOON. This proviso has been carried all along in the law?

Mr. STAFFORD. It has only been carried in recent years and I thought the reason for it had passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 23, strike out "$50,508,700" and insert in lieu thereof "$53,291,800."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I notice that the amount in the bill is $50,508,700. Why the increase?

Mr. MOON. There are 1,400 clerks provided for, and stenographers and others, which, footed up, makes the difference.

Mr. BLACK. Is the number of the clerks just what it was when we considered it before our committee?

Mr. MOON. No; the committee determined that they would not allow the additional $100 asked for the supervisory clerks, but the committee also determined it would allow the department the number of clerks it wanted, and we simply failed to foot up the amount that is necessary to pay them in the appropriation. That is where the error occurred. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask this in that connection: The figures are $53,291,800 and they may not be exactly correct, and I will ask that the Clerk be authorized to make the footing of the correct figures if there is any error there.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to post offices of the first and second classes, $400,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 12, after line 25, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to have prepared cancellation stamps for the post office at Medford, Oreg., which shall include the words 'Crater Lake,' and for the post office at Grants Pass, Oreg., which shall include the words 'Oregon Caves,' with the date of seasonal opening for each."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment. It is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is clearly new legislation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I will reserve it in order to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this involves the expenditure of but a very small amount of money by the Government. At Crater Lake the Government had expended a large amount of money and at Oregon Caves. The natural wonders of that park have attracted a great deal of attention, and people throughout the country are interested in the opening of that region. It involves no expenditure beyond a few cents, and if the gentleman can see his way clear not to insist on the point of order, I trust he will do so.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, if we open up new legislation we can not tell where it will end. I will say to the gentleman this distinctive proposition will be acted upon by the committee, I am sure. We will be glad to do what we can for him. I do not believe the legislation should go on the appropriation bill. There is no legislation here at all that is new, and this does not seem to be entirely necessary

Mr. HAWLEY. It will enable the people who desire to visit the caves simply to know when the season will be open. The Government has expended the money there and it will enable the people to use that which the Government has prepared for them.

Mr. MOON. I regret to insist on the point of order. I wish the gentleman would come before the committee, when we will fix that up for him.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail-messenger service, $2,600,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph ending in line 24. I wish to inquire whether the chairman of the committee can give the House any information as to the amount of money and the extent to which the department has availed themselves of the authorization which was granted them last year or the year before for the lease of quarters for the housing of Government-owned automobiles. The Government here in Washington has in the past year erected a central garage where the automobiles belonging to the President and some of the executive departments are housed in one building, resulting in a large saving of money. I was wondering whether the Postmaster General had established central garages in certain cities of the country where the Government is operating large numbers of automobiles?

Mr. MOON. I am not able to give the gentleman accurate information about it, but my opinion is that it has not been done, except in some cases. I am not able to speak authoritatively.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee did not make inquiry as to the extent to which this authority has been availed of?

Mr. MOON. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 13, after line 25, insert the following new paragraph:

"For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes, or similar devices, $1,101,000."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. It is new legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. MOON. All right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that this is subject to a point of order. The very provision I offer now as an amendment is in the current appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Permanent law?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; it is in the current law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it permanent law?

Mr. MOON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to make clear my point of order——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not intend to argue the point of order except to raise the point at this time.

Mr. MOON. I want to say that there is no general law under which the Post Office Committee could make an appropriation for pneumatic tubes. I will not discuss that, because I discussed it a day or two ago and it has frequently been discussed heretofore.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course it is an old question, and I shall not discuss the point of order in particular except to make the reservation at this time in view of the gentleman having made the point.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does it not come in under the Second Assistant Postmaster General, under the old law concerning transportation of mails? I think you have gotten it in the wrong place.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This paragraph was carried in the act of March 3, 1917, in exactly the same place I am now offering it.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a question that has been thrashed out in the House before. To refuse at this time to accept this amendment would throw the pneumatic-tube service as now existing entirely up in the air. It would have the effect of destroying existing contracts and would substantially be a confiscation of the property of those who went into the business of constructing and operating pneumatic tubes at the instance of the Government itself. That point, however, has been discussed so frequently on the floor that I will not attempt to do more than call attention to it and to emphasize the fact that the failure to make the appropriation is in effect confiscation of the property of those who constructed those tubes, which are now in operation by virtue of law.

I want also to call attention to the first proviso in the existing law. It relates to the appropriation in the act of March 3, 1917, now in effect.

The proviso is:

Provided, That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to extend existing contracts for pneumatic-tube service until June 30, 1918, and the Postmaster General is directed to extend this appropriation for the sole purpose of continuing the existing pneumatic mail-tube service, and no part thereof shall be expended for the transportation of mails in any other manner than herein authorized.

I call that proviso to the attention of the Chair, as it relates to the existing law, but I want to further present to the Chair and to this committee in particular the next proviso, which reads:

Provided further, That a commission consisting of three members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate, to be designated by the Vice President, and three members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Speaker of the House, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the value of the pneumatic-tube service, their properties, franchises, and other equipment, with a view to the purchase and operation of the same or any portion thereof by the Government and to ascertain the cost and the terms upon which such purchase may be made. The employment of expert and other assistance is authorized, and the expense of such assistance and of the inquiry shall be paid from the appropriation for service by pneumatic tubes, not to exceed $25,000, and said commission shall make a report, with recommendations to Congress, on or by the 1st day of January, 1918.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that proviso contemplated a continuance of the pneumatic-tube service certainly until this congressional commission shall have reported. The commission is to report under the law before the 1st of January next. It has not yet reported. Courtesy to that commission of the Senate and of the House would seem to dictate that this service should be continued, apart from the right of the property owners and apart from the existing contracts, until the conclusions of this commission shall have been reported to the House and the Senate.

I feel that with the Postmaster General against the pneumatic-tube service, and with the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads against the pneumatic-tube service, as he frankly stated here in the discussion a day or two ago, but with a majority of this House and of the Senate in favor of the pneumatic-tube service, and with a commission appointed to investigate whether the rights of the property owners shall be preserved, and whether these tubes shall be taken over by the Government, we should at least make provision for the continuance of the service until that commission is heard from. It seems to me that the appropriation ought to be made. If the commission reports against the continuance of the tubes and finds with the Postmaster General and with the chairman of the committee, then of course we will have something to act upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania any knowledge or information that this congressional committee will fail to report by the 1st of January?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I have not. I endeavored to ascertain from the chairman of this Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads during the debate whether that committee was about to report, and the gentleman was unable to inform me.

Mr. COX. I doubt very much whether the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads knows when that committee is going to report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Tennessee made a statement fairly and squarely—that, being opposed to the pneumatic-tube service, he had never accepted appointment on that commission.

Mr. MOON. I have never been on that committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman withdrew from his appointment on that commission because he was opposed to the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. MOON. The pneumatic-tube service will continue until the 1st of next July.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then what will happen, in the event of an adverse report?

Mr. COX. It will have to die, unless there is a postal commission appointed by the Postmaster General to go out and investigate the pneumatic-tube service and report favorably on its continuance. Then that would have the effect of reviving the law on which the pneumatic-tube service is based. But if a postal commission appointed by the Postmaster General should report unfavorably on its continuance, then of course there is no law upon which we can make an appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If there is an adverse report and no appropriation, it means instant confiscation of this property.

Mr. COX. No. This congressional commission might make an adverse report, but that would not affect the necessity of continuing the pneumatic-tube system, because the basic law on which that tube system rests provides for the appointment of a postal commission, a commission appointed by the Postmaster General. This present commission is not a postal commission. It is a commission appointed by Congress to investigate this question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In answer to the gentleman, I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that while I am not objecting to the Postmaster General holding his view on this subject, nor objecting to the chairman of this committee, for whom I have a very high respect, holding his view, I do contend that we ought not to put these property owners, who have had bona fide contracts with the Government, in a position where there will be no remedy for them, no recovery on their investment or their property. They have been rendering a public service demanded by our own business men and encouraged by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we need continue this discussion or need to enter into the merits of the pneumatic-tube proposition. That is a question that may well be considered later, after the coming in of the report of the commission appointed in pursuance of law by the Vice President and the Speaker of the House.

I make a point of order against the consideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], for the reason that there is in existence no general law upon which you can base an appropriation for pneumatic tubes. The law provided a period for its expiration, and that time has passed. It provided a method by which its existence might be affected and contracts made under it, and that method was the appointment of a commission by the Post Office Department to inquire into the advisability of the continuation of the contract; and if they advised it, then the power still remains, by virtue of the law, in the Postmaster General to make new contracts. But if it was not so advised, the contract period ended with the expiration of the law. To my mind it is a very simple proposition.

Now, that commission was appointed, as a matter of record. It reported adversely. The law expired. There is no power to continue the contract nor to make appropriation for it. But the Congress, in order to save the situation until the 30th of June, 1918, did not reenact the law, but it provided that the terms of the existing contract might be continued until June 30, 1918, and in the meantime the commission to which I referred was to examine into the question and report to Congress. Now, that commission has until the 1st of January to report. If it makes a report at that time there will be plenty of time for Congress to make its appropriation, if it desires. If it makes an adverse report, of course, the power is in Congress to pass a new law on the subject; but to-day there is no law that authorizes an appropriation. The only law in existence on the question of pneumatic tubes is the law that created the commission to look into the advisability of the continuation of the pneumatic tubes and the provision that the Postmaster General shall hold them in use until June 30. That is all there is to this question.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee withhold his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter that is pending is the point of order. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to speak about the subject that has been discussed, if the gentleman from Tennessee will withhold his point of order. I believe I am the only member of this commission present.

Mr. MOON. Yes; I will be very glad to withhold the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withholds the point of order. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think there is something involved here that is of very much greater importance than the question whether this pneumatic-tube service shall be continued or not. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has read the statute whereby Congress established a special commission, who were authorized and directed to investigate the value of the pneumatic-tube service and of the property devoted to that purpose, and to report the results of their investigation on the 1st of January next. Pending that investigation by the commission which was duly created by Congress, the Postmaster General, in his annual report, has taken up the subject of this pneumatic-tube service and condemned the whole service absolutely, denouncing it as antiquated and useless, and as an extravagant waste of the public funds. The respect and consideration due from one coordinate branch of the Government to another, I submit, would dictate that the Postmaster General should withhold judgment until the commission could perform the duty intrusted to it by Congress.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman if that is not absolutely contrary to the testimony taken before the commission of those experienced in the use of pneumatic tubes in the cities where they have been in use, such cities as Boston and Philadelphia?

Mr. STEENERSON. I believe that is correct, although I am not going into a consideration of the merits of that question. A year ago, and prior to that time, the department recommended the continuation of the pneumatic-tube service in the city of New York below Forty-second Street, and most of the tubes in New York are in that territory; but this year the Postmaster General in his annual report condemns the whole service, including that in New York, and denounces it as an extravagant waste of public money, and further goes on to say that the friends of the pneumatic-tube companies will undoubtedly come before Congress and claim that it is a valuable service and will try to mislead the public, and that they have so attempted heretofore; and the Postmaster General's report carries the impression that there is nobody in favor of this service except the representatives of the two companies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the gentleman that my interest in this matter is not on behalf of the pneumatic-tube companies primarily. The people who are behind this movement, so far as Philadelphia is concerned, are the merchants and business men who have been advantaged by the use of the pneumatic tubes and who desire future service. I think it is fair to say that, in view of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. STEENERSON. What I want to say is, as a matter of courtesy and of regular procedure, when a commission authorized by Congress has been created to investigate a subject and while their report is pending, before they have come to any conclusion, whether it is the province of an executive department of this Government to come before Congress in an annual report and denounce the subject embraced in that investigation and pass judgment upon it, forestalling whatever action may be taken. I am, perhaps, the only member of this pneumatic-tube commission on the floor to-day. I do not see any of the other members present. It seems to me it is unfair to Congress and to the commission for the Postmaster General to send in a report that absolutely condemns and passes judgment upon the subject which Congress has committed to this commission and which we have until the 1st of January, at least, to pass judgment upon. This is not the first time that the Post Office Department has been guilty of that kind of discourtesy to Congress. Some years ago there was a commission appointed, called the Bourne Commission, on second-class rates and railway-mail pay, and they were going to make a report to Congress, and eventually made one. But before the report was made public, while it was in course of preparation, the Post Office Department caused to be prepared and introduced a bill varying entirely from the subsequent recommendations of the postal commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. MOON. Is the gentleman going to speak on this subject?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOON. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. In this case the commission has not had time to report. The report is not due yet, but nevertheless a department official comes in and practically insults Congress by saying that the service whose value we are investigating is of no value whatever—that it is a waste of public funds. It seems to me that the Congress ought to resent such action.

I am not now discussing the merits of the pneumatic-tube question. I am not saying what the commission will report. I am sure I do not know. I think they are all proceeding with open minds to do justice to the Postal Service and the Government and to all concerned, but it seems to me it is about time that we should take notice that here is a department of the Government that assumes to condemn what Congress has said we shall investigate and to pass judgment on this matter in advance of our judgment. May I ask where does this authority come from? Upon what meat does this our Cæsar feed that he has grown so great that he can not wait until Congress shall have rendered judgment? Then he might differ. But while that proceeding is pending it seems to me a grave impropriety for the department to come in here and condemn the whole subject as a waste of public funds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is a member of the commission?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman care to state whether the commission is preparing a report?

Mr. STEENERSON. I understand the commission will prepare a report to be submitted within the time required before the 1st of January, and if they do not it will ask for more time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not the effect of an adverse report now be to confiscate the property of those who have made the investment?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, the gentleman is trying to get me to express an opinion which I should not give.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Without an appropriation there will be a loss of service, whether the report is favorable or unfavorable.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no doubt that if the appropriation is not continued, the whole service in every city where it is used will cease on the 1st of July, including New York City, where the postal experts recommend that it be continued, because it is valuable.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. In addition to the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the patrons of the offices, not necessarily the owners, but the patrons are going to suffer if no appropriation is made.

Mr. STEENERSON. If it is valuable, they will be deprived of it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not the testimony of those who appeared before the commission that the service is a valuable service?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am not prepared to say——

Mr. TREADWAY. My interest is not for the owners of the property, but it is whether the patrons who are accustomed to this form of service shall be protected. As far as my observation goes, in the city of Boston it is of the greatest value and the greatest benefit to the business interests of that city that that service should be continued, and therefore, it seems to me, that it is taking an undue advantage under a parliamentary technicality if this appropriation in the present bill for the continuation of that service is not continued.

Mr. MOON. I want to say to the gentleman that there is no parliamentary technicality about it; it is the existing law.

Mr. STEENERSON. So far as my recollection goes, the Pneumatic Tube Commission has not heard one single witness on behalf of the tube company. All the testimony that was taken was taken in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis, and was offered on behalf of citizens who were affected by the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. TREADWAY. They were all favorable to the service.

Mr. STEENERSON. They were offered as witnesses in those cities in behalf of having the service continued.

Mr. TREADWAY. Absolutely; and it will be indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman indulge me? The gentleman from Pennsylvania requested me to make an argument on the point of order. I believe that it is in order, and I can cite authorities that will confirm that, and unless the Chair insists on ruling I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the question of pneumatic-tube service is not a new subject in this House. It has its authority back in 1902, when for the first time authority was conferred on the Postmaster General to enter into contracts for the transmission of mail by pneumatic-tube service for a period not exceeding four years. I wish first to direct the attention of the Chair to section 1374 of the Postal Laws and Regulations. In that authorization there was a provision that before the contracts should be made the Postmaster General was to have a commission appointed that would investigate the needs of the service, and if it recommended favorably he was authorized to enter into contracts. I will read the language, so that the Chair will know exactly what were the conditions that limited the authority of the Postmaster General in the first instance in making contracts for four years for this service.

That no advertisement shall issue until careful investigation shall have been made as to the needs and practicability of such service and until a favorable report in writing shall have been submitted to the Postmaster General by a commission of not less than three expert postal officials to be named by him, nor shall such advertisement issue until in the judgment of the Postmaster General the needs of the Postal Service are such as to justify the expenditure involved. Advertisements shall state in general terms only the requirements of the service and in form best calculated to invite competitive bidding.

Then in the last paragraph of that authorization which was passed in 1902 we find this provision:

And thereafter only such contracts shall be made as may from time to time be provided for in the annual appropriation act for the Postal Service, and all provisions of law contrary to those herein contained are repealed.

Mark you, Mr. Chairman, the specific indication on the part of Congress in 1902 is, as far as the future contracts were concerned, that they should be based on the amount of appropriations of Congress from time to time.

Mr. MOON. When was that act repealed?

Mr. STAFFORD. It has never been repealed, according to the decision of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] last year. I will come to that in a minute. I wish to call attention to this phraseology, because both acts must be construed together. I will now read the language again for the information of the Chair and others who are not acquainted with the phraseology:

And thereafter only such contracts shall be made as may from time to time be provided for in the annual appropriation act for the Postal Service, and all provisions of law contrary to those herein contained are repealed.

If the law had not been subsequently amended, there would be no question whatever, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment now offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be in order, because it is merely an appropriation for this service.

Then, in the appropriation act of 1906—and I well remember the occasion, because the Postmaster General, Mr. Cortelyou, came before the committee and recommended this change granting an extension of authorization to make contracts from 4 years to 10 years, and the committee extended the time, thinking we could get more favorable contracts by a 10-year lease—we passed this provision:

For the transmission of mails by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $900,000; and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,250,000—

And the amount carried in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is below that amount—

under the provisions of the law—

What law? Under the provisions of the only law then on the statute books, namely, the act of 1902—for a period not exceeding 10 years, provided that said service shall not be extended in any cities other than those in which the service is now under contract under authority of Congress, except the Borough of Brooklyn, of the city of New York, and the cities of Baltimore, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Kansas City, Mo.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; and San Francisco, Cal.—

Again, I call the attention of the Chair to the only limitation carried in that enactment of 1906, namely—and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to enter into contract not exceeding in the aggregate $1,250,000 under the provisions of the law for a period of not exceeding 10 years—

Construing that law with the prior enactment, the prior enactment was continued in every particular except three, one that the authorization to enter into a contract was extended from 4 to 10 years, next naming the cities where this service might be installed, and, thirdly, the amount that might be contracted for was restricted to the amount of $1,250,000.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a new question. This identic question was presented to the attention of this committee a year ago when the Post Office bill was under consideration, and the eminent parliamentarian, because we all so regard him, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], was in the chair. He passed upon the very point of order that is now submitted to the Chair for decision. What was that amendment? The amendment was offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE], as follows:

Page 15, line 15, after the word "devices," strike out "$449,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,061,000, for continuance of service now existing in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and Brooklyn."

A point of order was raised against that by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. Extended argument was had, and the Chairman [Mr. CRISP] rendered the following decision, to be found on page 1340 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the second session of the Sixty-fourth Congress:

The Chair is ready to rule. Of course, the Chair would be glad to hear from any gentleman who wishes to be heard on the point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] proposes an increase in the amount appropriated in the bill for pneumatic-tube service to $1,061,000, and provides that it shall be used for the pneumatic-tube service in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and Brooklyn. Under the law this pneumatic-tube service is authorized in those particular cities, and the law provides in letting contracts for the pneumatic-tube service in those particular cities the Postmaster General shall observe the law relating to letting of mail contracts except, before a contract shall be entered into for pneumatic-tube service within those named cities, he shall first appoint a commission and that commission shall report recommending that the service be used.

In the opinion of the Chair the amendment does not enlarge the number of cities authorized by law to have pneumatic-tube service. The amendment increases the amount appropriated for this service, but the amount proposed comes within the amount limited by statute. In the opinion of the Chair, if this amendment should prevail, the Postmaster General is not required to use it; but the Postmaster General would have the right, if he saw fit, to appoint another commission, and if that commission recommended the use of the service he would have funds at his disposal to continue the service as provided by law. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

That is the latest expression from a Chairman of this House upon this identic question, and I leave it for the Chair to pass upon the point of order raised by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, if I wanted some one to make the question real muddy, I would surely call upon my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. The question there raised, in Mr. CRISP's ruling, is not this question at all. The question presented there was whether you had a right to use a part of a fund that was being appropriated for a specific purpose in the extension of work within the limitation provided by law. Here is a question presented to you where a statute is repealed by operation within itself. It provides that it shall not be effective—and it is a statute for the purpose of making contracts for the Postal Service—after the lapse of the first contract of 10 years until after a report made by a postal commission shall have been filed determining the fact that the service is available and ought to be continued. The Congress of the United States took exactly that view of the question. If that statute had not expired by limitation, if the conditions under which its existence should continue were enforced, there would be not a particle of sense in the passage of the law as we passed it at the last Congress extending the operation of the contract under the old statute, until a commission appointed by the House should inquire into the question. It is too simple a question, in my judgment, for discussion between lawyers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Section 2 of Rule XXI is the rule governing this matter and is so well known to the Members that the Chair will not rehearse it. It is the rule that legislation shall not be added to an appropriation bill, and if offered is subject to the point of order. The Chair thinks this amendment is broader in its scope than the amendment cited by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and the Chair thinks this case is a clear case of attempting to add legislation to an appropriation bill, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa: Page 15, line 25, after the numerals "$2,600,000," insert the following: "No part of this money shall be paid for any messenger service unless it be to the mail messenger who was the lowest qualified bidder at the time the contract was first called for."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is useless and I will not take up the time of the committee arguing the point of order. This identical motion was submitted at the end of the Sixty-fourth Congress with the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] in the chair. It was debated and the point of order overruled. I refer you to page 1355, last session of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Mr. MOON. I am not caring about the point of order, I just wanted to reserve it as I wanted to hear the gentleman on its merits.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will hear me on the merits of the matter we have under consideration. The item in the appropriation bill is to pay the mail messengers who serve this Government. The amendment I will admit does not go as far as I wish it did. These men are faithful and devoted to the duty they have to perform. They carry the mail in our towns and villages from the post office down to the railroad and back. The Government insists on letting this by contract to the lowest bidder. Now, I submit that in this day and age this system is not a fair method of hiring labor, but we can not strike at the system but we can strike at one of the vicious methods that they use to put this labor down further than the lowest bid, and that is this: I ask any gentleman who will be called upon to vote if he thinks it is fair, after you have asked some poor man to bid for a chance to earn a little bread for his family, if it is fair for any department of this Government to go out and take that bid and go to some man that did not bid and say, "I will give you the job if you will do it for $25 a year less than the low bid." And that is what your department is doing. This amendment will compel them, when they ask for a low bid and a man qualifies, to accept that low bid.

Mr. MOON. Is all of this work let out by bid?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. MOON. Is it not a fact that it is not a service of that kind altogether? I think it is purely contract, and sometimes the railroads perform it themselves.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That comes on another item. That has nothing to do with the mail-messenger service.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman is speaking, as I understand, I may be wrong, about putting a limitation on this appropriation for payment for messenger service between trains and the depot and post office?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am referring to the item as it is in this bill. Now, I will admit that the railroads hire some service, but that is paid for under another item in this bill, and this item has nothing to do with that. This is where the service is less than a quarter of a mile from the depot to the post office.

Mr. MOON. What service is the gentleman talking about if he is not talking about that? Is not the gentleman talking about service between the railroad, the depot, and——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am talking about the mail-messenger service in the item in the Post Office bill.

Mr. MOON. The First Assistant Postmaster General says:

It is service such as between the depot and the post office in small locations and, of course, a number of those contractors resign and we have to readvertise.

Is that the service the gentleman is talking about?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is mail-messenger service between the post office and the railroad, and I am informed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that the railroads do not perform any at present, but I am inclined to think he is mistaken, but that makes no difference.

Mr. MOON. The proof shows this. To be perfectly candid with the gentleman, has he noticed the statement of the department with reference to this matter? Shall I read it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; I would like the gentleman to do so if they have anything to say.

Mr. MOON. It is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is "For mail messenger service, $2,600,000, an increase of $357,000." Is this due to the natural and normal increase in the business?

Mr. KOONS. Yes; this is to take care of the increased cost of the service; also on account of the service at some of these encampments which we must perform.

Mr. MADDEN. This is not the Special Delivery Service?

Mr. KOONS. No, sir; it is service such as between the depot and the post office in small locations and, of course, a number of those contractors resign and we have to readvertise.

What I want to get at is this: If the gentleman simply wished to place a limitation on the amount of appropriation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If they let this by contract I want the department to be forced to let it to the lowest bidder, and that when the low bid comes in and the man is qualified, he shall have it. They can require that there shall be two or three bids; they can require that there shall be no collusion between bidders; they can require anything they have a mind to, but it must be publicly announced what they require of a man to qualify.

Mr. MOON. Suppose that is all done now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It has not been done heretofore.

Mr. MOON. What evidence has the gentleman that it has not been done?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If it has been done it has been done in the last year, or since I called the attention of the committee to their contemptible methods.

Mr. MOON. That has been the lawful way of doing it all the time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, they have been illegal.

Mr. MOON. Now, what new law does the gentleman want to make on that subject?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Just what I have written in there; and if that is done, you should have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MOON. Suppose that is the law now, what is the use of rewriting it?

Mr. HULL or Iowa. It is not carried out by the department.

Mr. MOON. You can not make the department carry it out by rewriting the existing law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I know this, that I was in a post office for 13 years, and that contract was let a number of times, and they never accepted the low bid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes more. I would like to address a question to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa have five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There are several thousands of these mail messengers, and they are serving this Government to-day, whether it is cold or warm, rain or shine, and they are getting from 50 cents to a dollar a day to do it. Do you think a man can live on that? They get up at 6 o'clock in the morning, and many of them are not off duty until 9 o'clock at night.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman pardon me if I ask him for the exact language of his amendment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman mean by that, that if a contractor should resign the service would not be performed at all?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I mean, if the Government asked for the lowest bid, under certain regulations, when they let that bid they shall not have the right to go out and peddle the low bid to the high bid, or to a man outside, and get him to beat down the wages of the low bidder, if he is the qualified bidder.

Mr. MOON. The law now provides for advertisement and contract, and it is let to the lowest bidder. The Government reserves under the general law the right to reject any and all bids. The gentleman does not want to change that law, and could not if he wanted to, on this bill. Now, suppose the contract has been let to the lowest bidder and that bidder throws up the contract and quits, is it the purpose of the gentleman to prevent the Government from making any other contract?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly not, and the gentleman knows it is not.

Mr. MOON. I did not think it was.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The language is plain. You ought not to object to the amendment.

Mr. MOON. There are a good many things, possibly, I ought not to do that I am doing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What I wish to know is, is it fair or right to advertise that you intend to let a contract to the lowest bidder and, after some one qualifies as such, to let it to another party?

Mr. MOON. But I do not think it is quite reasonable to put that thing in the law that is now the law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am only appealing for these poor fellows who do not have enough with which to feed their families to-night; and we all admit that this great Government of ours ought to pay a man a living wage.

Mr. MOON. Everybody feels the way you do about that. You are not alone on that.

Mr. SLOAN. May I ask the gentleman if this does not relate to men who carry the mails in small towns where the post office is a considerable distance from the railway station?

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield just a moment, I will say that I do not care anything about this. I think it is a useless thing to do. I will not say that it is a foolish thing. If you want to put it on, I have no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. It is a very good place for me to terminate my speech.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Thank you; and for the thousands of these poor fellows, I again thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Division, Mr. Chairman. I want to see the gentlemen rise who would vote to defend this outrageous method of doing business.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Railway Mail Service: For 15 division superintendents, at $3,250 each; 2 assistant superintendents, at $2,350 each; 15 assistant division superintendents, at $2,250 each; 115 chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,100 each; 465 clerks, grade 10, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 2,032 clerks, grade 9, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 393 clerks, grade 8, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 8,299 clerks, grade 7, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 1,078 clerks, grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 1,788 clerks, grade 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 3,801 clerks, grade 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 65 clerks, grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 1,974 clerks, grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 1,837 clerks, grade 1, at not exceeding $900 each; in all, $28,190,000: Provided, That railway postal clerks shall be credited with full time when deadheading under orders of the department, and the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum; and, to enable the Postmaster General to reclassify the salaries of railway postal clerks and make necessary appointments and promotions, he may exceed the number of clerks in such of the grades as may be necessary: Provided, That the number of clerks in the aggregate as herein authorized be not exceeded.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman if there is not an error in the number of clerks provided for under this paragraph?

Mr. MOON. I do not know of any error in it. The gentleman ought to know as much about it as I do. He is on the committee.

Mr. STEENERSON. My attention was called to an error, and I had it marked on my copy of the bill, but I have not got it here.

Mr. MOON. Let us go on.

Mr. STEENERSON. Very well. I thought the chairman had it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails, $5,800,000: Provided, That the Postmaster General shall be authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $103,000, to cover the cost to the United States of maintaining sea post service on steamships conveying the mails.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. The appropriation in the current bill for transportation of foreign mails is $3,720,900. The amount here carried for this service is $5,800,000, an increase of more than $2,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. That is due to the establishment of the Army on the other side, and $2,000,000 is estimated as the amount needed for that service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry in that particular whether this $2,000,000 additional is for the expense of transporting the mails to our Army in France and in continental Europe?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and for the distribution of the mail there.

Mr. STAFFORD. For the distribution of the mail?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MOON. All mail.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the former practice, before the war conditions prevailed with an army over there, we paid very little for the transportation of the mails across European countries. The expense was borne by the countries over which the mail was carried. I realize the necessity of the expense that arises by reason of our taking exclusive charge of the handling and dispatch and the delivery of the mails for our soldiers in Europe, and I suppose, then, that this $2,000,000 additional is largely for that expense.

Mr. MOON. Largely so, but of course the general mail is bound to increase some by reason of the general conditions.

Mr. STAFFORD. The general mail would be restricted, because we know that there is not as much foreign mail being dispatched, other than that for our soldiers, as was carried prior to the war. All mail is virtually interrupted to the central powers.

All mail is virtually interrupted in its dispatch to Russia, and the mail is less even to Sweden and Norway and the other neutral countries, but the mail necessarily is very much larger as dispatched to France, which includes the mail for our Army.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. The hearings disclose on page 84, if the gentleman will turn to them, that they are handling this foreign business very cheaply. It is stated there that the mail is handled per month at a cost of 12 cents and at a cost of $1.44 per year for each soldier in France. It is stated:

The cost of the service, based on the present Army over there, is $1.44 per man per year, or 12 cents per man per month. The $2,000,000 is obtained by taking 100,000 men per month for next year at 12 cents per man per month.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that our Post Office Department has virtually established a postal service of its own in France?

Mr. COX. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. And is paying out $2,000,000 for its maintenance in this particular?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not only for the transportation of our mails, as indicated here, but also for the maintenance and delivery and disposition of the mail for our Army?

Mr. COX. That is true.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is subject to this qualification, that the distribution and delivery of the mail to the soldiers is not performed by the Postal Service but by the Army. It is not actually delivered to the soldiers.

Mr. MADDEN. It is delivered to the companies.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to know if we are sending over to France civilian employees to look after the distribution of the mails, or whether we are utilizing the enlisted force for that purpose.

Mr. COX. We have 86 men there now.

Mr. STEENERSON. They stated that the postal officials took care of the mails until they were ready to be delivered to the organizations in the Army. Then the Army men take it and distribute it among the soldiers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can any member of the committee advise us as to the means of transportation to continental Europe and whether the old method prevails of sending the mail on the trans-Atlantic steamers or whether the Government is sending the mail by steamers under its own control?

Mr. COX. The transport ships are carrying a great deal of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make this inquiry because of information that I have received from the Third Assistant Postmaster General's office, that frankable matter would be carried to our soldiers at the European war front without extra cost. This could only be done in case the mails were being transported on Government-operated ships; because if they were being transported as formerly on privately owned ships, naturally we would have to pay additional for that character of service.

Mr. MOON. Was not a letter put into the RECORD directed to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] on that question?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman will refer to that he will get the information he wants.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was unaware of that letter having been printed. Can the gentleman from Indiana in a word give us the views of the department on that question?

Mr. COX. I really can not. If the gentleman will read the letter he will get the information he wants.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to examine the letter for my own information.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes in which to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. I was somewhat struck with the cheapness of the way in which the Government was handling the mail to our soldiers. Mr. Praeger, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, in his statement before the Post Office Committee, said:

The cost of the service, based on the present Army over there, is $1.44 per man per year, or 12 cents per man per month. The $2,000,000 is obtained by taking 100,000 men per month for next year at 12 cents per man per month.

Mr. COX. That is not much in excess of what it costs this country per inhabitant.

Mr. MADDEN. That is for the entire service, but this is only the cost of the transportation over there.

Mr. COX. You say it is $1.44 per man?

Mr. PRAEGER. It is $1.44 per man per year.

* * * * * * *

Mr. COX. It looks to me like you were getting it very cheaply.

Mr. PRAEGER. I will tell you why we get by with it cheaply. It is for the reason that we have only four French liners on which we have to pay for carrying the mail across. The rest of the mail is carried on transports, in vacant space in the transports, which costs nothing out of our fund.

Mr. COX. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General tells me that it costs $1.59 per patron on the rural routes.

So we are getting our mail over to our Army more cheaply than we are getting it to the patrons of the rural routes.

Mr. MADDEN. The reason for that is this, though, that while we deliver the mail to the individual rural patrons by carriers we only deliver the mail through the Post Office Department to the regimental units at the front.

Mr. COX. That is true.

Mr. MADDEN. And they make the distribution among the men.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think there are two matters in connection with the delivery and handling of mails to soldiers that ought to be given very careful attention. One is, why is there the discrimination between our men in foreign service having free postage and our men in service in this country not being given the same privilege? That has been called to my attention quite recently. I can personally see no reason why these men are not just exactly as much entitled to that service, of the freedom of the mails, as the men who are overseas.

Another matter that has recently come to my attention is partially covered by the letter from Mr. Praeger, to which reference has been made. I received a letter yesterday from a gentleman having two sons overseas, who writes me that he can go to Canada, mail letters and packages to his sons, have them promptly delivered, and secure a reply from them more quickly than he can from his own home in Massachusetts, and that he has done so in order to hear from his boys. It strikes me that such a condition as that, and the statement that there are thousands and thousands of bundles of mail addressed to our soldiers stored in warehouses in Paris, ought to be given prompt attention by the postal authorities. I have transmitted the letter to the Post Office Department with a request for a prompt investigation.

Personally, I do not think there can be any excuse for such a condition as I have described and which I am sure does exist, that mail can be delivered through Canada and sent to the soldiers in France and reach them with a fair degree of promptness, and that we can not get similar service from this country to our boys over there. I am not criticizing the department. I realize that the conditions under which they are serving are difficult; they are probably doing the best they can, but when such conditions as these are brought to their attention I think they are entitled to careful investigation; and I also wish that the committee or some one familiar with the details would explain why the soldiers over there should have free postage and not those here. Both are doing their whole duty and deserve the best consideration and attention we can give them. When the proper time comes I hope to see free postal facilities given every man in the service.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts I will say that several bills were introduced in the last Congress providing for free mail to the soldiers of the United States as well as to the soldiers abroad. I introduced one such bill and the gentleman from New York introduced another. The Post Office Department appeared before the Senate committee, I think, and offered a substitute, which is now the law, which results simply in free mail to the soldiers abroad. It went into the revenue bill and therefore there was no opportunity to change it. I will say that probably there will be an opportunity to make a change.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman if it is expected that such a change will be considered by the Post Office Committee in the near future?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the Post Office Committee will consider it, but I have my doubts about the Post Office Department.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. In sending a letter home from France, is it mailed in the French post office?

Mr. STEENERSON. I understand that they have a United States mail service under supervision, and when a letter goes through that service the French have nothing to do with it. Ordinarily when you mail a letter in a foreign country it goes by the conveyance belonging to the foreign country and they get the postage.

Mr. LITTLE. That is an answer to the complaint of the gentleman from Massachusetts in regard to sending anything through the French mail; of course we can not change it. The soldier puts his letter in the French mail with a French stamp on it.

Mr. STEENERSON. If he mails it in the French post office, but if he mails it in the service under the military control they have nothing to do with it.

Mr. LITTLE. There are a few consular offices like Shanghai where they send their letters through the American mail.

Mr. STEENERSON. If the Post Office Department made arrangements whereby the soldiers could send mail free of postage that would have to be by the consent of the foreign government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are about to reach line 21, as I understand it, and I am going to reserve a point of order.

Mr. COX. I make the point of order that the gentleman is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Line 21 has been read.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I immediately rose and moved to strike out the last word and gained recognition, and gentlemen ought not to be precluded from making a point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order, to ask the chairman whether he would have any objection to an amendment so as to place the employees under the civil service.

Mr. MOON. This is an entire new section of the bill. It is for the purpose of censoring the mails, to prevent traitorous communications. It is subject to a point of order, if the gentleman wants to make it.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Tennessee has not said whether he would be willing to accept an amendment.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman take the responsibility of making the point of order on the section?

Mr. STEENERSON. I was reserving the point of order to find out the attitude of the gentleman from Tennessee as to whether he would accept the amendment.

Mr. MOON. The attitude of the gentleman from Tennessee is that he believes the section ought to pass as it is. The purpose of it has been stated. If the gentleman withdraws his point of order to the section we may consider some amendment to it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order and offer this amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, at the end of line 21, insert the following:

"Provided, That all persons employed under this appropriation shall be appointed from the list of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission in accordance with the civil-service law:

"Provided further, That the authority under this appropriation shall cease to be in effect when the existing state of war shall have passed, the date of which shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President:

"And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to submit to Congress at the beginning of its regular session in December of each year a detailed statement of all persons appointed, and the salary or compensation paid or allowed to each."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that as a whole. If the gentleman wants to have the section amended so as to require a report from the Post Office Department to the Congress I have no objection to that part of it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the gentleman can not censor my amendment. I have a perfect right to offer this amendment.

Mr. MOON. I have no question about the gentleman's offering it, but I am making the point of order to it.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman knows that is not subject to the point of order. What is the point of order?

Mr. MOON. It is that it is new law.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the whole thing is new law.

Mr. MOON. I know it is, and that is the reason I made the gentleman withdraw his point of order to this before we agreed to consider it.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the gentleman knows very well that when you make new law you have a right to offer an amendment to that proposition.

Mr. MOON. Not unless it is strictly germane to the question.

Mr. STEENERSON. This is germane to the appropriation.

Mr. MOON. It is not germane to the appropriation to undertake to place the employees of the department under civil service in that connection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is ready to rule I do not wish to take up any of his time, but——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the whole paragraph is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MOON. Surely, and if the gentleman makes the point of order upon it it will go out.

Mr. GILLETT. Then, we can certainly amend it.

Mr. MOON. Not until after you have passed on the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. It is certainly germane, because the general law provides that all appointments like this shall be filled from the civil service. I do not see why this would not be appointed from the civil service, unless it carries a provision to the contrary.

Mr. MOON. That might be, but the point is this: Here is a section that is new. It simply provides for a censorship of foreign mails. That is subject to a point of order, and if anyone wants to make the point of order, he can do so; but the point of order is not made. It is now proposed to amend it. I insist that an amendment that covers the placing of employees under the civil service is not germane to a proposition to censor foreign mails.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that that proposition is preposterous, because the censorship of foreign mails provides, of course, as the gentleman will admit, for the employment of clerks. To say whether clerks shall be appointed from the civil service or not is certainly germane to the appointment of clerks.

Mr. MOON. This leaves the matter to the department, and that is where it ought to be left.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. On page 18, line 21, provision is made for a censorship of foreign mails. That provision was subject to the point of order, but has already been accepted, no point of order having been made against it. The Chair thinks that any matter by way of amendment that is germane should be acceptable and not subject to the point of order, but the Chair thinks that the first proviso of the amendment is not germane and modifies the existing civil-service law. Therefore this invades the rule as to germaneness, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 14.

So the committee determined that the decision of the Chair should stand as the decision of the committee.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOON. I will ask the gentleman, who is a member of the committee and ought not to be offended because the House does not agree with him——

Mr. STEENERSON. I thought the gentleman was perfectly willing to have this matter offered as an amendment. I offer it as a matter of principle. The gentleman did not say he was going to make a point of order.

Mr. MOON. I said that I was willing that this last provision, although it might not be in order, might be offered. Every man in this House knows how I stand——

Mr. STEENERSON. If the Chair will send down that amendment I will redraft it in a minute.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman will offer the last provision——

Mr. STEENERSON. I will offer each one as a separate amendment. Mr. Chairman, I offer the second proviso, to wit:

Provided, That the authority under this appropriation shall cease to be in effect when the state of war shall have passed, the date of which shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President."

Mr. MOON. The gentleman offers that?

Mr. STEENERSON. I offer it as an amendment.

Mr. MOON. I do not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEENERSON: Page 18 after line 21, insert the following:

"Provided, That the authority under this appropriation shall cease to be in effect when the state of war shall have passed, the date of which shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEENERSON: Page 18, at the end of line 21, insert the following:

"And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to submit to Congress at the beginning of its regular session in December of each year a detailed statement of all persons appointed and the salary or compensation paid or allowed to each."

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, we need not discuss that, that is all right.

Mr. STEENERSON. I presume I have a right to discuss it.

Mr. MOON. But the gentleman does not want to discuss it after it is agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. But it has not been agreed to yet.

Mr. MOON. It will be.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads assume that I have no right to five minutes?

Mr. MOON. Of course he has, go ahead.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this provision for $1,200,000, as explained by the officials of the Post Office Department, was that they now had employed some 150 people as translators. This censorship, they explained, was not intended to operate upon mails to Europe except the mails to Spain. All other trans-Atlantic mails were censored by the allies, and we had no part of that expense. This provision was intended to cover the censorship of the mails to Latin-American countries and across the Pacific.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. I would like to know what Congress would do with the list when it was submitted by the Postmaster General?

Mr. STEENERSON. We will find out whether there has been any improper use of the money. The $1,200,000 is a lump-sum appropriation that may be employed, and some people may be given $10,000 a year and some $1,000 a year, and unless we require a list there might be the danger of an improper use of the funds. There certainly can not be any objection to this amendment and, as far as I know, there is none. It is intended to safeguard the public funds, so that they can not be used in a wasteful manner. With these billions of dollars being expended by the public officials in this war it seems to me that every appropriation ought to be guarded in the most careful way.

The lump-sum system of appropriations has been discredited and has been criticized, and, so far as I know, has been largely abandoned by Congress. The Appropriations Committee has constantly sought to segregate appropriations. Now, in this instance, instead of having 100 translators at $1,200 and 100 at $1,500 each, and so forth, here is a lump sum that they could distribute among their favorites if they felt inclined. And for that reason this provision, which was carried in the other laws we passed last Congress, I have taken absolutely from another statute, which I have here on my desk, of the last Congress. So far as the other provisions in regard to civil service are concerned, I will say that the censorship was stated by Mr. Praeger before our committee to be carried on under the provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act, which is printed in the report we made. The trading-with-the-enemy act contains exactly the same provision in regard to civil service that I have proposed, and it occurred to me that the provision of these laws to safeguard these funds was a perfectly proper limitation upon this appropriation, and for that reason I made it. I was disappointed when the gentleman sought to be so technical as to rule out the civil-service amendment. I shall offer that later on, I think, in parliamentary form. But there can be no objection to the Post Office Department making a report of the manner in which the fund has been expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEENERSON: Page 18, line 21, after the amendments already adopted, insert the following:

"Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be employed for the payment of salaries except to persons who are appointed under the provisions of the civil-service act."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether that is subject to a point of order or not. I reserve it. It may be a limitation on the appropriation. If it is not, it is subject to a point of order. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Minnesota, if he wishes to discuss the matter. I want to hear something about it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say in regard to the merits of this amendment that I have talked with the Civil Service Commission on this subject, and they say that they can furnish translators better than anyone else. They say there are some confidential employees now, which is all the department has asked for, and these confidential employees, amounting to some 50 or 60, were appointed under the order of the President of the United States under the trading-with-the-enemy act, which is the act that we are trying to help carry on by this provision in this bill. They said that those confidential employees, who are especially selected, are under the Solicitor of the Post Office Department, who is an employee of the Department of Justice. But the Civil Service Commission told me in conversation that they had ample facilities and they were especially anxious to have this matter through their lists, because they thought it was better for the country. Since the war was declared, and perhaps before, they have made special efforts to have tests of loyalty of all civil-service employees.

They go into that more extensively than the Post Office Department possibly could. They say that if their lists are employed in making the selections it will save the Post Office Department a great deal of difficulty in making proper selections, and that they have ample facilities for supplying translators or any other employees that might be desired under this provision. And there having been made provision already for confidential employees, which are under the Department of Justice, it seems to me that this provision will be of great aid to the carrying out of this one. And further, the trading-with-the-enemy act, which we are by this appropriation to carry out, and which is printed in the hearings which we had before the Post Office Committee, contains exactly this provision and is the law to-day. So that the law we are seeking to carry into effect by this provision had the same civil-service provision as this, and for that reason it seems to me that we ought to adopt this amendment.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to insist on the point of order when I think a point of order is not well taken. This, perhaps, may be treated as a limitation on this appropriation, and for other reasons it may be in order. But I feel like I ought to question the good faith of the gentleman from Minnesota when as a member of the committee he made no suggestions along this line, and also when the matter was taken up a while ago, after it was ruled out of order, he was allowed to go back with the understanding that the last two propositions alone would be considered.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman had wanted to take advantage of it, he could. I am not complaining of that.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman knows that this provision concerning censorship occupied only a very few minutes before the committee, and there was not time to discuss it.

Mr. MOON. Then it ought to have occupied more time, if the gentleman thought it so important. The gentleman failed to do his duty in not taking more time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a censorship proposition. This is not the employment of an ordinary public servant under the civil service. I do not care what a man thinks about the civil-service law. I do not think anything of it myself, and, so far as I am concerned, I have no very great respect for the civil-service law. But I want to say in that connection that of all the propositions in the world that ought not to come before the Civil Service Commission this is one. Here is work that must be done quickly, and it must be done expeditiously, and it must be done by men who have in the utmost degree the confidence of the Government and the War Board and a commission composed of men engaged in the service. It does not make any difference how efficient a clerk may be or how well he may stand a scholastic examination; if he does not possess those qualifications that would justify the department in making him a censorship employee he ought not to be there, and the Civil Service Commission ought not to have anything to do with it. Perhaps most of these men ought to be secret officers of the Government. I am surprised that the gentleman from Minnesota offers such an amendment. If it were not for my respect for him I would think that the amendment was coming from the Kaiser. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. STEENERSON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that and demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana demands tellers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Indiana is too late in demanding tellers. Other intervening business has taken place. If the gentleman had demanded tellers on that point of no quorum, then he would have been in order.

Mr. MOON. Tellers were demanded in the beginning.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; tellers were not demanded in the beginning. The gentleman from Indiana waved away gentlemen who suggested that he demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, demanded tellers at the same time.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Wisconsin knows that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Wisconsin does not know that. The gentleman from Wisconsin knows that several gentlemen on the Democratic side asked the gentleman from Indiana to demand tellers and he declined to demand tellers.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Chair has not the proper sequence in his mind. It may be that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] did say something about tellers, but when the point of no quorum was made the Chair went on to count, to ascertain if there was a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a very common occurrence here that when a point of no quorum is made tellers are demanded, and the Chair understood that was done in this case. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Twenty-five gentleman have demanded tellers—a sufficient number.

Mr. GILLETT. Is this for tellers on the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will count.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee to let it go over until to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). Sixty-six Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORLAND. If the committee rises now, the first business when the committee sits again is to take the count by tellers, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that that is right.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FERRIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, same to take effect immediately.

Believe me, I am,
Yours, most truly, JOHN E. RAKER.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

PANAMA CANAL (H. DOC. NO. 569).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the annual report of the Governor of the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 13 December, 1917.

The SPEAKER. The message and accompanying document will be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The message is ordered printed, but not the accompanying document.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 14, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a report on the status of the Georgia Experiment Station (H. Doc. No. 565); to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting statement showing exchanges made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, of typewriters, adding machines, and other similar labor-saving devices, by the Navy Department and Naval Establishment, including the United States Marine Corps (H. Doc. No. 566); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an itemized statement of expenditures made by this department and charged to the appropriation "Contingent expenses, Department of the Interior, 1917," fiscal year ended June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 567); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an itemized statement of expenditures made by this department and charged to the appropriation "Repairs of buildings, Department of the Interior, 1917," for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 568); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 194) providing for the consideration of House joint resolution 174, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 215), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SHERWOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred sundry bills of the House, reported in lieu thereof the bill (H. R. 7634) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, accompanied by a report (No. 214), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 7634) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; committed to the Committee of the Whole House.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 7635) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Greenfield, Ind.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McCULLOCH: A bill (H. R. 7636) to increase the compensation of fourth-class postmasters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 7637) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dike on Depot Slough, Lincoln County, Oreg.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 7638) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make payment to the employees of the Navy for leave not taken and used by the employees; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 7639) for equipment and maintenance allowance for carriers on rural free-delivery routes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. JONES of Texas: A bill (H. R. 7640) to regulate the number of jurors constituting the juries in the district courts of the United States and the number of challenges for each party, and also the number of grand jurors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 7641) to provide for an increase of compensation to persons in the classified civil service for calendar year of 1918; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 7642) to amend paragraph or subdivision (a) of section 201 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 7643) to permit the manufacture of denatured alcohol by mixing domestic and wood alcohol while in process of distillation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 7644) for equipment and maintenance allowance for carriers on rural free delivery routes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SIEGEL: A bill (H. R. 7645) authorizing the President to appoint as assistant adjutants general in The Adjutant General's Department of the United States Army certain clerks employed in The Adjutant General's Department of the Army and heretofore known as "Army field clerks"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: A bill (H. R. 7646) to provide for the detail of Army officers to the educational institutions of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 7647) to amend paragraph 6, section 200, of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LUNN: Resolution (H. Res. 196) congratulating the people of Great Britain on the capture of Jerusalem; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. EDMONDS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 187) proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States to authorize uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce and to provide penalties for enforcement; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARLIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 188) extending until January 1, 1919, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LONDON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 189) to provide for a commission to inquire into the advisability of establishing national insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and sickness; to the Committee on Labor.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 7648) granting a pension to Mrs. James B. Boyer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 7649) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Vickers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7650) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Long; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7651) granting an increase of pension to Theron A. Beach; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 7652) granting a pension to Belle Vanneman; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7653) granting an increase of pension to Sue N. Inness; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BESHLIN: A bill (H. R. 7654) granting an increase of pension to Lyman F. Deming; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to Sidney J. Crocker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: A bill (H. R. 7656) granting an increase of pension to Adam E. Haughn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CRISP: A bill (H. R. 7657) granting an increase of pension to Oscar N. Cowell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DICKINSON: A bill (H. R. 7658) granting a pension to Hezekiah S. Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7659) granting an increase of pension to Franklin M. Joines; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DIXON: A bill (H. R. 7660) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Emmert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 7661) for the relief of Charles Tomkins; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7662) for the relief of John A. Ryan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 7663) for the relief of J. C. McConnell; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GARD: A bill (H. R. 7664) granting an increase of pension to Milton Ross; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7665) for the relief of Louis Cupp; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HASTINGS: A bill (H. R. 7666) for the relief of Eliza Audre, daughter of Maria Colston; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 7667) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Salton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7668) for the relief of J. W. La Bare; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. IRELAND: A bill (H. R. 7669) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Booker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LESHER: A bill (H. R. 7670) granting a pension to Charles W. Hanson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7671) granting an increase of pension to Joseph D. Fulmer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7672) granting a pension to Sarah E. Dieffenbacher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7673) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Bubb; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 7674) granting a pension to Henry P. Kohn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McARTHUR: A bill (H. R. 7675) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Ellis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 7676) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Storrs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 7677) granting a pension to Mary J. Bernard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 7678) granting a pension to Chester E. Benner; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7679) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Maddox; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 7680) granting an increase of pension to Preston C. Walker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7681) granting a pension to William Crawford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 7682) granting an increase of pension to George W. McKnight; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7683) granting a pension to Francis M. Walker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STEELE: A bill (H. R. 7684) for the relief of Caleb Aber; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SWIFT: A bill (H. R. 7685) granting a pension to Stewart J. Donnelly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 7686) granting an increase of pension to Arba H. Trufant; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7687) granting a pension to Annie T. LaMarche; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG or North Dakota: A bill (H. R. 7688) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Keligher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 7689) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Weber; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of sundry citizens of Illinois, Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Texas, and Virginia, favoring the Moore Purple Cross bill (H. R. 5410) or the Wolcott Purple Cross bill (S. 2692); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), resolutions of the American Federation of Labor at its thirty-seventh annual convention, urging the increase of salaries to postal clerks and letter carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also (by request), memorial of board of aldermen of the city of St. Louis, Mo., requesting the immediate passage of H. R. 6537; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also (by request), resolutions of the Centennial Evangelical Church, Chicago, Ill., and also by the churches of southeast Kansas City, Mo., favoring the prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of members of the First Christian Church, St. Joseph, Mo.; the students of Union Theological Seminary, New York City; and by sundry citizens of New York City, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), memorial of Grace Evangelical Church, Chicago, Ill., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARY: Memorial of the thirty-seventh annual convention of American Federation of Labor, asking for increase in salary to postal clerks and letter carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of John S. Sills & Sons, of New York, against reducing mailing rates for publishers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DARROW: Petitions of 70 citizens of Philadelphia; 23 members of Bellfield Avenue United Evangelical Sunday School; Logan Methodist Episcopal Sunday School; and 241 citizens of West Philadelphia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAVIDSON: Petitions of 70 citizens of Green Lake County, Wis., favoring suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. FOCHT: Petition of sundry citizens of Huntington County, Pa., favoring Federal suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Memorial of the American Federation of Labor for the increase of salaries of postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: Petition of sundry citizens of Berrien County, Mich., praying for the immediate submission of a Federal amendment providing for woman suffrage; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. KAHN: Papers to accompany pension bill H. R. 7500; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Petitions of Mrs. D. Hunter, of Providence, R. I.; Newport, R. I., Branch of the Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage; and Mrs. William B. Weeden and H. A. Du Villard, of Providence, R. I., opposing woman suffrage legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Bethany Free Baptist Church, Roscoe W. Phillips, Thomas C. Perry, and A. Adella Bullock, all of Pawtucket, R. I., favoring passage of the national prohibition amendment; also Rhode Island State Grange, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of William G. Haggerty and six other citizens of Maryland, favoring national prohibition; memorials by the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, Baltimore Md., and a mass meeting held in the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Annapolis, Md., favoring national prohibition; petitions of John G. Hager and five other citizens of Baltimore, Md., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of Baltimore committee of the National Women's Trade-Union League, and also of the Just Government League of Sudlersville, Md., favoring the suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Also, petition of Joseph L. Ferguson and seven other citizens of Maryland, favoring H. R. 1654; also a petition of A. G. Wellington, Baltimore, Md., protesting against lowering the postal rates to publishers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Resolution of the congregation of the Linden Hills Congregational Church, Rev. G. B. Drake, pastor, Minneapolis, Minn., urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the Men's Club of the Linden Hills Congregational Church, D. L. Glenn, president, Minneapolis, Minn., urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Ladies' Bible Class of the Linden Hills Congregational Church, Mrs. Max Farwell, secretary, Minneapolis, Minn., urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church congregation, Minneapolis, Minn., Mr. Frank Chatfield, president of trustees, urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition to the Minneapolis Waitresses' Alliance, Miss Mae Rhodes, secretary, Minneapolis, Minn., protesting against the passage of Senate joint resolution 17; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the executive board, Minnesota branch, Woman's Board of Missions of the Interior, representing 12,000 Congregational women in Minnesota, Miss Ruth Thompson, of Minneapolis, secretary, urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of Minneapolis Colony of New England Women, Mrs. F. A. Wadsworth, secretary, urging the passage of the Federal amendment in favor of prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the First Methodist Episcopal Church Sunday School, 272 present, Mr. Walter R. Meyers, superintendent, urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Women's Society of Trinity Baptist Church, Mrs. W. A. Graves, secretary, urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of Dorcas Society of the Bethel Swedish Baptist Church, Mrs. O. Dahlberg, president, Minneapolis, Minn., urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Wesley Auxiliary, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Mrs. Carrie E. Heath, secretary, Minneapolis, Minn., urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Minnesota delegation to the National Women's Christian Temperance convention, representing 8,000 Minnesota members; Rosette Hendricks, president; Eva Waterman, vice president; Kate Kercher, corresponding secretary; and Della R. Mandigo, treasurer, urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of a committee of the Minneapolis district, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, representing 1,500 Minneapolis women, by Mrs. G. I. Gorham, Mrs. A. F. Bruchholz, and Miss Mabelle A. Crow, urging national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Minneapolis Retail Druggists' Association, Henry Rauch, secretary, urging the passage of the Edmonds bill (H. R. 5531); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAHER: Petition of American Federation of Labor, favoring bill to increase pay of letter carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Memorial of Philadelphia Bourse, favoring bill for war-supply board; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of Mrs. C. J. Steediman and 18 other citizens of Rhode Island, asking that the suffrage amendment be not submitted; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens, churches, and church organizations of the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PETERS: Memorial of committee of public safety and defense of the cities of Waterville and Winslow, Me., asking legislation to prevent pro-German activity and disloyalty; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RANDALL: Memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Glendale, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Monrovia, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Cypress Park Presbyterian Church, of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the First Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, of Pomona, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of congregation of the Lutheran Church of Glendale, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Glendale Presbyterian Church, Glendale, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Park Baptist Church, Utica, N. Y., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of First Methodist Episcopal Church of Pasadena, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the First Baptist Church, Long Beach, Cal., favoring war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Kern County Council of Defense, Bakersville, Cal., favoring war-time prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROWE: Petition of upward of 540 members of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church and Central Branch Young Men's Christian Association, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SABATH: Memorial of Cement Mixers' Local Union No. 76, Chicago, Ill., urging legislation compelling railroads to increase the supply of cars for the building trades; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SCHALL: Petitions of sundry citizens in Minnesota, favoring submission of a Federal suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of C. A. Mace, White Earth, Minn., desiring a readjustment of the pay of fourth-class postmasters; also petition of the president of the New Jersey State Association, National Association of Post Office Clerks, and of George Hoban, Fairbault, Minn., favoring the Madden law; also petition of Carl E. Skog, asking increased salaries for rural carriers and urging pay for pouch service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. STINESS: Petition of joint local executive board of the International Union of the United Brewery Workmen and 32 other citizens of Rhode Island protesting against constitutional prohibition; also petition by Theodore C. Gleason and 375 other citizens of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; also, a memorial from Rhode Island State Grange (representing 3,500 patrons), favoring the prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STRONG: Petition of the Clarion County Sabbath School Association, Shippenville; Manorville Woman's Christian Temperance Union, McGrann; West Franklin Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Worthington; Rev. Clyde L. Nevins and other citizens of Marion Center; Charles N. Beecher, Apollo; all of the State of Pennsylvania, favoring the proposed amendment to the Constitution providing for national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 14, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast put the tremendous responsibility of human government into human hands, and Thou hast revealed Thy will to men as their guide in the determination of the policy and conduct of a nation. So Thou hast made the state a Divine institution and Thou dost preside over its fate. Give to us, we pray Thee, that loyalty to the institutions that Thou hast given to us which will count nothing dear that we may preserve inviolate the rights of men and advance the interests of Thy children here and everywhere. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

ROBERT F. BROUSSARD, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, and JAMES D. PHELAN, a Senator from the State of California, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 195) providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 2334) to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS. I present a memorial to Congress which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without the signatures.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned homesteaders and residents of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and Valley County, Mont., hereby petition and respectfully show:

1. That whereas the homesteaders on the said Fort Peck Indian Reservation who made entry thereon under the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908, are required by said act and the subsequent remedial act of Congress approved March 2, 1917 (Public, No. 371) which extended the time of payments, to make certain annual payments in accordance with the appraised value for said lands; and

2. Whereas practically a total crop failure has resulted to them for the season of 1917, due to the extreme drought experienced and other climatic conditions, thereby depriving them of their sole means of production; and

3. Whereas many of said homesteaders have been drafted into the United States Army and the sons of many others have been called to service under the conscription act of Congress, thereby materially reducing their means and ability of production and thereby as a result making it more difficult for them to cultivate their lands and with the profits thereof comply with the provisions of their act of entry; and

4. Whereas with a few isolated exceptions all of said homesteaders are men of small means, who are solely dependent upon their manual labor and their crops for the support of themselves and their families, and are now confronted with a crop failure at a time when the highest and most exorbitant prices known are demanded from them for foodstuffs and common necessities of life; and

5. Whereas such homesteaders are now suffering great financial distress, and it is now evident that only through some further remedial act of Congress extending the time of payment of delinquent installments and the payment to become due for the reason of 1917 can these new and fertile lands be homesteaded and cultivated by the present entrymen, who have enlisted their time and money in the development thereof, and a public necessity having arisen by reason of all of these facts, making it impossible for them to meet their payments;

Therefore we respectfully pray your honorable bodies that an act of Congress be passed repealing the provisions of the said remedial act of March 2, 1917, but with the same intent and in accordance therewith, further extending the time of all payments now delinquent and the payment which will become due and payable for the season of 1917, thereby granting the opportunity of an additional season and another crop with which to comply with their payments.

Respectfully submitted.

M. G. MONROE
(And others).

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the following letter. I will state in this connection that I agree entirely with the objects and purposes expressed in it.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COLFAX, WASH., December 3, 1917.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a recent meeting of the Patriotic League of Colfax and Whitman County, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"It is the sense of this meeting that the United States should forthwith declare war upon Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria and intern the alien enemies of those countries and Germany now in the United States, and that Congress pass such further laws as may be necessary to put down treasonable and seditious acts and utterances now rampant in this country, that the enemy influences now at work here may not Russianize the United States."

The object of the above-named league is to aid the administration in every way possible in the vigorous prosecution of the war to a successful conclusion, and I, as secretary of the league, by a unanimous vote of the members, have been directed to furnish you with a copy of the resolution above set forth.

Very truly, yours,

CLAUDE SWEGLE,
Secretary.

Mr. McCUMBER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Williams, Hettinger, Mercer, Morton, and Sioux Counties, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Bismarck, N. Dak., favoring universal military training, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Grand Forks, N. Dak., relative to camp life and recreation funds for the soldiers, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PHELAN. I have received a telegram from representatives of Southern Slavic Organizations in Oakland, Cal., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OAKLAND, CAL., December 12, 1917.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
Senator from California, Washington, D. C.:

Simultaneously with American war declaration against Austria-Hungary, 300 representatives of Southern Slavic Organizations joyously acclaim America's historic step against their brutal, tyrannical oppressor of centuries, and in mass meeting assembled solemnly unanimously resolve to pledge America all their moral and material power toward the crushing of Austria-Hungary.

H. D. VITERSKI,
Chairman Committee.
ANTONE PILCOVICH.
JAMES A. DRAGICEVICH.
PHILIP CUCKAVICH.

Mr. PHELAN presented resolutions adopted by the California State Federation of Labor, indorsing the efforts of the Federal civil-service employees to secure the establishment of a civil-service court of appeals or trial board, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a petition of the California State Federation of Labor, praying for an increase in the salaries of postal clerks and employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the California State Federation of Labor, praying for the employment of civil-service subclerks to relieve the regular clerks in the Post Office Department, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oskaloosa, Kans., praying for the establishment of a pharmaceutical corps of the United States Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry letter carriers of Eldorado and Effingham, in the State of Kansas, praying for an increase in the salaries of post-office employees, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Men's Brotherhood of the First Presbyterian Church, of Chanute, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sending of cigarettes to United States soldiers, sailors, and marines, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MARTIN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Virginia, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RANSDELL. I present resolutions adopted by the Town Council of Gueydan, La., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GUEYDAN, LA., December 7, 1917.

Hon. JOS. E. RANSDELL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolutions were adopted by the Town Council of Gueydan, La., at the meeting held on the 4th instant:

"Whereas the security of the United States and the success of our arms are endangered by the activities of disloyal persons and organizations within the borders of our country: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the mayor and board of aldermen do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact forthwith a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for pro-German activities, or for the publication or public utterances of statements tending to impede or interfere with the operations or success of the United States in war or in recruiting or enlistment, or to hold the Government of the United States or any of our allies up to ridicule or obloquy, or to cause disloyalty or refusal of duty on the part of any person in connection with the war; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be mailed to Senators ROBERT F. BROUSSARD and JOSEPH E. RANSDELL and Congressman WHIT P. MARTIN immediately."

[SEAL.] M. I. RAMSEY, Mayor.

Attest:

P. PETER, Clerk.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 352) granting pensions to certain members of the former Life-Saving Service (Rept. No. 180);

A bill (S. 994) extending the benefits of care and treatment by the Public Health Service to seamen on vessels used in the service of the United States (Rept. No. 181);

A bill (S. 1462) to establish a fog signal at the Port Washington Pierhead Light Station, Wis. (Rept. No. 182); and

A bill (S. 1463) to establish aids to navigation at Fond du Lac Harbor, Wis. (Rept. No. 183).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations through the Bureau of Mines of lignite coals to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 3221) granting a pension to Kate E. Le Velley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 3222) making available any post-office surplus for the fiscal year 1918 for the purchase of the telephone system of the District of Columbia; to insure the Government complete control of such means of communication in safeguarding its military and executive affairs within the seat of government; to provide a special telephone service to facilitate the direct sale of farm products to consumers in said District; to establish the efficiency and economy with which such service may be conducted by the Post Office Department; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 3223) providing for the continuance of the Osage Indian School, Oklahoma, for a period of 10 years from January 1, 1918; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 3224) for the relief of the estate of John H. Piatt, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3225) to reserve as a part of the Oregon National Forest certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. against the United States; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BRADY:

A bill (S. 3226) for the completion of the Fort Hall irrigation project in the State of Idaho; and

A bill (S. 3227) to authorize the establishment of town sites on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 3228) granting a pension to Abbie M. Peabody (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3229) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah McBee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROUSSARD:

A bill (S. 3230) granting to the State of Louisiana all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land within the meander lines, as originally surveyed, of the lakes within said State; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3231) granting a pension to Henry Greig; and

A bill (S. 3232) granting an increase of pension to Richard S. Harrison; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 3233) to amend an act entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," approved May 11, 1898 (30 Stat., p. 104); and

A bill (S. 3234) to reserve certain lands and incorporate the same and make them a part of the Coeur d'Alene National Forest Reserve; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. HOLLIS:

A bill (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

THE RECREATION ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I send to the desk a bill to incorporate the Recreation Association of America. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD and a brief explanation of the bill and a telegram from the president of the chamber of commerce of the city of Atlanta.

The bill (S. 3219) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Grenville Clark, New York City; Henry P. Davison, New York City; Mrs. E. P. Earle, Montclair, N. J.; Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, West Orange, N. J.; Robert Garrett, Baltimore, Md.; C. M. Goethe, Sacramento, Cal.; J. M. Hankins, Birmingham, Ala.; William Kent, Kentfield, Cal.; Gustavus T. Kirby, New York City; G. M. Landers, New Britain, Conn.; Joseph Lee, Boston, Mass.; J. H. McCurdy, Springfield, Mass.; R. D. Maury, Memphis, Tenn.; Walter A. May, Pittsburgh, Pa.; John T. Pratt, New York City; Harold M. Swift, Chicago, Ill.; together with such persons as they may associate with themselves, their successors, are hereby created a body corporate of the District of Columbia by the name of the Recreation Association of America to promote play, playgrounds, and public recreation.

SEC. 2. That the corporation hereby formed shall have perpetual succession, shall have a common seal, and shall have power to sue and be sued in its corporate name. It shall have power in its corporate name to take and hold by bequest, devise, gift, purchase, or lease, either absolutely or in trust, for any of its purposes, such real and personal property as shall be necessary for corporate purposes; to convey or encumber such property and to invest or reinvest any principal, and deal with and expend the income of the corporation; to have officers and conduct its business within and without the District of Columbia and in the several States and Territories of the United States. The persons named in the first section of this act, or a majority of them, shall have power to adopt a constitution and by-laws for the government of the corporation and to fix thereby the quorum necessary to the transaction of corporate business at such number as they shall see fit, and generally to do all such acts, including the establishment of regulations for the election of associates and successors, as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act and promote the purposes of such corporation. The meetings of the corporation hereby created may be held at any place within the United States of America. Members of the association and of its governing body may be drawn from any or all parts of America without restriction as to the number from any one community or section.

The statement and telegram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY THE RECREATION ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA SHOULD HAVE NATIONAL INCORPORATION.

1. The work of this organization, both in peace time and war time, is national in scope, touching communities in practically every State in the Union.

2. The organization is absolutely nonsectarian and nonpolitical.

3. The organization is promoting developments essential to the moral welfare and physical preparedness of the Nation.

4. For the proper administration of the money raised for doing the work assigned by the War Department, this organization should have a board of directors broadly representative of the various States in which the money is to be spent. (Such a board of directors is possible only through national incorporation.)

5. The importance of the work now being done for the War Department and the rapid broadening of the scope of this work make it essential that this organization should not be restricted in the amount of the money which it may receive and expend. (Such restrictions can be avoided through national incorporation.)

6. For efficient work in peace time and especially for effectively carrying its new war-time responsibility this organization needs such national recognition as has already been given to the American Red Cross, international committee of the Y. M. C. A., Boy Scouts, and other similar bodies.

ATLANTA, GA., December 14, 1917.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

Hope you will find it consistent to introduce and aid in the passage through the Senate of bill incorporating American Recreation Association, formerly Play Ground Association of America, which is under the leadership of President Joseph Lee, who has been largely responsible for the splendid success of the Commission on Training-Camp Activities, headed by Mr. Fosdick, appointed by Secretary Baker. The recreation work in the camp cities, particularly in Atlanta, has been perfectly splendid. Atlanta has raised $45,000 for this commission.

IVAN E. ALLEN,
President Atlanta Chamber of Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what committee shall the bill be referred?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To the Committee on the Judiciary. Bills incorporating companies go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 168), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to employ a stenographer, at a cost of not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business, the morning business is closed.

Mr. MARTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	James	Myers	Shields
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Simmons
Brady	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Smith, Ariz.
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Smoot
Dillingham	Kenyon	Pittman	Sterling
Fernald	King	Poindexter	Sutherland
Fletcher	Knox	Pomerene	Thompson
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Robinson	Townsend
Gallinger	McKellar	Saulsbury	Underwood
Gore	McLean	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gronna	McNary	Sheppard	Warren
Hale	Martin	Sherman	Williams

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is still ill and unable to be present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness.

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is unavoidably detained on account of illness.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 195. An act providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1419, the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. SHIELDS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 7, amend the bill by striking out the word "provision" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "provisions."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have the Secretary read the amendment again. I want to see just what effect it is going to have.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 7, strike out the word "provision" and insert the word "provisions," so that, if amended, it will read:

The Secretary of War may issue to such applicant a permit in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is merely a correction of a typographical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if he has any further amendments to offer to the bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did intend to take a little time of the Senate in calling the attention of the Senate to some of the provisions of the bill that I think could be improved, but I have concluded not to do so this morning. I will content myself by saying that the bill is substantially the same as the bill which passed the Senate in the last Congress. It was discussed thoroughly at that time; in fact, I believe that nearly a week was spent in the discussion of the bill. There were a good many amendments made at that time which improved the bill greatly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we are unable to hear the Senator here on account of the confusion in the Chamber. I would be glad to hear what the Senator from Utah is saying.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped with his gavel.

Mr. SMOOT. I say at the time the bill was under discussion in the Senate during the last Congress there were a great many amendments to the bill that were adopted by the Senate, which I think improved the measure greatly. In reading the bill over as it is now before the Senate I notice that virtually all those amendments are included in the bill as reported May 25, 1917, and as I have no amendment to offer to it, and I think the bill is in about as good a shape as we can possibly get and pass it, I have decided to say nothing more upon the bill and allow it to pass the Senate, if the Senate sees fit.

I hope that the country will realize all that is anticipated from the passage of this legislation. I am sure there has to be some legislation enacted in order to develop water powers and should have been passed years ago. This piece of legislation is in the main such as ought to be passed, and if it had been passed before some of our water-power sites on navigable streams would have been developed and of use to-day to the people of the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, just a word in connection with this bill. I think it is a very important measure. It proposes legislation that we ought to have enacted years ago. Under the provisions of the bill it is possible to develop 61,000,000 horsepower by water-power energy that is available in this country, and which is at present undeveloped. There are various reasons why this is important, not only because of making usable the energy which now goes to waste in manufacturing, in transportation, in lighting, in heating, but for every purpose of that kind for which such power can be used. It would result in the saving of fuel; it would result in the conservation of coal, and it would result in the development of manufacturing plants in this country for the purpose of producing fertilizer materials and other materials that are most important in connection with food production, in connection with explosives, and that sort of thing, which are now supplied by importation from other countries.

The report of the committee is full upon the subject, giving the various reasons, calling special attention at pages 2 and 3 to the principal objects to be accomplished and the matters to be served by the bill. I unhesitatingly favor the speedy enactment of the proposed legislation. It is a Senate bill, and I see no reason for delay in connection with its passage. I hope it will be acted upon promptly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate some time ago, I took occasion to say a word in behalf of the legislation, and to vote for it. I am very glad, indeed, that is has been presented to the Senate at so early a day in the present session. I simply rise to say that my mind has not been changed as to the advisability and desirability of the proposed legislation, and I hope it will be passed to-day with very little debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I regard this bill as one of the most important pieces of legislation that can come before Congress at this time, aside from those necessary pieces of legislation that we must pass to carry on the war. An effort has been made for the last 10 years to pass a general dam act in order that we might utilize the power of the streams of this country for the purpose of the development of hydroelectric power. It has had a very rocky road to travel. I think that has largely been due to the fact that there has been a misconception of the purposes of this proposed legislation and a misunderstanding as to the terms that were contained in it.

Mr. President, this bill is well drafted. It undoubtedly protects the public interest. Under the terms of the bill, at the end of 50 years, if the public so desires, there can be a recapture of any of the water powers that are developed by private interests under the bill. I have some doubts along another line. I am sure that there are certain great water powers in this country that can be developed under the bill, but under the conditions of the bill the cost of development is likely to be so great and the terms under which the money can be earned back to the investor are limited to such an extent, that I fear the smaller water powers of the country will never be developed. Nevertheless, I think the bill ought to be passed. I think it ought to be tried out as it is written. Then if it is demonstrated that the terms of the legislation are so drastic that it will be impossible to develop the smaller water powers the Congress can amend the statute to meet the conditions to which it is directed.

To-day we are facing a condition in this country that is an absolute demonstration of the fact that this bill ought to have been on the statute books 10 years ago. In a way, it is an indictment against the delays of the Congress in not having passed legislation of this character a long time since. The whole country is suffering from a lack of fuel. A large portion of the fuel of this country is used to run the street-car systems, to light the houses, and to develop the manufactures of this country. There are hundreds of streams in the United States that, if harnessed up and their hydroelectric power developed, every pound of coal that is now being used in their neighborhood for lighting, heating, and power purposes could be saved, and the same end accomplished by hydroelectric power.

In the first place, it would be a saving of the transportation system, because when the transmission wires are erected the current flows on to the ultimate market of consumption without interruption, while when it is necessary to send trainload after trainload of coal to that immedaite neighborhood, it bars the lines of commerce to other necessities and other needs of the Nation.

Again, when we have used all of the coal of this country we may be put to great cost for our fuel supply. I do not mean to say that there is any danger of the immediate destruction of the coal supply of the United States; but in many portions of the country the mines are running low. They are getting deep in the ground, the cost of production is increasing, and the cost to the consumer is being pyramided.

The enactment of the proper legislation to harness up the water powers of this country and control those powers in the interests of light, fuel, and heat would be the greatest conservation measure that could be passed by the American Congress. In fact, I do not think that that proposition has been denied by anyone, even by those who in the most vigorous way have opposed the bill in the past. Their opposition has rested on the fact that somebody was going to get something out of this legislation and make some money out of it. Well, it goes without saying that money is not going into speculative investments unless there is an opportunity to make more than the ordinary interest rate. This is a speculative investment.

As a general rule, when a dam is built and hydroelectric power is developed you have got to create the market or find the market for the sale of the power after the development is made. That was true in the case of Niagara. A market had to be found in which the power could be taken. I have no doubt that in that immediate neighborhood to-day, if there were a development or could be a development of twice the amount of hydroelectric power at Niagara that there is at present it could be readily consumed. Of course, however, that condition does not exist in the interior of the country. I have no doubt that there is no place in this country where excellent facilities for the development of hydroelectric power exists where a market will not ultimately be found for it in one way or another; but it is in the nature of a speculation; men have to take chances on their investment; and, more than that, no man in the building of these great dams, when their construction is entered upon, can know that they will be completed within the engineers' estimate of cost; in fact, I know of one case at Hales Bar, on the Tennessee River, where the ultimate cost of development amounted to nearly double the engineer's original estimate and report, because when the construction was commenced it was found that the foundations, as estimated by the engineers, were not such as to carry the weight of the dam, and a vastly greater cost had to be incurred. So I say that you can not pass legislation of this kind with the expectation that you are going to invite capital into that field and develop it if you are going to limit capital absolutely to 4 or 5 per cent interest, because such undertakings are speculative in a sense, and capital looking for investment will take a Government bond or a State bond in preference to that class of investment.

I believe, however, that under this bill there is an inviting field for certain of the great water powers of this country and that capital can be found and their development entered upon in the no distant future; but in passing the bill—and I believe it will pass to-day or to-morrow—I think we should bear in mind that there is a possibility that the smaller streams and the smaller water powers probably can not be developed and will not afford an inviting field for capital under the terms of this bill. If that condition arises the passage of this bill ought not to be a bar to future legislation that will allow development of the smaller watercourses and smaller water powers, as well as the great water powers of the country.

I have earnestly advocated the passage of this measure, or measures along this line, for nearly 10 years. It now looks as if the sentiment of Congress and the sentiment of the country had reached the point when the consummation of that desire is to be obtained. I rejoice that such is the case, and only regret that this legislation was not passed years ago, so that in this hour of national stress we could have had the benefit and enjoyment of this great development, instead of having to wait for several years to come pending the building of dams to get the full benefit of the conservation of this power to the American people.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay this bill for one moment. I can not state better than has been stated by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] the prime importance of the early enactment of this measure or show the necessity for the bill in a better light than he has done. There is, however, one matter to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a moment.

On the nonnavigable streams, which are not covered by this bill, the Federal Government, with its usual idea of conservation, has seized the land and has set aside as power sites every possible place where there is a chance of developing power in every one of the western public-land States. Wherever there is a possibility of getting water power the Government, owning the land on each side, has made reservations of water-power sites for miles and miles along the length of the streams, thus preventing the States from using the power at all, and placing such restrictions upon its use that nobody will put up a dollar to develop it. I know that an offer was made to dam the Colorado River not more than a year or two ago by what I conceive to be one of the very best engineers in the United States or anywhere else. For $50,000,000 he proposed to develop sufficient horsepower in the Colorado River by damming that great stream, and raising the water as he said, to light every town and pump water on every farm in all western Arizona and eastern California. Yet it could not be done. He had the money raised, he told me, but the work could not be undertaken. The Government must put forth its regulating hand to such an extent that the power could not be developed at all. More than that, he offered to produce the power and sell it, I think, if I am not mistaken, for $25 a horsepower per year, whereas the estimate as to all other of our powers is over $37 a year per horsepower. Yet he could not enter upon the work.

Mr. President, at some day—and I hope before this session adjourns—I trust we may release these water-power sites from the Government's hands, and give them to the people of the States, so that they may develop them and regulate them under their own powers, which are just as ample in the case of each State as in the case of the Federal Government itself, and they know much more about their own necessities. Before this session is over, I purpose to try to get before this body the question of transferring to the States these segregated water-power sites to aid in the development of this power.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything on this bill, because I knew that it was going to pass, and there would be no use in offering any objection to its passage; but so many Senators who favor it have taken the precious time of the Senate to speak in its favor, when it needed no assistance, that I hope I shall be excused if I take a few minutes in expressing my views in opposition to it.

There is one proposition, I think, upon which we all agree, and that is that it is desirable that the water powers of the country should be developed, and that some legislation should be enacted by Congress under which they can be developed.

This bill in practically the same form passed the Senate at the last session of Congress. At that time a few of the Senators, believing as I do that there ought to be more supervisory power, and that, as we believed, the interests of the people should be more fully protected and safeguarded than is done in this bill, made a determined effort to amend it. We offered amendments to all parts of the bill that we thought needed amendment, and discussed them at great length, and for two or three weeks the time of the Senate was devoted to the consideration of this measure.

In that contest, on various phases of the bill, at various times, I expressed at considerable length my ideas in regard to the various subjects connected with water-power legislation. We had a fair discussion. We were defeated in practically all of those amendments, and the bill was passed in practically the same form in which it is now before the Senate. I do not believe, therefore, that it is wise, or that it is proper, to go over the same ground again and take up the time of the Senate in a rediscussion of the questions that were passed on after a full debate by the Senate.

While I did not agree with the conclusion reached, I realize that there must come a time when these matters must be brought to a vote, and we must all abide by the decision that is rendered. Since the discussion then was so full and fair, and the sentiment of the Senate and its membership, also, are practically the same now as then, I do not believe that those who oppose the methods provided for in this bill are called upon again to make a fight that they know in advance would meet with defeat and result only in the loss of valuable time. As I said, I would not have taken even this much of the time of the Senate had it not been that those who so heartily favor the bill have taken up all of the time so far—all of yesterday and, so far, all of to-day.

Mr. President, I can not help but believe that the passage of this bill now, in its present form, is a logical thing to do. The Senate has just passed a bill repealing the antitrust laws so far as they apply to individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaging in foreign commerce; so it seems to me that since we have done so great a good to the corporations and the trusts that want to have a monopoly in foreign commerce, we ought, in order to be logical, to do something for the corporations that want to get control of the water powers of the country. So that it is not an illogical proceeding to equalize the benefits that we are bestowing upon these people by the passage of this bill.

Speaking of the bill repealing the Sherman antitrust law, I am reminded of an incident that occurred in the last presidential campaign. You will remember that that bill not only repeals the Sherman antitrust law, so far as it applies to foreign commerce, but it also nullifies section 7 of the so-called Clayton antitrust law. That was a law passed by the Congress in so-called fulfillment of a pledge made in the preceding campaign to "put some teeth" in the antitrust laws of the country. In that campaign in one of the western cities I had made a speech in which I criticized the Clayton antitrust law. I think I was moved somewhat to do it by a large poster that I saw in a hundred different places on the afternoon before the evening I was to speak, in which the Clayton antitrust law was announced as one of the great things that had been brought out by the Democratic Party to save the country from the machinations of monopolies and trusts. I took up the Clayton antitrust law, and, as I viewed it, analyzed it and criticized it.

A few days afterwards, after I had gone into another State, I received a copy of a paper giving an account of a meeting that had been held in the same hall on the evening of the day following my speech, in which the orator had replied to the criticism I had made of the Clayton bill; and I was impressed at the time that part of his criticism was just. He said, as it was reported in this newspaper account of his speech, that while I had called attention to the bad things—and he admitted that there were some bad things—in the Clayton bill, I had avoided speaking of any of the good things that were contained in the bill; and in answer to me he then took up section 7 of the Clayton bill, and showed the great benefit that would come to the country and had come to the country by the enactment of that particular part of the bill.

As far as the newspaper account of the meeting was concerned, he made no other reference to anything good in the Clayton bill except section 7. You will remember that section 7 makes it illegal for one corporation to buy up the stock of another competing corporation. It was true that I had not mentioned that. It was also true, as I believed, that that was something in the Clayton bill that was good law, for which probably, if I had been properly moved, I would have given credit; but I failed to do it, and in that respect it seemed to me his criticism was just.

I remember that the newspaper account gave the peroration of that great orator's speech, in which he told of the evils that had come to the country by virtue of one corporation buying the stock of another, and he gave many illustrations of it. He showed how now, under the leadership of the great candidate for President who was then in the White House, that had been made impossible, and that henceforth corporations would not be allowed to buy the stock of competing corporations and thus form a trust and a monopoly.

I have wondered, since we have passed this bill repealing the Sherman antitrust law, what those people who heard him would have thought if they could have looked down upon the Senate and seen this deliberative body, led by the same illustrious statesman, repeal the only part of the Clayton bill that he claimed was any good.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill does not fully and adequately protect the interests of the people in the development of water power. To my mind it is no answer to that to say that the water powers ought to be developed. Those of us who, when this bill was up in the last Congress, favored the so-called Ferris bill, which came to us from the House, which we thought did fully protect it, were just as anxious that these water powers should be developed as those who were opposed to that bill and in favor of this. So I do not believe it can be fairly said that the people who are opposed to this particular bill are any less enthusiastic than those who favor this bill in the passage of legislation that will enable us to develop the water powers of the country.

I concede that those who favor this bill are just as anxious as I am to develop water powers; but because I favor a law that in my judgment would be more of a prevention of monopoly for the protection of the interests of all the people who ought to be benefited by the development of water powers, I do not concede that I am therefore any the less anxious that these water powers should be developed.

Therefore, Mr. President, I shall content myself with simply voicing my opposition to the method by which water powers will be developed, if developed at all—and I think they will be, to a great extent—under the pending measure. At a time when the country's attention is riveted upon other questions even more important than this, although I concede that this is very important, it probably will be impossible to get the development of any sentiment from the country either in favor of or against this bill or any other bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Speaking for myself, at least, if not for other new Members of the Senate, I did not have the benefit of the discussion that occurred not only yesterday but at the previous session when this bill was up for consideration, and I am not familiar with the terms of the bill. I was advised that it would not be pressed to a vote until Monday, and I hoped that during the interim a full opportunity would be given to some of us who are not familiar with its terms to analyze the bill and learn the full purpose of the measure. Apparently the intention of the Senator in charge of the bill is to force it to a vote to-day.

The Senator who is now occupying the floor has stated that there are many objections to this measure, which were heard and debated at great length when the bill was up for consideration in the former session of Congress, and he is contenting himself with registering his opposition to the bill without stating what those objections are. I should be very glad if the Senator would briefly point out some of the most important objections. I should like the Senator to state whether, in his opinion, this bill trenches upon the rights of the States; whether it is an attempt to take from the States their right to control the activities of corporations that may be engaged in furnishing power; whether or not, in his opinion, the bill does permit the formation of a hydroelectric trust, power trust, or fuel trust; and whether or not there are provisions in the measure that will protect the public against monopolies and trusts in respect to the corporations that the bill contemplates will be formed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator's criticism of the position I am taking is a just one. I concede it. I am not prepared, and would not be able to be prepared unless I had a few days' time, to go into all the details of the discussion and the various amendments that were proposed at that time. I have felt that I would not be justified in doing it, because I did and said everything I could then to convey my ideas to the Senate. Since the Senate had the benefit of the full debate, not only of what I said but of what other Senators said who took more time than I did in the debate, I felt that with the bill coming up again in a session just following that I would hardly be justified in taking the time of the Senate in going over it when there was so little change in the membership of the Senate. From the Senator's standpoint, as I concede, his criticism is probably justified.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I hope he does not think I am intending to criticize him.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. I was merely asking for information to guide me in the vote I may be called upon to give in regard to the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The debate at that time, and all the amendments, are fully set out in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that reports it. At the time of that debate I gave weeks of consideration and preparation to it in connection with other Members of this body, and in conjunction with them prepared a great many amendments, and we debated them at great length. There would not be a possibility of changing the result in the Senate even if those Senators went over the same ground again. None of them, as far as I know, have done so. Two of the Senators who took an active interest in that debate, Senators Lane and Husting, are dead. Another Senator on the Democratic side, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who took a very active interest in it, is absent on account of illness. So it seemed to me that it would not be justifiable to attempt to go over the ground again.

While I have the floor, Mr. President, I want to speak briefly upon another water-power proposition.

Almost within sight of the Capitol is one of the greatest water-power possibilities in the United States. Senators in this debate have spoken of the fact that if water powers had been developed before we would not be in the critical condition that we are now in in regard to coal. That is true. Seven or eight years ago, perhaps 10 years ago, Congress passed a joint resolution appropriating $20,000 for a survey of the Great Falls water power, just on the edge of the District of Columbia. Under the provisions of that joint resolution, or that section of an appropriation bill, I think, the Government engineers made an examination of this water power. They brought to their aid some of the best engineers in the world. They spent $20,000, and made what I believe to be as complete and as detailed a report as was ever made in the investigation of any water power on earth. They reached the conclusion, without any dissension anywhere, that that water power was feasible, and that it ought to be developed. They gave minute and detailed plans and specifications, together with the cost, showing just what it would cost to develop it. From that time to this it has been impossible to get Congress in any way to go ahead with the development that our own engineers after that full investigation advised us that we should make.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am propounding the question because it was asserted upon the floor at that time, and I have heard it asserted many times since, that they discovered that the flow of water at certain months was not sufficient even to give the power necessary to run our electric light and our street car system; that it could not be used the whole year round; and that it was far from being proper to attempt to use it only for certain months of the year when we would have to keep up another establishment or have that power remain idle in other months. I wish to ask the Senator if anything of that kind was ever in the report? It was asserted upon the floor that that was the case, if it is not in the report.

Mr. NORRIS. That question was fully gone into by the engineers. I presume the flow of water in the Potomac River has been as carefully measured as the flow of any stream in the world. They took the flow of the water for 15 years, and it had been measured accurately every day of the year. There was something in the proposition, and to my mind it was the weakest thing connected with the entire proposition, that the flow of the stream did vary a great deal, but the engineers discussed that fully. I do not have the figures in mind now. They showed just exactly on an average, taking a 15-years measurement as a basis, when the water would be short and how much it would be short. As I remember it, the lowest power developed in 15 years, taking the lowest flow of water for 15 years, there would be one day in 15 years when the power developed would be only 1,000 horsepower.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What was the maximum?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not give you the maximum now, but I think the average was between 60,000 and 70,000 horsepower.

Moreover, the report which the engineers made did not even contemplate the development of all power at Great Falls. In order to satisfy lovers of nature it protected the falls proper and did not take into consideration or contemplate the destruction of the scenery at Great Falls, but proposed to develop only the power between the foot of the falls and the District line.

I am not an expert, Mr. President. I have to take the word of experts in things of that kind. Anybody can see in a moment that those who are opposed to the development of this great power would find some reason for it. They all had an opportunity to be heard. Every detail was investigated. The engineers took, as I remember it, something over a year's time to do the work, and they reached the conclusion that the development of the Great Falls was not only advisable and practicable, but that it ought to be done at all hazards.

It has seemed to me that while we are developing water power, or permitting others to do it, the Government of the United States—and that was the proposition in this case, and that is the real objection on the part of some people at least to its development—ought to have developed this power.

One of the objections made, and it was made recently by the Secretary of War himself, was that it was not advisable to develop this power now, because the city and the District is already supplied with electricity at a very reasonable rate by institutions that had already gone into the business, and it would not be fair to develop this water power and interfere with their business. I think it is apparent now to everybody that when we are suffering for want of fuel right here in the Capital, when last winter, I think, once or twice the public schools had to be dismissed because they did not have coal to heat the buildings, Congress ought to begin to think and to wonder why we should not develop this power.

There is another thing connected with it that was included in the instructions to the engineers. The time is coming when the water supply of the great city of Washington will have to be developed, when the water now supplied to the city will not be sufficient. There was included in this development a large increase of water. I have noticed in the papers recently that since the population has increased, as it has since the beginning of the war by probably 100,000, there is danger of a water famine in addition to the fuel famine, and when we have a water famine in the city of Washington it will be one that will not be easily remedied, because all the water must come through a single aqueduct. The engineers recognize the fact that if the city increases in population or if the present population should become permanent the water supply of the city is in danger right now, or it would be in danger in warm weather.

Of course, Mr. President, that has not anything to do directly with this bill; I realize that, and I have only taken this occasion to mention it. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is obvious that there will be no attempt to amend the bill at this time, but I feel it my duty to restate my attitude toward it.

When the measure came before the last Congress I had two chief objections to it. First, it perpetuated a misinterpretation or misconstruction of the acts of 1890, 1899, 1906, and 1910 with regard to the meaning of the phrase "navigable streams." I felt in cases growing out of conditions in my own State the injustice of the construction which had been put upon the phrase "navigable waters" so far as streams are concerned, and I feared very much the consequence of a perpetuation or continuation of that interpretation. I sought to amend the bill in that regard so that it would include a definition of navigable streams or at least a restriction so far as the act is concerned in its application to streams of a certain character.

I am glad to say that the views which I entertained on that subject seemed to meet the approval of the Senate, and especially that they met the approval of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], who was then as now in charge of the bill, and the measure was amended so as to entirely remove my objections to that part of it. The present bill contains the provisions which were then incorporated in the bill by way of amendment, and I have no objection whatever to that feature of the bill.

The remaining objection which challenged my opposition was with regard to the taking over of the property that will be developed by private interests at the end of 50 years, and I now can satisfy the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] with regard to one specific objection. This bill, as did the former one, proposes to issue a lease or a permit to a private corporation or person for the development of a navigable stream to run for 50 years. The Government reserves the right at the end of 50 years, and not before, assuming the terms of the permit are complied with, to terminate it. If the Government does not give the notice that is required in the bill for the termination of the permit, it becomes a continuing and a perpetual one. I have no objection to that, but——

Mr. KING. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean by a perpetual lease that the Government then would have no right to terminate the lease at a later period?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the Government has the right at the end of 50 years, or at any time thereafter upon giving two years' notice, to terminate the permit.

Mr. KING. Then it is not perpetual. It is to be terminated by notice from the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is still subject to termination, and I have no objection to that whatever, but the moment the termination is decided upon by the Government and the notice given and the period of two years elapses, then there arises upon the part of the Government an obligation to take the property created in the course of development, no matter how large or how extensive its ramifications may be, and pay for it. The method of ascertaining the compensation is not the one that I would assume, but it is not particularly censurable.

The thing, however, that I object to, first, is the creation of an obligation on the part of the Government to take the property and pay for it. I think that is unwise and may create a great burden upon the Government that it ought not to bear. But even that is not the most objectionable feature of that provision in the bill.

I think if the Government exercises its option to terminate the permit and is compelled to take over the property, then the compensation ought to be determined, first, of course, by the general rule as to the value of property, but if the corporation—and it is in every respect a public-utility corporation, that is the character of the service it is to render, the character of the work—if in an accounting, and I provided by an amendment as to the way in which the accounting should be had, it should appear that during the 50 years or more of the occupation and use of the property it had earned enough to reward all the capital invested in its development and at the same time to put aside a sinking fund or an amortization fund that would reimburse the investors for all the capital that they had embarked in the enterprise, then the Government would have it for nothing, because those who had entered into it as a venture would not only have been amply, sufficiently, adequately rewarded from year to year, but they would have collected from somebody, from the public, a sum that represented the value of the property which they had constructed. It is in the highest degree unjust and unfair to make the people of the United States pay for the property twice. This is what may occur, or will occur, in a great many instances. I believe that there ought to be the limitation which I have just proposed added to the section or sections which provide for recapture.

I submitted that to the Senate with all the arguments and observations that occurred to me in its behalf, and while it received the approval of a very considerable number of Senators it did not command the support of a majority of the Senate, and the controversy, so far as I am concerned, will not be reopened. But I have felt that it was due to a certain degree of consistency that I state at this time and immediately before the bill is to be passed that my views upon that subject have not changed. Further reflection has served simply to strengthen or fortify them.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. In line with what the Senator has just suggested, the Senator will recall that it is a very common practice in business life for men to take leases upon real estate for periods up to a hundred years and erect valuable structures with the understanding that at the expiration of the leasehold period the land together with all the improvements thereon shall revert to the lessor. Why should the Government of the United States be placed at a greater disadvantage with respect to the property which it leases than private individuals?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it should.

Mr. KING. Particularly where the lessee pays nothing, as I understand under the terms of the permit, to the Government for the privilege of occupying the land for the period of 50 years.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it should, and moreover——

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment. It is the common, almost the universal, practice of great enterprises to lay aside each year a sinking fund or an amortization fund that will within a reasonable number of years—and I do not know of any that contemplates a period of more than 50 years—a sum that will at the end of the period reimburse the capital which has been invested.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. In this connection, I should like to say that the consumer will have to pay it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly the consumer will still have to pay it, and no one but the corporation will get any benefit from it.

Mr. SHIELDS. One further matter on this point to elucidate what the Senator from Utah said. I think the Senator from Iowa should have stated that there is no lease made under the bill by the United States to the permittee.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no lease of land. It is a permit.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is only a question of the use of property belonging to the United States. It is a mere permit to put the obstruction in the river and there is the benefit conferred upon the United States. There must be locks and every facility for navigation, such as the Government itself would put in in improving the river, and it is done at the expense of the permittee; or the owner, the riparian proprietor, may improve its own property.

Thus a very great burden in improving for navigation is taken off of the Government of the United States by granting this permit for a certain time, so that the permittee may have some assurance that the dam is going to stay there, and the customer or consumer of the power may have some assurance that it will stay there for this fixed time and that the power be furnished him; otherwise there never could be any sale for it; and no man would build a factory to be operated by such power.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ought to say, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], with regard to the collection of this money which would constitute the sinking fund or the amortization fund from the consumers, that the amendment which I proposed was conditional upon the collection; it did not require the collection. If the company that operated the water power did not collect enough to create a fund of the character I have described, then, of course, the amendment which I thought ought to be adopted would not apply. It was only in a case where the operator or the owning corporation had collected enough from the public to amply reward capital and to reimburse the entire investment that the deduction from the amount ascertained in the ordinary method was to be applied.

Mr. SHAFROTH rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado, if he desires to interrupt me.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, all I wanted to refer to was the concurrence of the Senator from Iowa with the contention of the Senator from Utah with relation to a lease for, say, 100 years by which the building goes to the lessor. That is done upon the theory that at the end of a hundred years the building will not be worth anything. It also must be considered that in this bill there is a provision that the State utilities commission shall have the right to regulate the rates. Of course, they are not going to permit a high rate and the fixing of exorbitant prices against the interest of the people.

Mr. CUMMINS. But they do permit it now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They do not permit it in my State, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Colorado may be fortunate; but the instances in which regulated corporations are able to pay high interest upon their capital and to lay aside a sinking fund for the reimbursement of the capital are so very frequent that they must have come to the attention of the Senator from Colorado, even if they do not exist in his own State.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be true in some instances, but I must say that the Utilities Commission of the State of Colorado has done most excellent work in reducing prices. In fact, the problem there is whether or not investors will undertake the investment of capital where they are not to control the price. In the case of a building, of course, the landlord has the right to fix the rent at whatever sum he desires; he can do it now, and he is doing it in the District of Columbia to the extent of an increase of 100 to 200 per cent; but a corporation of this kind should not be permitted to do that because it is of a public nature.

Mr. CUMMINS. The suggestions of the Senator from Colorado have no pertinence whatever to the amendment which I proposed at the last session. I only proposed that if an amortization fund or a sinking fund were accumulated, if the people had been compelled to pay more than an ample reward upon the capital, then the public should get the benefit of it by a credit upon the value of the property which the Government took over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I can see the force and strength of the Senator's position, but the illustration which was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] would not be applicable to this bill, it seems to me, because it relates to a matter where the owner of the property can charge whatever he pleases; but he could not so charge under this bill, because there is a utility commission that controls and regulates the price, which is supposed to give the owners a reasonable rate for the use of their hydroelectrical power.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. In reply to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], I desire to say that I think he is in error in stating that in the illustration which I gave the property becomes valueless at the expiration of the lease. As a matter of fact, in most instances of that character the property is more valuable. There are innumerable instances of leases being given by the owners of land for the construction of buildings, the lease running 10, 15, 20, or 50 years, with the understanding that the buildings to be erected are to be of a certain character—and the character is designated—and of a certain value—and that is stipulated—because the landlord anticipates that at the expiration of the lease he will not only get his land back but that he will receive a valuable accretion thereon in the form of buildings which have been erected.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, what I referred to was a hundred-year lease, which is generally recognized as the one in which buildings erected on leased land go to the lessor. Whenever the leases are of a shorter duration of time it will be found in nearly every such case there is a provision that a certain proportion of the value of the building erected thereon shall be paid by the lessor. I know of instances of that kind, and I have never heard in the case of a short lease or in the case of a lease of even 20 years, that the property should go to the lessor without any compensation whatever to the lessee. One can naturally see, however, that there is hardly any building which could be constructed for either business or resident purposes that would be worth anything at the end of 100 years. Therefore, of course, it is not worth while to designate what the lessor shall pay, if he pays anything for the building.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I had any hope that an amendment such as I have outlined could be adopted, I should feel it my duty to take up the time of the Senate in proposing it and in discussing it, but I have no such hope. I therefore shall content myself with the statement of my attitude toward that particular part of this bill.

Generally speaking, I think the bill is a very wise one; I think it will have a tendency to develop the water powers of the United States; and if it could be rid of this, and possibly one other unjust feature, I think it would command the approval of the people of the country with great unanimity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words upon the pending bill. When it was acted on by the Senate in March, 1916, I discussed it somewhat and offered several amendments to it. Many of those amendments were adopted at that time and most of them are incorporated in the bill at the present time; but the bill still contains certain provisions which induced me to vote against its passage heretofore, and which will compel me to vote against it now.

One purpose I have in making this statement is to answer an argument which I very frequently hear made that seems to imply that a vote against the Shields water-power bill, as it is called, is a vote against the development of water power. I came in contact in the country with criticisms which were so insidious that it is at times difficult to secure fair and just consideration for the real issue involved.

I am in favor of the development of water power, and I am not only in favor generally of the development of water power, but I am in favor of the enactment of legislation to that end at the earliest possible moment. I think that a bill ought to be passed now settling the question, settling it permanently, and, of course, settling it upon such fair and reasonable terms as will enable capital profitably to undertake this development. But opposition to a particular bill does not imply that there is no other bill that can be passed; opposition to the Shields water-power bill in its present form does not necessarily mean opposition to the same bill if amended in certain particulars, which amendments could easily be enacted, if the Senate so desired, at any time without the loss of any appreciable time in securing the object for which this legislation is to be enacted.

I do not propose, Mr. President, to be diverted or deprived of the right as a citizen and a Senator to insist upon the reasonable guarding of the public interest and to protect the Government in dealing with these great public franchises because it may be said that it is opposition to the development and promotion of industry in the country. That is a fallacious argument; it has no merit whatever; and I say this only to pass by it to other matters.

The bill is going to the House of Representatives and there is going to be a controversy about what form it will take. In the last Congress when it was passed there was a difference of opinion between the two branches of Congress upon the subject; no doubt that difference of opinion will appear again, at least to some extent, and it can not be said because there is such a difference of opinion that those upon either side of the question are blocking water-power legislation. I took the position upon this phase of the matter that those who insisted upon unreasonable conditions in this bill were responsible for its failure to become a law, and consequently responsible for the failure of the development of water power in the country. I repeat that statement now, that if the bill passed the Senate in a form embodying reasonable protection of the public interest, full provision for proper service, reasonable rates, and just terms and conditions of recapture of these great properties, it would have passed the other branch of Congress, met the approval of the country, been satisfactory to capital, and we would now be enjoying whatever benefit would come from the use of the natural powers in our navigable streams.

I want to add in that connection that it need not be undertaken to create the impression that if one stands here in the discussion of this bill and argues in favor of Federal control and regulation of the public interests that are involved in it he is thereby putting himself in opposition to the business interests of this country and to the water-power men pursuing legitimate objects. That is not the case.

It is only a short time ago that I had a visit in my office from one of the principal water-power promoters of this country, accompanied by a lawyer who had specialized in water-power legislation, and while the promoter to whom I refer insisted upon the doctrine that is contained in this bill and advocated largely, I think, by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, who has charge of it, through the influences of tradition and environment, of State sovereignty and State control, this water-power lawyer, representing the greatest water-power interests in the country, agreed with me in favor of Federal control as preferable from the business standpoint, as I insist it is preferable from the standpoint of the public interest. That water-power man referred to the certainty, the uniformity, the efficiency of dealing with one central authority, and to the confusion, uncertainty, and inefficiency of having to deal with a multiplication of boards, tribunals, and officials in every community where there may be an actual or potential water power.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said a while ago that those who were opposed to this bill opposed it because somebody was likely to make money if the bill became a law in its present form. There may be some who oppose it for that reason. The Senator making that statement no doubt has fully considered it and has ground for the statement that Senators or those outside of public life oppose the legislation because there is danger, as they think, of somebody making a fortune out of it; but I am very much surprised to hear, if that is the case, that anybody, at least, who takes any active interest by way of public expression in the public policies of the country and has enough education and intelligence and interest in the Government to do so should be actuated by any such motive.

It seems to me supererogation, so far as I am concerned, to say that I have no objection to people making money by the development of water power or in any other legitimate industry. I am glad to see them make money; I like to see the country prosperous and fortunes accumulated by the exercise of ability and industry and thrift, and I believe that the general public profits by it directly and indirectly; but there are other grounds besides that strange one stated by the Senator from Alabama for opposition, not to the development of water power but to the particular terms and conditions of this bill, which is a very different thing.

There are three matters upon which legitimate opposition may arise, in which the public have a right to concern themselves. One of those is service. That is, in granting these great properties care should be taken that there is going to be fair and uniform service; that is, that everybody shall be treated alike, that everybody shall have the same rights to get the power that may be developed that anybody else has, under the same terms and conditions. We all know what an instrument of tyranny and oppression might be made of the control of the developed water powers of the country if, through the uncertainty or the errors of the law, those who control them could favor one industry or one individual and punish or oppress another. That is one thing about which we have a right to concern ourselves.

Another one is the matter of rates. It is not just a question of seeing factories established, of seeing power developed out of these flowing streams. The fact of the case is that that in itself, if it went no further than that, would be a matter of very little concern. What the country is interested in is the product and the use of the product that comes from those factories, from the electric power that may be generated by the turning of these great wheels by the force of the falling waters. It is the same thing that has often been discussed in regard to the opening of the coal lands. The public are not interested in the opening of coal lands, any acre of them, or all of the public lands in Alaska or elsewhere, unless they can get coal more plentifully and cheaper than they could before. That is the only interest they have in it, and the same consideration applies to the development of water power.

So it is important to guard carefully the regulation and control of service and rates under the franchises provided for by this bill. The fundamental difference between those who are in favor of this particular form of bill and myself and some others in that I believe in reserving in the Federal Government, by attaching it to the grant, the right upon occasion, if the necessity should arise, to prevent extortionate rates and to insure uniformity of service, rather than leaving it altogether to the uncertainties and powerful influences that may affect local commissions when dealing with great national and international corporations of the kind that control the electric power of the country.

This bill leaves it entirely to the local authorities. I have no quarrel with the motives of anybody who takes that position. It is a legitimate position for them to take if they believe in it, but I differ with them. That is all there is about it. I have just as much right to insist upon control by the United States Government in conjunction with the States. I would not deprive the States or the local authorities of any of their power in the matter. I do not want it to appear from the fact that I insist upon retention by the United States of the power to regulate that I am in favor of depriving the States of their powers in the matter. My view is that these jurisdictions can and do exist simultaneously and concurrently, as do many other powers of the States and of the Federal Government. Both jurisdictions exist, and both can be exercised, if necessary; and I have not any fear that any such right, if retained by the Federal Government, would be abused. On the contrary, experience in the exercise of regulatory powers by the United States is that it has been, in general, fair to business and to invested capital.

Something has been said about the Great Falls of the Potomac River. To show that you are not necessarily going to render any public benefit by merely giving franchises for water power, or, rather, by dispossessing the United States of its control without conditions of any kind, look at the Great Falls of the Potomac, as unfettered and as undeveloped as it was when it was first created; and yet long ago it passed into private hands. I started to say that it is as undeveloped as it was 100 years ago; but it is not nearly so developed as it was 100 or more years ago. More than 100 years ago George Washington, an enterprising and progressive man of business, used the power of the Great Falls of the Potomac, and you see there yet the remains of the foundry and mill which he established and operated. There is now a dam above the Great Falls of the Potomac; and yet there are certain interests—and I use the term in no offensive sense—which find it profitable to suppress and prevent the development of that water power. That is not because the Federal Government interferes with it, for it does not.

Long ago these falls passed into private hands. But the owners of coal mines and of the railroads that haul the coal prefer that power should continue to be developed from coal rather than from electric power from the Great Falls of the Potomac.

Speaking of the fact that the effect upon rates and service to the public is the important consideration, I am reminded of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal as an illustration. It is particularly pertinent to speak of it now, at a time when a good many people are said to be freezing to death right here in the Capital of the Nation for the lack of coal. When you inquire why there is a lack of coal when there are vast stores of coal at a short distance, in the coal regions in the mountains very near to us, they say that it is because of the congestion of transportation; that the cars are crowded in the terminals and the railroads can not haul it, when, as a matter of fact, if there had been no restraint of commerce, if there had been a full and fair opportunity for transportation to develop along natural lines with the greatest efficiency and economy, there could have been carried on the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, which reaches from tidewater into the vicinity of the coal fields, enough coal to supply the entire Atlantic seaboard. And so the development of that great highway of transportation has not returned to the people the benefits that would have come if it had had full play and had not been interfered with by competing and rival interests. In like manner we are interested in a full return of actual public service from the water powers of the country.

Some questions were asked a moment ago as to the particular defects of this bill. I want to call attention only to one of them. I have been absent from my office for some time and have been overwhelmed with accumulated business since I returned. Consequently, I shall not undertake to go in detail into the discussion of all the objectionable features of this bill. I think I shall only refer to one of them.

The permit or franchise provided for in the bill is supposed to be a 50-year permit. As a matter of fact, it is not at all. It is an indefinite permit, and may be practically perpetual.

What is the situation? That unless the Government takes some action and gives notice, the permit goes on. And if the Government gives notice of the termination of it, what takes place?

It is not terminated merely by the giving of notice at the end of 50 years. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was slightly mistaken in saying that the notice can be given only at the end of 50 years. In justice to the bill, it should be said that the notice can be given before the end of the 50 years. So far as the effect of the notice is concerned it could become effective and, if the notice terminated it, at the end of 50 years. But giving notice does not terminate the permit. It ought to. If it is going to be a 50-year permit, it ought to be terminated by the giving of notice, with a provision, if there is to be compensation, that after the permit has been terminated and after the Government has come into its own again the owners could recover in the courts, if necessary, if they could not agree upon the amount, fair compensation upon whatever basis might be provided in the bill.

But what does the bill provide? After providing the most complicated and cumulative system of compensation, it provides that if the owners of this permit do not agree to the compensation that is offered to them, they can take the matter into a court of equity and litigate it, and while they are litigating it they can continue to possess and enjoy it.

Mr. BORAH. To what section does the Senator refer?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is in section 6, at the bottom of page 11, going over on to page 12. They can go into a court of equity. How long can they keep the matter in a court of equity? Well, there was the equity case of Jarndyce against Jarndyce that Dickens describes, and you can keep an equity case going nowadays just as long as they could then. That is all that is necessary to continue the franchise indefinitely.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. This section says that at any time after the expiration of 50 years the United States may terminate the rights. Does the Senator understand that the notice could be given prior to that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. If the Senator will read just in the next line he will see that it says:

> Upon the giving to the grantee, either before or after the lapse of the period of the permit, of two years' notice.

Now, here is one of the objectionable things about the compensation that is provided for. I do not even go so far as to say that I would object to paying the full value, upon some such reasonable basis, of this property, although I think there is a good deal in what the Senator from Iowa says, that having enjoyed it for 50 years and being able to amortize it during that time it would be perfectly reasonable if what is left of it at the end of 50 years should revert to the Government without any compensation. But leaving that dispute out of the question, and supposing that the Government is to be required to pay compensation for the property at the end of the 50 years, this bill imposes unreasonable, harsh, and drastic terms upon the Government and upon the people in estimating the amount that it will have to pay in order to get back this property after it has been enjoyed by the grantee for 50 years. The bill says:

> And upon paying to the grantee just compensation for said property—

Now, you would think that would be enough; but the bill does not stop there. It goes on to say—> together with the cost to the grantee of the lock or locks, or other aids to navigation.

After paying them just compensation for the property, as it stands under this bill, "together" with that they must pay the "cost to the grantee of the lock or locks" which were put in 50 years before.

Is that a reasonable provision? I do not regard it so. It might be supposed that the grantee was to be paid by the Government for the improvement of navigation; but if that is required, the reasonable basis upon which it should be estimated would be the value of it at the time the property is recaptured, and not the cost of the improvements 50 years before.

But that is not all that the Government would be required to pay. In addition to paying just compensation "together with the cost to the grantee of the lock or locks, or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures required by the United States," the Government must assume all contracts entered into by the grantee, with the approval of the duly constituted public authority having jurisdiction thereof or which were entered into in good faith and at a reasonable rate, in view of all the circumstances existing at the time such contracts were made, so that any contract that they can make—all that are approved during that period—the United States are left to assume at the end of this 50-year period, and if the Government objects to assuming them because they do not come within the terms of the basis of value set out in the bill for compensation, then they will go into a court of equity as provided in this same section and litigate the matter for an indefinite period of time—

> By proceedings in equity instituted by the United States in the district court of the United States in the district within which any portion of such dam may be located.

I regard these as very harsh and unreasonable impositions upon the Government, and in themselves would be sufficient to justify voting against the bill. A fair compensation for the property as it exists at the time, for the actual physical property, would be the utmost limit which the Government ought to be required to go in the way of payment in order to recapture the property. If the Government is required to assume all contracts which shall have been made and approved, an easy way is opened by which the recapture by the Government will be rendered impossible.

There are a great number of changes which have been made in the former bill, and it is difficult to understand just what the motive was or the general policy which governed them. For instance, I notice in some places they are very particular to change the expression "district court of the United States" by striking out the word "of" and inserting the word "for." The change is entirely immaterial, and I think incorrect. But to show that there is apparently no general policy governing the changes which have been made in the bill, note the effect on page 10, lines 5 to 9, where they strike out of the old bill the provisions that a municipality in exercising the right of eminent domain should go into the district court of the United States for the district where the property is situated. The framers of the bill with much elaboration have stricken that out and provided instead that the proceedings shall be "in the district court in which the property is situated." I have heard of a good many things being situated in a court, but not water powers. And so on through the bill there are a number of changes which seem to have been made with an equal degree of care and equally eccentric consequences.

Not for those reasons, which are largely inconsequential, but for the more important reasons which I have spoken of and some which I have not spoken of and which I formerly expressed, I shall vote upon this occasion as I did upon the former passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I presume that the bill is about to pass, and I have no desire to delay it, because nothing is to be gained by its delay. The bill has heretofore been before the Senate and discussed at great length, and most of us have expressed our views upon the bill heretofore. After weeks of debate it passed by a vote of two to one, so we could not hope to change results.

In view of the fact, however, that apparently there is to be no roll call upon the bill I simply want to say, without repeating what I have heretofore said, that I am opposed to the bill. I realize that some legislation ought to be had on this subject and it is important that we deal with the matter. At the same time there are some provisions of the bill which make it impossible for me to vote for it. Much as I want development, I can not vote for this measure. It is unwise legislation in fundamental particulars.

I would undertake to discuss the matter, Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that, as I said, it has been heretofore discussed and the vote has been had, and I know that the opinion of the majority of the Senate is in favor of the passage of the bill. I see nothing to be gained, therefore, by delaying it and repeating the discussion. If I felt any possible change could be brought about in its passage I should be glad to enter the discussion, but it is apparent any effort would be wholly fruitless.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I take it there will not be very much more discussion, and I shall take but a very few minutes.

On the 24th and 25th of February, 1916, I discussed at length the main propositions in the bill, and I do not propose to repeat that discussion now. My remarks will be found at page 3060 of the RECORD of February 24 and at page 3121 of the RECORD of February 25, 1916, first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

I want to present in a concise way the practical side of the water-power question and my conclusions, not speaking for anyone else, as to the character, purpose, and effect of the pending bill.

The following estimate of the United States Geological Survey shows the available water horsepower in the different sections of the United States, if developed to the practicable maximum without storage:

North Atlantic States	4,910,000
South Atlantic States	5,107,000
North Central States	4,270,000
South Central States	3,342,000
Western States	44,049,000
Total available potential horsepower	61,678,000

It is also estimated that with practicable maximum storage the total available water horsepower that could be produced in the United States would be 200,000,000. The present actual water-power development in the United States is about 6,000,000 horsepower, or 10 per cent of the amount available without storage and 3 per cent of the amount available with storage.

The Geological Survey report for the year 1913 shows that our consumption of coal for all purposes was about 570,048,125 short tons, of which the railroads alone used about 20 per cent. In addition to this, the petroleum used in 1913 was equivalent to 24,000,000 tons of coal. Every water horsepower now going to waste which could be economically substituted for fuel power would represent approximately 5½ tons of coal per year, based on an average of 12 hours per day. To indicate what are the possibilities of conservation along this line, we need merely to reflect upon the fact that the ultimate development of 61,678,000 horsepower on the foregoing coal consumption basis is equivalent to the annual use of nearly 340,000,000 tons of coal—60 per cent of the total amount used in the United States—which, at $2 per ton, represents an annual value of $680,000,000. If all the water at these power sites were used constantly, the foregoing coal consumption figures would be doubled. Of course, this represents the maximum attainable development, which, in all probability, will not be approached for a long period, but it also represents the end which may finally be achieved. It is certain, however, that unless a start is made by the enactment of fair and practical legislation, efforts to accomplish this much-to-be-desired result, even in small part, will fail. Every undeveloped water power for which a market now exists represents a willful waste of an exhaustible natural resource.

It is estimated that over 10,000,000 horsepower could be produced from dams installed in connection with the improvement of our inland navigable waterways, and that were locks installed in the power dams, over 4,000 miles of the upper reaches of these streams would be opened to navigation. The cost of these river improvements would be upward of $800,000,000, and, if accomplished by private capital for purpose of power production, would not cost the Government a dollar, except for the bare locks and removal of minor obstacles in those portions of the streams not connected with power development. If these river improvements were in one stream, it would be equivalent to creating a navigable waterway across the continent from New York to San Francisco. But in reality it means the extension of navigation for an aggregate of 4,000 miles in 35 rivers, traversing 20 States in such widely different sections of the country as Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, Florida, Arkansas, Ohio, Kentucky, Missouri, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Washington, and Idaho.

While it will take a long period of time to improve all the inland waterways which could be made navigable in connection with development of water powers, yet every 100 miles helps, and the construction of river power dams will be begun in many different sections of the country as soon as Congress passes laws permitting safe investment of capital in water-power developments.

The inland waterways of the warring countries of Europe are being used to their utmost limit, and hundreds of miles of new canals have been built since the war began. A new waterway 182 miles long, connecting the Oder and the Vistula Rivers, has recently been opened to traffic, and 500-ton boats can go direct from Berlin to Warsaw and to the seaport of Dantzig.

Germany has thousands of miles of canals and rivers which have been made navigable, and are being used for carrying heavy freight, leaving the railroads free to be used for the rapid transportation of troops and food supplies. It is said that were it not for her freight-carrying inland waterways the war would be over and Germany beaten, because the rapid movement of her troops from one front to another would have been seriously impeded had the railroads been occupied with heavy freight.

The production of hydroelectric energy is a hazardous business. Cost of installation is difficult to determine in advance and often exceeds the amount anticipated. Floods sometimes destroy dams and power houses, and public regulation limits profits. But if men and capital can be found to undertake the work, why not enact Federal laws which will authorize the War Department to permit the development of water power in consideration for the establishment of these much-needed improvements to river navigation? In this way waterways would be made navigable by private capital instead of through taxation, cheap water transportation would be afforded to districts but now sparsely settled, and congestion of traffic relieved in thickly populated centers.

The present law, known as the general dam act, enacted in 1906 and amended in 1910, provides such restrictive terms and conditions that with but two small exceptions no power developments and river improvements have been made by private capital upon navigable streams since 1912, a period of five years.

The following actual projects of water-power development on navigable streams have been defeated by lack of rational water-power laws:

State.	River.	Horsepower to be developed.	Miles of inland waterway improved.
Washington	Columbia	410,000	160
Do	Pend Oreille	250,000	80
Montana	Missouri	100,000	110
Minnesota	St. Croix	30,000	26
Iowa	Des Moines	60,000	201
Maryland	Susquehanna	110,000	15
Massachusetts-Connecticut	Connecticut	30,000	23
Georgia	Chattahoochee	138,000	138
Alabama	Tennessee	410,000	35
Tennessee	Clinch	25,000	14
Alabama	Coosa	180,000	76
Kentucky	Cumberland	26,000	71
Georgia	Flint	0,000	12
North Carolina	Little Tennessee	200,000	84
Virginia	New	20,000	10
Do	Roanoke	35,000	20
South Carolina-Georgia	Savannah	78,000	85
Total		2,122,000	1,160

Two million one hundred and twenty-two thousand horsepower is equivalent to the energy contained in 7,214,000 tons of coal, which would require the labor of 7,000 men to mine and 200,000 35-ton cars to move.

In connection with the remarks I submitted on February 23, 1915, found at page 4397 of the RECORD, third session, Sixty-third Congress, I pointed out the possibilities from the improvement of Priest Rapids on the Columbia River. I also referred to the possibilities and the magnitude of that project in the discussion of February 24 and February 25, 1916. I am not going to repeat what I then said, but I simply want to call to the attention of the Senate some of the productions of that region, showing what we will be able to do in an agricultural way if water-power development can be had on the Columbia River, through which several hundred thousand acres of extremely fertile land would be brought under cultivation.

I have brought here to the Senate samples of some of the products that are produced in that immediate neighborhood. Some of the lower lands have been brought under water, and practically every product of the Temperate Zone can be raised there in profusion. Some of my southern friends may be surprised to learn that in that section we can also raise cotton. I have some samples of cotton here that have been produced within the last year on the Columbia River near Priest Rapids. I do not know anything about cotton myself, but I have talked with some who are cotton raisers and they pronounce these samples to be cotton of a splendid character [exhibiting]. This year was one of the most unfavorable years for the production of cotton; the spring was very cold and very late; yet this cotton matured early in the fall, and our people are absolutely confident that they have such a soil and such a climate and such a temperature as will enable them to raise splendid cotton upon practically all the land that would be reclaimed if this water power could be developed and the electric energy made available for agricultural purposes. I hope that our southern friends, at any rate, will examine these samples and see what they think of them.

Then I have here a small box of soya beans [exhibiting]. That is a bean that we have been importing very largely from China into this country. It is most valuable as a fertilizer and for stock. My recollection is that about $6,000,000 worth were imported last year. It is raised in a few different localities in this country, but very few. It does well in that section, and I have no doubt if we can get this land reclaimed in some way we will produce about all the soya beans we need in this country.

Then I have here samples of some of the fruits that we produce in that neighborhood [exhibiting apples]. We can find these in all the irrigated sections in our State, as well as the other States of the West.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator about the flavor of that fruit.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am satisfied the Senator from Idaho is very desirous of trying it. He raises this kind of fruit in his State, and I am not going to let him have this. I am going to put this in the hands of some one who does not get this sort of apple at home. This is a Delicious apple [exhibiting]. That is the name of it. It is called the Delicious. It is a little above the average size, but not an extreme size.

This is a Jonathan apple [exhibiting]. This is the Grimes Golden [exhibiting], that I think will compare with any of the Grimes Golden raised anywhere in the East. This is what they call a Banana apple [exhibiting], and it has very much the flavor of a banana.

Then, I have the Spitzenberg. This is a very fair sample of the fruit raised there [exhibiting], and I want to say in all that section of the country peaches, plums, pears, grapes, and all the fruits of the Temperate Zone could be produced in abundance.

We are also going into the beet-sugar industry in our country. A beet-sugar factory has been built at North Yakima this year and is now manufacturing something like 5,000 sacks of sugar per day. The sugar beet can be raised in all that irrigated section. Here is an average sample of the size of the sugar beets that we produce in that country [exhibiting]. We get from 15 to 35 tons an acre, and if we have the proper encouragement, through legislation or otherwise, there is not any doubt in my mind that this country will soon produce all the sugar that is necessary in this country.

Mr. President, I shall state in a word my views as to what this bill, known as the Shields bill, provides.

It provides:

1. For the improvement of the navigation of rivers without cost to the Government in connection with dams constructed for hydroelectric purposes in navigable streams.

2. For grants by the Secretary of War of authority to private parties for the construction and maintenance of such dams when navigation facilities can be improved thereby, such authority to extend for 50 years and until the property necessary to such development is taken over and just compensation paid for it, either by the Government or a duly authorized new grantee.

3. For diligent construction, completion, and operation of such dam, subject to market conditions.

4. For the construction by the grantee of suitable locks, without cost to the Government when required by the Secretary of War.

5. For payment to the Government by the grantee of the cost of any investigations necessary to the issuing of the grant and the cost of such supervision of construction as may be necessary; and also the payment by the grantee of reasonable charges for benefits resulting from headwater improvements installed by the Government and payment to the Government of a reasonable price for the use of any public lands taken.

6. For the regulation of the rates and service of the grantee by State authority, or, if the business is interstate, by the Interstate Commerce Commission, thereby assuring to consumers efficient service and fair, just, and reasonable rates.

7. For reserving to the States authority over the waters and water powers, subject to the paramount power of Congress over navigation, and for reserving also all the taxing powers of the State in relation to the properties.

8. For uniform accounting and examination of the books of grantees by the Secretary of War.

9. For leasing under similar conditions the right to utilize surplus water power generated at dams constructed by the Government.

It seems to me, under those various provisions, the rights and interest of the community are amply protected. Those who favor this legislation are as honest, sincere, patriotic, and as faithful and devoted to the public interests as those who oppose it. It is easy to charge that this legislation fails to protect the interests of the public, but such a charge can not be proven by reason, logic, or facts. On the contrary, it is plain from the terms of the bill itself that the public interest is made the highest concern. Monopoly is prohibited, excessive profits are prevented, full, complete, and efficient regulation and control are provided, and the lowest possible rates for power and the most efficient service to consumers are assured the public.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the Senator from Idaho to state that there would be no roll call on the bill?

Mr. BORAH. No; I did not say there was to be none; that might infer that there was an agreement that there should be none. I said I assumed there was going to be none.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate in combating the passage of the bill, because the argument has been presented before. I desire, however, an opportunity to go on record as being opposed to it in its present form. No man is more favorable than I am to the improvement of these water powers, and especially at this time; but the very emergency of the occasion ought not to force us to do things which we will regret hereafter.

It seems to me that the bill does not properly safeguard the public interests. Of course, I am in opposition to many of those in the West, but I myself am in favor of one regulation, and that is the Federal.

So far as this particular question is concerned and the provisions for taking over the property by the Government, what has been pointed out by the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] seemed to me to conclusively convince any Senator who has given the matter careful attention at least that it is a one-sided contract and against the interests of the Government.

Nothing that I can say will, of course, change the result of the vote; but in view of what the Senator from Idaho stated, that there may not be a roll call, I desire now to express by opposition to the bill as presented.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move to strike out of the bill all that part of section 6, on page 10, beginning with the word "together," in line 19, going over to the top of page 11 down to and including the word "made" in line 1. I should like to have the Secretary read the part which I moved be stricken out and to read the bill as it would be with the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 19, strike out the following words:

> together with the cost to the grantee of the lock or locks, or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures, required by the United States, and assuming all contracts entered into by the grantee which have the approval of the duly constituted public authority having jurisdiction thereof, or which were entered into in good faith and at a reasonable rate, in view of all the circumstances existing at the time such contracts were made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to say merely one word before the result is announced. If that amendment is adopted, it will leave the bill, as to recapture by the Government, to read as follows:

> Upon paying to the grantee just compensation for said property.

So the amendment does not strike out the provision for compensation, but does strike out the cumulative payments which the Government will otherwise be required to make. It strikes out the requirement that the Government should pay for the cost of the works put in 50 years before and which have been used for 50 years, and upon which the increment and profits made for that period of time have been enjoyed. It would relieve the Government of the burden of assuming all contracts made by the grantee and which may have been made for the very purpose of embarrassing the Government and making impracticable the recapture of the franchise. At the same time it would allow fair compensation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I opposed the Shields water-power bill when it last passed the Senate, and I opposed it because it was simply a part of the piecemeal legislation which has characterized the country for over a century regarding water legislation. I opposed it because it proposed to provide only for water-power development in connection with navigation, and that it was not so enlarged in its scope as to embrace every useful purpose for which water can be used, including not only navigation and the development of water power but the reclamation of arid lands, the control of water for the reclamation of swamp lands, intensive cultivation in the humid region, and the development of forestry.

Since the action of the Senate last year regarding the Shields water-power bill, a bill which failed of consideration in the House, Congress incorporated in the river and harbor bill of last session the substantial provisions of the river-development bill which I have been urging for so many years. It is true that the Waterways Commission amendment did not provide for the large appropriations contemplated by the original bill, but it did provide for the organization embraced in it, namely, the creation of a Waterways Commission composed of the Secretaries of War, Interior, Commerce, and Agriculture, with the addition of three others, who should take in hand the coordination of the various national scientific services that relate to the use of water, and who should enter into cooperation with State agencies for the full exercise of the jurisdiction of both the Nation and the States with reference to river development, the providing of comprehensive plans, and the execution of those plans by the National Government in cooperation with the agencies of the States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator stated that this commission was to be composed of certain members of the Cabinet. Is not the Senator mistaken in that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. My impression is that I stated that to be the provision in my original bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh! I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true; it was modified by Congress in such a way as to give the President the power to appoint either department chiefs or others on that commission.

This bill, Mr. President, provides that permits for the erection of dams for water-power development on navigable streams shall be granted under certain conditions by the Secretary of War, and my belief is that that power ought to be given to the Waterways Commission, which is now provided for by law. If the Secretary of War becomes a member of the Waterways Commission, my objection would be partially removed, for doubtless he would bring any contemplated permits for the construction of dams for water-power development to the consideration of the commission of which he is a member, and would have their views as to the possible operation of such permits upon the general powers exercised by the commission, which would cover not only water-power development but every possible use of water. But if he should not be a member of that commission, then we have this condition, that a waterways commission would be vested by Congress with the full power to effect a competent organization for the treatment and development of our rivers for every useful purpose to which water can be put, and yet that jurisdiction over a most important part of the rivers, namely, the issuance of permits for the construction of dams for water-power development, would be intrusted entirely to the direction and control of an official outside of that commission, thus depriving them to that extent of their jurisdiction.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to go at length into this question. I considered it exhaustively in speeches made February 21 and March 1, 4, 7, and 8, 1916, in a speech entitled "Water a national asset" upon the so-called Shields bill, and I will refer anyone who is interested in the subject to that speech for a full consideration of all the reasons that impelled me to oppose the Shields water-power bill. I have not opposed that bill since it came up recently for a second consideration by the Senate for several reasons. One was the great pressure of legislation upon Congress. Another was the necessity of immediate legislation of some kind upon the subject of water power, and the likelihood of postponing much-needed legislation, such as the land and phosphates and oil and mineral bill now under consideration, if a protracted discussion should arise over that bill. But I should like to insert in the RECORD a provision contained in the last river and harbor bill regarding the creation of this commission, and I should like also to insert in the RECORD a few extracts from the speeches to which I have referred. I ask unanimous consent to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The quotations from the speeches referred to will be hereafter inserted in the RECORD. The quotation from the river and harbor bill of August 8, 1917, referred to, follows:

SEC. 18. That a commission, to be known as the Waterways Commission, consisting of seven members to be appointed by the President of the United States, at least one of whom shall be chosen from the active or retired list of the Engineer Corps of the Army, at least one of whom shall be an expert hydraulic engineer from civil life, and the remaining five of whom may each be selected either from civil life or the public service, is hereby created and authorized, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, and subject to the approval of the heads of the several executive departments concerned, to bring into coordination and cooperation the engineering, scientific, and constructive services, bureaus, boards, and commissions of the several governmental departments of the United States and commissions created by Congress that relate to study, development, or control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, or to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to uniting such services in investigating, with respect to all watersheds in the United States, questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, drainage, forestry, arid and swamp land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil erosion and waste, storage and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of terminal and transfer facilities, to secure the necessary data, and to formulate and report to Congress, as early as practicable, a comprehensive plan or plans for the development of waterways and the water resources of the United States for the purposes of navigation and for every useful purpose, and recommendations for the modification or discontinuance of any project herein or heretofore adopted. Any member appointed from the retired list shall receive the same pay and allowances as he would if on the active list, and no member selected from the public service shall receive additional compensation for services on said commission, and members selected from civil life shall receive compensation of $7,500 per annum.

In all matters done, or to be done, under this section relating to any of the subjects, investigations, or questions to be considered hereunder, and in formulating plans, and in the preparation of a report or reports, as herein provided, consideration shall be given to all matters which are to be undertaken, either independently by the United States or by cooperation between the United States and the several States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as may be undertaken by the United States, and to the States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portions as belong to their respective jurisdictions, rights, and interests.

The commission is authorized to employ, or retain, and fix the compensation for the services of such engineers, transportation experts, experts in water development and utilization, and constructors of eminence as it may deem necessary to make such investigations and to carry out the purposes of this section. And in order to defray the expenses made necessary by the provisions of this section there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as Congress may hereafter determine, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, available until expended, to be paid out upon warrants drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury by the chairman of said commission.

The commission shall have power to make every expenditure requisite for and incident to its authorized work, and to employ in the District of Columbia and in the field such clerical, legal, engineering, artistic, and expert services as it may deem advisable, including the payment of per diem in lieu of subsistence for employees engaged in field work or traveling on official business, rent of offices in the District of Columbia and in the field, and the purchase of books, maps, and office equipment.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to delay, prevent, or interfere with the completion of any survey, investigation, project, or work herein or heretofore or hereafter adopted or authorized upon or for the improvement of any of the rivers or harbors of the United States or with legislative action upon reports heretofore or hereafter presented.

Approved, August 8, 1917.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state, Mr. President, that I trust this matter will be remedied by the appointment of the Secretary of War as one of the members of this commission, so as to bring that official, who is practically placed in control of water-power development all over the country, into coordination with this great commission that is to enter upon the full, complete, and harmonious development of our rivers for every purpose. I can not imagine anything more unfortunate than to have a difference of opinion arise between the Secretary of War and the Waterways Commission regarding this subject. For that reason I trust the President will include on this commission the Secretary of War, in order that he may listen to the views of his associates on the commission with reference to the places and the method of development of water power in order that he may impress upon them his views, and in order that there may be harmonious action with reference to this very important question.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to call attention again to the importance of the transportation question as the very base of the successful prosecution of this war. We have developed in this country, as a result of private initiative and enterprise, the most remarkable railway system that exists in the world. We have, as the result of their energy, ability, and enterprise, a system which embraces nearly one-half of the railway mileage of the world, although we have only one-fifteenth of the world's population; but we have not developed marine transportation, and we have not developed river transportation. We have even allowed the carriers, pioneers in new regions sparsely settled, and desirous of obtaining all the traffic they could obtain, to drive out of existence competing water carriers by the most objectionable methods, and to-day river navigation is not as well developed as it was over a half century ago. We have sought to remedy the difficulty as far as marine transportation was concerned, which we could not settle in times of peace because of the difference of view between the two parties as to the economic policy to be pursued, by practically turning over this whole question to Government control, operation, and ownership. We are about to construct a great merchant marine, and, in fact, it is now in process of construction. But at a time when this admirable railway system, entirely adequate to meet the normal demands of the country, is unable to meet the extraordinary emergency of war, we find our rivers paralyzed because we have not used wise foresight in developing their channels, in securing terminal and transfer facilities, in bringing them into coordination with each other by connecting artificial canals, and in bringing them into both competition and coordination with the railways of the country through adequate legislation. The bill which I originally proposed provided that $60,000,000 annually for a period of 10 years, $600,000,000 in all, should be appropriated for this work, in order that not only comprehensive plans could be formed but that continuous and consecutive work without legislative interruption or without the inertia caused by legislative inaction could be secured. A smile passed over the faces of those who listened to me whenever that sum was mentioned, the general view being that the sum asked for was exorbitant and that legislation granting it would never be realized.

Mr. President, that sum will not stagger us at all to-day, in view of the enormous cost of this war and in view of the enormous appropriations that we are making to secure a merchant marine, and in view of the fact that the railroads require about $1,000,000,000 of new money annually for additional equipment and facilities; and it is seriously contemplated to-day that governmental aid of some kind, involving the expenditure of large sums for railway equipment and railway facilities, should be extended to the great railway corporations, at a time when all the investment money of the country is practically required by the Government itself for purposes of war, and when it is seeking a monopoly on the money market of the country.

No one can measure the loss to this country as the result of inadequate facilities for transportation both on water and on land. The railway facilities are adequate for normal demands, but they were not adequate for the extraordinary demands of the war, and the result was that the cars usually applied to the transportation of coal from the mines to the places of consumption were used for other purposes. That car shortage caused an increase in the price of coal in the markets of the country of from one and a half to five dollars and even seven dollars a ton. It imperiled manufacturing in some sections, created alarm and apprehension in the factories of the country, and was the fruitful cause of rise in the price of commodities produced by those manufacturers, and as a result we have a rise in the price of coal, iron, steel, and other commodities amounting to billions of dollars, a large portion of which we could have saved had the transportation system, the very basis of successful commerce, been adequate to the requirements of the country.

No one can measure the loss to the country arising from our failure to adequately equip our rivers as instrumentalities of commerce. Those rivers which carry to most advantage the bulky and low-priced products, with reference to which low rates are established and which can be carried upon our waterways much more effectively than upon our railways.

Our action, or nonaction, stands in startling contrast with the wise provision of European countries, for in Germany, in France, in Austria, and even in Russia the rivers are highly developed, the banks protected, transfer facilities and terminal facilities provided, coordination with rail and ocean transportation provided, proper channels developed, and the waterways connected with each other by artificial canals in such a way as that in either Germany or France you can proceed from one part of the country to another almost as effectually by waterway as you can by railway.

In those countries they have developed in a triune way river, rail, and ocean transportation, all coordinating with each other for the development of both domestic and foreign commerce; and to-day in the very stress of war Germany and Austria are appropriating money for and are actually engaged in the construction of a canal connecting the headwaters of the Rhine with the headwaters of the Danube, thus securing continuous waterway transportation from the North Sea to the Black Sea, and through the Black Sea and the Dardanelles into the Mediterranean, thus solidifying commercially the great combination that has recently been created by Germany during the war, a combination of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, and Turkey in a great organization for aggression, for mutual defense, and for commercial advancement.

Mr. President, the onerous duties imposed upon the President of the United States by the war have thus far prevented him from appointing the commission provided for by Congress. He doubtless wishes to make a very careful selection of the personnel of that commission. It is of the highest importance that men should be appointed on that commission who are familiar with and have been identified with this propaganda that has been going on for so many years, that men should be put upon that commission who have already received their education and not men who, however qualified by ability, have to be educated in this particular training.

I believe that if a wise selection is made instead of going through a long period of education they will be prepared to act promptly and make plans for the development of all our waterways—those emptying into the Pacific Ocean, those emptying into the Gulf, and those emptying into the Atlantic Ocean—in such a way as to develop them from source to mouth by a gradual process that will secure a slowing up of these waters in their progress to the ocean and to the Gulf, which will utilize the flood waters and turn them from destroyers of wealth into creators of wealth, which will in time develop such channels themselves as the instrumentalities of transportation, thus securing the coordination of the 10 or 12 scientific services of the United States which are now at work upon the various portions of this problem, their full coordination and cooperation, and thus securing not only the action of the National Government but cooperation with the States, many of which have waterway commissions already organized and in operation in this great work.

I can not imagine anything of a practical and economic character connected with the war more vital to its prosecution, and I trust that Congress will be ready to respond liberally with the appropriations necessary for this great work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to join with the Senator from Nevada in the hope that when the waterway commission is appointed it will be composed of educated, up-to-date, strong men who can go right at the work. But I also want to call attention to the fact that the Senate rejected very emphatically the proposition that Cabinet officers should be members of the commission, and that the Senate conferees stated on the floor of the Senate that in the changes that were made it was not intended to authorize or encourage the appointment of Cabinet officers to that place.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who is absent from the Chamber on account of illness. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I am informed, however, that if present his vote on this subject would be the same as mine, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when Mr. REED's name was called). I am requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] on official business. He is attending a committee hearing.

While I am on my feet, I will also make the same announcement for the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He not being present and I, not knowing how he would vote if present, withhold my vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]; but as he voted for this bill when it was last before the Senate, I feel justified, notwithstanding his absence, in voting for the bill. I shall therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I inquire of the Chair whether he has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. In the absence of the Senator from Idaho, I withhold my vote.

While I am on my feet I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] on account of illness. He is paired, as has been stated, with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALDER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] and vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BRANDEGEE] on business of the Senate. If present, he would vote for the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I understand that if present he would vote the same way as I shall vote on the bill, therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] because of illness, and I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to transfer my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted, but I wish to state that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who has released me from the pair upon this vote.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. KELLOGG] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote for the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on important business before the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent on account of illness. In the last Congress he voted for this bill, and if he were present, I believe he would again vote for it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. He has a general pair, however, with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. KNOX (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. KNOX. I voted inadvertently, but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted under a misapprehension. I am paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—46.

Bankhead	Kendrick	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Knox	Page	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Lewis	Phelan	Smith, Md.
Colt	Lodge	Pittman	Smoot
Dillingham	McCumber	Pomerene	Stone
Fernald	McKellar	Ransdell	Thompson
Fletcher	McLean	Robinson	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gallinger	Martin	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Hale	Myers	Sheppard	Weeks
Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Shields
Jones, Wash.	New	Simmons

NAYS—18.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	La Follette	Sutherland
Borah	Hollis	Norris	Townsend
France	James	Poindexter	Trammell
Gore	Johnson, Cal.	Sherman
Gronna	King	Smith, Mich.

NOT VOTING—31.

Brady	Gerry	Kirby	Thomas
Brandegee	Goff	Newlands	Tillman
Broussard	Harding	Owen	Walsh
Chamberlain	Hardwick	Penrose	Warren
Culberson	Hughes	Reed	Watson
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, S. C.	Williams
Curtis	Kellogg	Sterling	Wolcott
Fall	Kenyon	Swanson

So the bill was passed.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain. In this behalf I desire to say that some opposition to the passage of this bill has been removed by a general understanding as to certain amendments to be offered to it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is it in order at this time, on the motion of the Senator from Nevada, for me to offer a bill as a substitute for consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would not be in order, in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator from Nevada will yield further to me——

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to give notice, for whatever effect it is worth, that immediately on the conclusion of the consideration of the bill now in charge of the Senator from Nevada I shall ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 101) to provide further for the national security and defense by insuring to the Government of the United States an adequate supply of paper at a fair price and by insuring a supply and equitable distribution at fair prices to the industries of the United States.

I give notice that I shall make a motion to take up the joint resolution on the conclusion of the measure now desired to be brought before the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will state it.

Mr. STONE. The motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to proceed to the consideration of the bill stated by him is not debatable, is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable after 2 o'clock, the Chair reminds the Senator.

Mr. STONE. Well, it is debatable after 2 o'clock, but is it debatable now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, there has been no debate on the question. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] asked the Senator from Nevada to yield to him, and he made a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STONE. I know there has been no debate, and I do not care particularly to press the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that the motion of the Senator from Nevada has not yet been stated by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was simply allowing the Senator from Missouri to make his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STONE. Of course the Chair will state it authoritatively, but the motion of the Senator from Nevada is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. My inquiry was whether or not that was debatable, but I am not very particular about it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Undoubtedly it is debatable after 2 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. I think it is; but I was asking the question of the Chair. I have no desire to debate it. I want to support the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] in the presentation of the measure he has in charge; I am not in any sense out of sympathy with him, but I have very great interest in the measure which the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] gives notice of his intention to present to the Senate. My concern in it is, of course, a wholly public concern, Mr. President; but, as I regard it, it is one of the measures now on the calendar of especial moment and importance to the country. While I follow the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Arizona in this situation, I thought it would not be untimely to supplement in a word the very apt statement made by the Senator from Arizona with respect to the importance of the measure he has in charge and his anxiety to press its consideration at the earliest possible moment.

I hope that the bill which the Senator from Nevada has in hand may be disposed of as speedily as possible. I know the Senator's adroitness and industry, and I hope he will press this measure, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] did in the case of the foreign export trade bill, of which he was in charge, and as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] has done in the case of the water-power bill, and let us bring the bill to a vote at the earliest moment, so that other questions of great importance may not be unduly delayed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2812.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator if it is his intention to go on with the bill this afternoon or simply to have it read?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are Senators who desire to be present at the time when this bill is debated; at least, they desire to have an opportunity to make some remarks on the bill, and I realize that, while this bill will be speedily passed, we can not pass it this afternoon. Therefore there is no intention on the part of the Senator in charge of this bill to attempt to have a vote on it this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the question for the reason that I have not the papers on my desk which I desire to have when I address myself to the bill; and if we were going to consider it this afternoon I would have to send for those papers. I am very glad the Senator has concluded not to press the bill this afternoon, but will be content with the reading of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I feel that that is a good suggestion; that we devote a portion of the time this afternoon at least to reading the bill; and after the bill has been read, with the permission of the Chair and of the Senate, I will make a short statement with regard to the bill in its present form. However, I feel that at this time I should say that I am prepared to vote for an amendment eliminating from the operation of this bill all naval reserves. In such determination I am actuated solely by a desire to get some action with regard to the coal, oil, and phosphate situation in this country. I still believe that the provisions concerning the naval reserves as reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate are to the best interest of the Navy. However, that met with the violent opposition of some Senators in this body, and as those provisions affect only a small area, in fact a negligible area, by comparison with the hundreds of thousands of acres of land that are tied up at the present time and that are sought to be released by this bill, personally I will consent to that elimination. I want to say also that I have talked with a number of other Senators casually—I have made no effort to get a meeting—and those Senators with whom I have talked agree with me in such particular. I feel, therefore, that it is my duty to say that my canvass of the situation leads me to believe that an amendment to exclude all naval reserves from the operation of this bill will be adopted. That will eliminate the main contest over the bill; that will eliminate the contest which the late Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. HUSTING, supported so earnestly and so ably.

Of course, there are other contests; I know there are those here who are bitterly opposed to the whole policy involved in the bill; there are Senators here who are opposed to the Government leasing these natural resources; to the Government acting as a landlord; to the Government retaining the title. Of course, such objections arouse fundamental differences which we can not harmonize.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a second. I am satisfied, however, that even some of those Senators who are opposed to this policy have been forced to the conclusion, after three or four years of debate on the subject, that such a bill must pass, if any legislation is to be had at all, and that the conditions are such that we had better pass the bill in that form rather than to have no legislation on the subject at all. I believe that those Senators will express their opposition to this bill; I think they will give their reasons for their opposition. I am satisfied, however, that they will not attempt through debate to delay the action of the Senate on it; and I am satisfied that we will get to a vote on this bill in a very short time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the other day I was shown what purported to be a department bill covering the question of naval oil reserves, and I understood that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] intended to introduce that bill and have it referred to the Naval Committee. I hastily read it. That bill as it was handed to me eliminates entirely the question of leasing oil lands on those reserves, and provides that the Government of the United States shall operate and that the Government of the United States shall pay outright for all claims upon those reserves. If the locator or owner of the claim or claims should not be satisfied with the price the Government offered, he could go into court and have the question adjudicated and settled there, and the Government would pay whatever judgment was rendered against it by the court. I know that the parties who handed me that bill, with the request that I should read it and consider it, knew nothing about what it would cost the Government of the United States. I asked them if they could even suggest what the cost would be, and they said, "No"; they could not even do that. It seems to me that before a bill of that kind is passed we ought to know something as to what it is going to cost. I can not believe that we will have to pay for the claims in those reserves less than $150,000,000 or $200,000,000, and it may be more than that.

Now, do I understand that the Senator is perfectly willing to have the part of this bill relating to the claims that fall within naval oil reserves eliminated entirely from this bill and to have them treated entirely different from other public lands?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Nevada is willing to exclude naval reserve No. 2, as the bill has already excluded naval reserves numbered 1 and 3 from the operations of this bill, and leave legislation in regard to those reserves to separate actions of the Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. In reserves Nos. 1 and 3 there are so very few claims and there is so much doubt about the justice of the claims and as to whether they have any merit in them whatever that they are not included in the bill; but reserve No. 2, if I remember corectly, is at least to the extent of half of it held in private ownership, or rather in the form of private claims.

Mr. PITTMAN. Patent for more than half of that land has been issued.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not want to say more than half, because I was not really positive about it; but I thought that it was more than half in private ownership. Is there any good reason why we should not legislate as to those claims, as the committee decided to do?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think there is now; I think there are only 6,000 acres that we could legislate with regard to in naval reserve No. 2, while there are several hundred thousand acres of oil land with respect to which we can legislate outside of reserve No. 2. It is evident to me that if we attempt to legislate with regard to that little 6,000-acre tract, we are going to block legislation entirely with regard to several hundred thousand acres.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I must admit that I have seen the Navy Department exercise sufficient power to prevent the passage of this legislation in years past. I myself think that it would have been passed before this if it had not been for the department's objections to the legislation, but I have not heard any good reason given why——

Mr. PITTMAN. Neither has the Senator from Nevada, except that which he gave.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the question because at the time the bill was reported from the committee it was impossible for me to be present at the meeting because of the fact that we were then trying to get the revenue bill in shape to report it to the Senate and the Finance Committee was then in daily session from early morning until late at night. Of course I want the Senator to understand that I am not going to oppose the elimination of all of those reserves from the bill if their inclusion in the bill would prevent legislation, although I will say that I am not enamored of the proposed legislation in any way, shape, or form; and if I could have my way about it, and could say now what should happen to this bill as it is, I would say that it ought to be defeated, because I am one of those who believe that the threat which has been held over the Western States for the last 12 or 13 years could continue a little while longer until the American people were aroused to the fact that there is and has been injustice done to the people there, and that it has existed long enough; but rather than that we should stop all legislation that will allow the development of some of our resources out in that country, which have been blocked and held locked up so long, I have yielded my objections to the wishes of some of the other Representatives from some of the other States in the West.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. PHELAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Idaho rose first, I think, and I yield to him.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was called out of the Chamber for a moment. Do I understand that there was an agreement that there should be no vote this afternoon and nothing done further than the reading of the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. I can not say that there was an agreement, but, as the Senator having the bill in charge, it is not my intention to ask for a vote this afternoon, and I am satisfied there will be no such effort made.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have heard for the first time from the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that a bill is about to be introduced, if not already introduced, providing for the purchase or condemnation of the private oil claims in Naval Reserve No. 2 and other naval reserves. I do not see that that proposed action should in any way affect the consideration of the bill now before the Senate, because doubtless such an amendment will be agreed to. Those who insisted before the committee and before the Senate in favor of the development of Naval Reserve No. 2 in California were convinced, and are still of the same opinion, and apparently the Navy Department approves, that it was impossible to have a real reserve where so many claims were in private ownership and so many wells were being operated; and now that apparently the opposition, largely due to the Navy Department, has proposed to acquire those private claims not, as I understand, for the purpose of conservation but for the purpose of development, the objection which we have made seems to be satisfied.

Out in California there is a shortage of 22,000 barrels a day; that is to say, 22,000 barrels a day are consumed in excess of the daily production of oil, while the total reserves have fallen to 33,000,000 barrels, a number of barrels very considerably less than the shortage reported several months ago. So, if this land is acquired by purchase and condemnation by the Government for the purpose of development every objection seems to be met, because it was our purpose to stimulate development and not to impose upon the Government, or see it impose upon itself, the false security of a pretended reserve which would have no existence in fact. The oil strata had already been penetrated by the owners of claims whose property it is now sought to purchase. When once that strata is penetrated, the natural gas necessary to bring the oil to the surface is lost, and the testimony before the Committee on Public Lands showed that, for that and for other reasons, it would never be a true reserve.

I trust the Senate will now, free from objection from any source, proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PITTMAN. I was going to say that I simply wanted to have the bill read this afternoon. I really did not intend to provoke debate, but, of course, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I will not detain the Senate more than a few minutes.

The Navy Department is very anxious to have condemnation proceedings in order to acquire all of the rights in these naval oil reserves. A bill was prepared by the department which I had considered, and before introducing it I submitted it to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who had charge of this bill, with a view of his looking over it to see what objection, if any, could be urged to it, and what amendments he had to suggest. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Nevada and does not delay the passage of this bill, I should like to offer that at the proper time, when it is prepared, as an amendment to this bill, so that the matter can be consummated as quickly as possible. The necessity may arise at any time for this oil to be utilized by the Navy Department, a matter of the utmost importance; and I think the condemnation proceedings contemplated are to give the same authority to condemn these oil lands that has been given to the Government to commandeer steel and other properties.

The Senator from Nevada, who has charge of this bill, had the proposed bill to look over with a view of making any suggestions that might occur to him and to see it before it was introduced. I should like to have that bill perfected so that it could be introduced on Monday or Tuesday, when this bill comes up, as an amendment to this bill. If there is any objection or any likelihood of its resulting in delay, I will then introduce it as a separate bill, as I do not want to interfere with the passage of this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was going to confer with the members of the committee with regard to the bill to which the Senator refers, the one that he has in view. The bill has been turned over to me, but I have not yet had an opportunity to give it study. The bill seems to be of the character described by the Senator from Utah and by the Senator from California, a bill for the condemnation of properties, and as far as I am familiar with its terms no one should raise any objection; but what I want to say with regard to the bill is this:

The oil and coal in the public lands that are now withheld from use and have been withheld from use so long, are so badly needed at the present time that a great many Senators, including the Senator from Nevada, have set aside their personal views with regard to this matter so as to obtain some legislation.

We are told by the Bureau of Mines and by the Geological Survey that there will be a shortage this year of about 10,000,000 barrels of oil. Since that report was made we have received reports from other Government statisticians who tell us that there will be a shortage of 50,000,000 barrels of oil in the United States. Even these statisticians were unable to estimate the increased demand for this oil, and we know that it has increased beyond the imagination of even those who are familiar with the enormous industry in internal-combustion engines. We find ourselves to-day with hardly enough fuel to carry on the transportation of this country, and yet we are figuring on building as many aeroplanes as it is possible for the great factories of this country to turn out, and they must depend entirely for their motive power upon this oil.

We have been fighting here for four years to open up the hundreds of thousands of acres of oil land in this country that have been locked up for seven or eight years, and during that time we have called the attention of the Congress of the United States and of the country to the ever-growing need of these materials, but unfortunately we seem to have been unable to portray to the minds of those whom we were addressing the dire necessity. Instead of that, statements by men who knew nothing concerning these matters, of the most wild and visionary character, statements impugning the motives of prominent men throughout this country, as well as in this body, were given far more credence.

This whole legislation was blocked for four years because of five or six thousand acres of land. It was blocked because the Navy contended it wanted this five or six thousand acres of land for a permanent reservoir for oil, and yet to-day they come in and admit by their very bill that they want this not as a permanent reservoir but for present use. They admit that what we contended was necessary is necessary.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. That is not the contention. There was an endeavor to change the law so as to change the title involved in this five or six thousand acres of land that some of us thought was worth $100,000,000. We have always told you that if you would eliminate the Naval Reserves and not try to change the title and conditions applying to them under existing law, so far as the Navy Department is concerned, there would be no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the contention made by the Navy Department; and it had reached such a point that it was apparent that it was impossible to have legislation of any kind or character unless the wishes of the Navy Department in the matter were adhered to. That is the fact now. I am willing to face the situation and admit it. I have always contended that the Navy had better take that oil out of naval reserve No. 2 before the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. and the other owners of patented land did. I have always contended that where every other section of the reserve was patented to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., and much additional to other companies, it was absurd to say that the intermediate sections could be maintained as permanent oil reservoirs. I believe that the Navy Department recognizes that fact now; at least I hope so. I hope they will go to work and take the oil out in some way before somebody else takes it out, and I believe they will.

But be that as it may, we are unable to do for the Navy what we think would be for the interest of the Navy. Congress is unable to legislate policies with regard to the Navy, and therefore we are going to quit trying to do so. We are going to trust that some legislation on behalf of the Navy will provide oil for the Navy, because if the Department of the Navy does not recommend such legislation we can not pass it.

We have 44,000,000 acres of coal land in 14 States withdrawn from any use whatever, and it has been withdrawn for several years. Why, Mr. Peabody, who had charge of the coal situation at one time, testified before the Public Lands Committee that the opening up of these coal lands, if it did nothing but supply the local demand, would relieve transportation greatly, because to-day the railroad companies are hauling coal for thousands of miles while coal is lying right at their destination.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In connection with the statement the Senator has just made, I will state that between seven and nine million acres of coal lands are withdrawn from the State of Colorado by reason of the excessive value that is placed upon the coal lands.

Mr. PITTMAN. Everyone agrees upon the urgent demand for coal and for oil. There is not any dispute about it. It is entirely unnecessary for any of us to discuss that terrible need. It is only a question of the legislation that is needed at this time to give a remedy. No matter what my views may be with regard to policies, I am unwilling by reason of any difference of opinion to deny to the people of this country the oil and the coal that they must have for the purpose of preserving life and preserving this Nation. If I can not get the character of legislation that I deem to be to the best interests of this country in the opening up of those great reserves, then, notwithstanding, I am going to vote for legislation that will open up the coal and oil of this country. I am satisfied that this bill will pass with very little debate in this body.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a report on this bill that I have prepared at the instance of the Public Lands Committee. It not only expresses the views of the committee in this matter, but it expresses more succinctly than I could in any brief remarks made here my views on this whole subject. It also includes some definite statistics which will be of interest to the Members of the Senate who desire to investigate this matter. I ask at this time that it be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report is as follows:

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 2812:

The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain, having had the same under consideration, begs leave to report it back to the Senate without amendment, and recommends that the bill do pass.

This is an emergency measure. The immediate increased production and supply of coal, oil, and gasoline is absolutely essential to the successful conduct of our war. The truth of this statement should require the production of no proof by this committee.

The coal situation has become so desperate that the Government has found it necessary to assume direct supervision through a coal administrator. We are threatened with being cut off from the power necessary to the production and manufacture of the sinews of war. Unless the condition is rapidly remedied, many of the great plants now manufacturing munitions of war will be seriously curtailed in their output if not entirely closed down. As to this condition, it is immaterial whether it be caused by a shortage of coal or inadequacy of transportation. If the former, then the opening up of the 44,000,000 acres of land reserved by the Government as coal lands to the development of several thousand independent coal operators must greatly relieve such condition. If such condition, however, is due to the latter cause, then the local production of coal in the 14 States wherein such coal lands are withdrawn from use will greatly relieve transportation.

The increased production of oil, however, will not only relieve the burden upon the coal operators, but will do more than anything else to relieve the congestion in transportation which is in part caused by the necessity to move large quantities of coal.

As was stated by Mr. Francis S. Peabody, chairman of the committee on coal production under the National Council of Defense, in testifying before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate while the present bill was under consideration:

"My own feeling in regard to the situation is that we are confronted now with the emergency of winning this war, and that this war can only be won by furnishing sufficient coal or oil, or whatever the product may be that will make steam and make power, and we must furnish it. I class coal ahead of food. Perhaps that is a little personal jealousy on my part of the food question against coal. Coal agrees with me better than food. But the two items, coal and food—this war has got to be won by them.

"Senator PHELAN. Both are fuel?

"Mr. PEABODY. Both are fuel; one human fuel and the other is machine fuel. Any laws that can be passed that will loosen up the reserve fuel and oil supplies of Alaska and the west coast should be adopted. We can not wait until we are whipped to open up those fields. We are sending our sons now; we are not sending them three, four, or five years from now; we must protect those sons; we must win this war; we can not win this war unless we utilize every process available. If it exhausted the coal of the United States or the oil of the United States to win this war, we must win this war. We must not hold back anything.

"The west coast is in tremendous difficulties—is in the same situation as northeastern Canada in regard to the loss of men. The coast can only be supplied either from northwestern Canada or from the oil fields of California and the coal fields of the Rocky Mountains. The oil production is falling off very seriously in the West.

"I think of oil mainly as tons of coal. If I say a falling off of 9,000,000 barrels of oil, I figure that 3,000,000 tons of coal have gone by the wayside. When I find an oil well can be drilled—and I have drilled them myself by the use of four or eight men—and possibly we might get 3,000 barrels of oil out of that well, meaning 1,000 tons of coal, and do it within 60 days, and I know it would take from 12 to 18 months, using 200 or 250 men, to develop any coal mine to the production of 1,000 tons of coal, and so I believe the emergency warrants the Government in using any possible means to get that thousand tons of fuel a day, whether it be in the nature of 3,000 barrels of oil or 1,000 tons of coal, out at any sacrifice.

"Senator SHAFROTH. The question which has been in dispute in Congress has been the system by which this could be done.

"Mr. PEABODY. Senator, I do not give a rap what your system is. I do not care whether you lease it to the men, sell it to the men, or do it yourself, but get the stuff out. I have no interest in the method. * * *

"The drains are that we are shipping every ton of coal we can possibly send via the Panama Canal to the west coast, and in addition to that we are supplying the Navy, and the coal shipped all rail takes, I think, 92 days' average time for a car to go from the Norfolk & Western or the Chesapeake & Ohio fields to California and return. It is a most horrible misuse of equipment that we need so badly for other purposes. The Southern Pacific wants 60,000 or 70,000 tons of coal a month. These papers came to me from the National Council of Defense. They asked me could I supply it; I mean by 'I' whether the committee could supply it. I said, 'No; it is impossible to supply that coal unless we take it from industries in which it is indispensable.' We can, if we shut down possibly the steel mills in Colorado, if we shut down a great many industries that are large burners of coal, we could probably take that away from them and furnish it to the Southern Pacific.

"Senator PHELAN. Why is the Southern Pacific using coal? They have oil burners?

"Mr. PEABODY. But they can not get enough oil. Oil has fallen off in its production immensely.

"The CHAIRMAN. What, in your opinion, would be the result if we should take up no new system and go on in the same old way and develop no more coal or oil than we are developing now?

"Mr. PEABODY. Why, from the oil standpoint, we would be out of reserve oil in the United States within 12 months, and we would be producing approximately 50,000,000 barrels of oil—leaving out the Mexican supply, assuming that everything remained normal—50,000,000 barrels of oil per year less than needed.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you think we are producing enough coal and oil now to win the European war?

"Mr. PEABODY. No, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. If we can not increase our production, we can not win the war?

"Mr. PEABODY. Yes, sir.

"Senator PHELAN. If more oil is developed in California, it will release these cars for transportation?

"Mr. PEABODY. It goes without saying that the more you can produce nearer the point of consumption the less transportation you are going to use, Senator PHELAN.

"Senator PHELAN. How extensive is the shipment of coal you describe from the east to the west coast by rail?

"Mr. PEABODY. The shipment from the east to the west coast by rail, the only coal that is going is for battleships.

"Senator PHELAN. And that at a great cost?

"Mr. PEABODY. At a terrific cost. I located 8,000 tons of coke the other day. I have not been able to find out who it is going to, but 8,000 tons of coke going to California from the West Virginia field. It struck me when I saw that, 'Why did they not take the coke from farther west; why did they not get the coke from Colorado?' Everything that I see that takes a car longer to accomplish its appointed task of taking its load of fuel to the consumer hits me in the face and I want to stop it, and when I saw this 8,000 tons of coke going from the West Virginia field to San Francisco I wanted to find out why they could not take it from a point nearer the point of consumption, as you say.

"Senator PHELAN. And it does not go by ship because there are no ships?

"Mr. PEABODY. Well, we have no ships.

"Senator PHELAN. There is a collier now in European waters, was it not so reported the other day, that can not get home?

"Mr. PEABODY. That may be. I am loading this week five ships which the Government allotted to the Italian Government with coal.

"Senator WALSH. You say some coal is going by way of the canal?

"Mr. PEABODY. Yes, Senator; some coal is going by the canal. But you should develop your coal and oil lands in Alaska, and you should develop your oil lands in every Western State. * * * I think if you would loosen up some of your coal lands you would get immediate developments out of them, and immediate relief, although not as much relief as if you loosen up your oil, because you get oil in 60 days and it takes 12 to 14 months to get coal."

The position taken by Mr. Peabody was sustained absolutely by Mr. Van. H. Manning, the Director of the Bureau of Mines, and by Dr. George Otis Smith, Director of the Geological Survey.

OIL SITUATION.

The oil situation, if possible, is more deplorable than that of coal. The demand for oil and its by-product, gasoline, is increasing at an enormous rate. Never before in the history of the country, and we hope never again, will there be such a vital necessity for a sudden and enormous supply of both oil and gasoline. It will require the development to the maximum of every known supply of oil to carry out our war program with relation to our Navy, motor vehicles, and flying machines. Notwithstanding this tremendously increasing demand, the oil stocks of the country are decreasing. The report of the Bureau of Mines furnished to Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the committee on raw materials, minerals, and metals of the Council of National Defense, and made a part of the hearings upon this bill, shows that in 1916 the marketed production of oil was 296,290,000 barrels, and in 1917 (estimated) 286,990,000 barrels, being a decrease of 9,300,000 barrels in 1917.

We must get oil now wherever we can get it and as fast as we can get it. It is better to let future wars take care of themselves than to lose the present one through dreams of far-off conservation, technical disputes as to methods, and puerile bickerings as to jurisdiction between governmental bureaus. If production is prevented by withdrawals, then these withdrawals must be thrown open. If production is retarded by litigation, then this litigation must be compromised.

No man in the United States understands the oil situation better than Mr. Edward L. Doheny. He is probably the largest individual oil operator in the world. He is in no way personally interested in any of the provisions of this bill. By reason of his vast knowledge of the subject, his unquestioned integrity, and his unbiased and sound judgment he was appointed by Gov. Stephens, of California, as chairman of the committee on oil of the State council of defense and by Mr. Bernard M. Baruch as chairman of the committee on oil of the Council of National Defense. We respectfully urge most careful attention to some of the statements made by Mr. Doheny at the hearings upon the bill under consideration. Mr. Doheny said:

"Mr. DOHENY. The falling off of the production of the Mid-Continent field made the supply of gasoline and lubricating stock inadequate to meet the eastern demands, and the prices of gasoline and lubricating oils went up, so that they naturally drew on the California surplus. Up to two years ago California had a substantial surplus production over consumption. It had had production to the extent that the price of oil was down below a profitable point of production. Then, in the last 18 months the price of oil in California has more than doubled, because of the falling off of the production to which I have referred, and also of the California production, which increased the demand for California oils. * * *

"There is no doubt but that everybody that has any influence at this time and in this situation ought to encourage development of oil wherever possible. The question where its development should be encouraged depends upon the likelihood of an increase being obtained in those places, for the reason suggested by me in answer to your former question, that oil-well supplies, especially tubing, are very difficult to get; in fact, so difficult to get that tubing should not be used except in places where there is almost a certainty of getting a good return in oil for the use of that tubing. If you think it would throw any light on the subject, I would be willing to give the reasoning on that point that I used with the advisory council.

"Senator WALSH. I am sure the committee would be glad to hear that.

"Mr. DOHENY. It is a very short statement. It is very probable, however, that you have heard it in better words from other lips; but when asked by Mr. Baruch what regions I thought should be thrown open for development, I answered that I thought any place, no matter to whom it belonged, whether to a private individual, a corporation, or the Government, that would produce oil in the greatest quantity with respect both to the amount of time and money invested. Those should be the first places developed. For instance, in California I have an immense amount of territory that I have acquired within a year, something like 50,000 acres of land. That land I acquired for oil purposes. I know that I can drill wells in great numbers that will each produce from 5 to 25 barrels per day. I have one area that will produce from 250 barrels a day up per well. I am confining all my work to that particular spot, on the theory that it takes as good a pipe line, as much time and experience, and so on, to drill an oil well from the surface down into the sands that will yield 10 barrels as to drill one that will yield 100 barrels a day. For that reason I am withdrawing, just for the purpose of economic operation, all my development at this time to land that will give the greatest return for the time and supplies invested. In other words, I want to get in the shortest possible time the greatest return from every dollar invested. I think that in this emergency, if there is any spot in the United States, or any number of spots, whether they belong to a private individual, a corporation, the Standard Oil or other company, that will produce more rapidly than a place that I, for instance, am developing, my attention or the attention of others should be called to it, and we should be urged in every way possible to develop the land that will yield the largest amount of oil, considering the amount of time and material used.

"I want to say that the use of oil in this emergency is going to be more vital to the interests of this country than any other one thing. The papers are telling about an appropriation of $600,000,000 for aeroplanes. You must bear in mind that you can not move an aeroplane one foot, unless you push it, without gasoline. It takes about 12 or 14 barrels of the average oil to produce one barrel of gasoline. To run 100,000 machines at even 1 gallon per day, considering that they may be idle nine-tenths of the time, will take about 30,000 barrels of oil a day; and that is in addition to what we use now. I am just mentioning this to show why I think that this committee, if it has any power, should require any individual or corporation to put at the service of the Nation any lands that will produce oils more rapidly, and it should stop the use of casing on lands that will produce only a small amount of oil, wherever those lands are, if the fact is known to this committee. I suggest that that power should be used as to these lands because of the peril to the Nation. You have got to have oil. Oil to-day is the essential of this war. You can not move without oil in these days. You need it for the aeroplanes, for the motor trucks, for the submarines, for the boats that chase the submarines, and eventually and finally, you need it for the warships themselves. They all need gasoline; they can not start to work without it. If you start with gasoline, why, that comes out of the crude oil, and that crude oil comes out of the ground; and you necessarily have to have the tubing and casing to put in the ground."

There should be no question in the mind of any Senator of the necessity of this legislation. The bill is quite similar to two other bills that have passed the House of Representatives and one that passed the United States Senate.

SYNOPSIS OF BILL.

COAL.

As far as coal is concerned, the coal area is assumed to be known, and no provision is made for the exploration for such product. The testimony discloses that in some cases it is more profitable, both to the Government and to the individual, to lease coal lands, while in other cases development can only be obtained through the passing of title. As the bill thoroughly protects the Government and the people against monopoly in the production of coal under either method, it was deemed wise to provide for the lease or sale of tracts not to exceed 2,560 acres to one individual or corporation. In fact, the provisions of the bill are so stringent that one individual or corporation can not become directly or indirectly interested in more than 2,560 acres disposed of under the bill.

PHOSPHATE AND SODIUM.

The phosphate lands are treated the same as the coal lands, as the conditions with regard to such products are quite similar. Sodium lands are disposed of in same manner as coal lands except that prospecting permits are granted as in the case of oil lands.

POTASSIUM.

The provision concerning the disposition of potash lands is identical with the provisions contained in Senate bill 2156, which is described in Report No. 100, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and which bill passed the United States Senate on August 10, 1917.

OIL.

The oil provisions in the bill are practically identical with the provisions contained in the former bills hereinbefore referred to and which have been considered by Congress, with the exception of certain relief provisions contained in section 16 of the bill.

Oil deposits are treated as of two characters, unknown deposits and known deposits. As to unknown deposits a prospecting permit is given to prospect upon 2,560 acres during a period of two years. If during that time oil is discovered, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, then the permittee receives a patent for one-fourth of such land and the other three-fourths is then subjected to the leasing provisions of the bill and is treated as known oil land. All known oil lands are leased by the Secretary of the Interior under the same general restrictions that are applicable to the leasing of coal lands.

RELIEF PROVISIONS FOR OIL CLAIMANTS WITHIN WITHDRAWN AREAS.

There is practically no controversy except with regard to said section 16 of the bill. This section provides a method whereby the Secretary of the Interior may settle litigation in naval reserve No. 2, as well as in other withdrawn areas, by granting a preferential lease to such litigants who claim oil lands within reserves, except naval reserves Nos. 1 and 3, and who, in good faith, initiated their right to such lands prior to the withdrawal of 1910 under the then existing mining laws, and who have sunk producing oil wells upon such lands. In fact, there has been no protest as to the application of this provision except as to the lands contained in naval reserve No. 2 in the State of California. The Navy Department has objected every time that such provision has been included in similar bills, and the controversy that was thus precipitated, as inconsequential as it was to the Government, has always prevented the passage of such bills.

Although there are over 30,000 acres in naval reserve No. 2, only 7,680 acres are affected by such provision. Notwithstanding the insignificance of the dispute over this small tract of land, it is the opinion of the committee that the bill can not be passed without just settlement or compromise of such differences. The Navy Department claims to be the owner of such 7,680 acres of land, while, on the other hand, certain individuals who have developed the land claim that they are the owners under the existing mining laws. The dispute must be settled and the expensive and endless litigation terminated. Under this bill the claimant is to surrender claim of title and in lieu thereof accept a lease from the Government on a one-eighth royalty basis and under the same terms and conditions that oil lands are leased generally under the bill, the royalty from such lease to go to the Navy.

The committee invites the attention of the Senate to this particular dispute. By act of Congress, approved February 11, 1897 (29 Stats., 526), it was provided that petroleum lands might be located under the laws applicable to placer-mining claims. Under such law an applicant could mark out 20 acres or eight applicants could mark out one claim of 160 acres of land for placer-mining purposes. If oil was discovered on the land at any time subsequent to the location of such claim, the right of such claimant in and to all the oil in the land became vested, and upon performance of $500 worth of work he would be entitled to patent. Until such discovery was made, however, the claimant had no vested right as against the Government. While he had no vested right, he had a moral right to continue prospecting for oil under the invitation of the statute, a right never denied or violated until the policy of withdrawing land from the effect of existing laws was adopted by President Taft on September 29, 1909. President Taft, in directing the withdrawal of such lands from exploration under the mining laws, and in his communication to the Secretary of the Interior with regard thereto on the 27th day of September, 1909, said:

"Temporary petroleum withdrawal No. 5.—In aid of proposed legislation affecting the use and disposition of the petroleum deposits on the public domain, all public lands in the accompanying lists are hereby temporarily withdrawn from all forms of location, settlement, selection, filing, entry, or disposal under the mineral or nonmineral public-land laws. All locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination."

The power of the President to so withdraw lands that had been open to exploration and acquisition under a statute of Congress, without further authority of Congress, was denied by the most eminent lawyers in the United States. The President even expressed doubt as to his own authority in the matter. Again, many of those who had located upon this withdrawn area prior to the withdrawal construed "All locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination" to mean claims that had been located in accordance with law before a discovery had been made thereon. Holding these opinions, the locators continued in the prosecution of work leading to a discovery.

This construction has just been sustained and affirmed by the ninth circuit court of appeals in Consolidated Mutual Oil Co., a corporation, and J. M. McLeod, appellants, v. The United States of America, appellee, involving the title of claimants to land in section 28 within said oil naval reserve No. 2. The court reversed the decision of the district court, held against the Government, and discharged the receiver. Ross, circuit judge, in the opinion cited, construing such language of President Taft, said:

"It is insisted on behalf of the Government that the exemptions from the effect of the order of the President therein provided for can not be properly held to apply to any land upon which at the time of its promulgation no mineral had been discovered, even though, as in the present cases, the land had been located under and by virtue of the mining laws; its boundaries properly marked on the ground, and the assignees of the locators, then in its bona fide actual possession, actively engaged in seeking mineral therein.

"A discovery of mineral in the ground under such conditions would manifestly have perfected the locations not only against third parties but also against the Government, and would have given to the owner of them an equitable title against the United States, and have entitled the owner to the legal title upon compliance with the statutory requirements respecting annual assessment work and payment; which rights would have been secure under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. Such locations upon which discovery had then been made needed no protection through any order of the President. Said the Supreme Court in Belk v. Meagher (104 U. S., 279, 283): 'A mining claim perfected under the law is property in the highest sense of that term, which may be bought, sold, and conveyed, and will pass by descent.' It is not, therefore, added the same court in Sullivan v. Iron Silver Mining Co. (143 U. S., 431, 434), 'subject to the disposal of the Government.'

"President Taft, who had himself been a distinguished Federal judge, of course well knew this, and we think it altogether unreasonable to hold that the words employed by him in his order 'All locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination' were intended or can be fairly construed to apply to lands upon which discovery had already been made and to which its locators had already acquired an equitable title; but, on the contrary, that they were intended and should be held to apply to all locations and claims existing at the time of the making of the withdrawal order to which the locators or claimants had some valid right."

If this construction of the law is correct, then every acre of said land affected by this bill in naval reserve No. 2 was exempted from the operation of the withdrawal orders and is now the undisputed and vested property of the claimants by virtue of location and discovery under the existing mining laws.

The claimants, however, do not have to rely upon such exemption in the withdrawal orders, as the same court in the same opinion held that such claimants had brought themselves within the provisions of the Pickett Act, an act passed by Congress on June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., 849). This act was passed for two purposes, namely, to grant to the President authority to withdraw lands, which power without congressional authority was doubted, and at the same time to protect those who were in good faith exploring for oil on the public lands under existing mining laws. In other words, Congress had the same intent to exempt bona fide locators under the existing mining laws as had President Taft in his order of withdrawal of September 29, 1909, hereinbefore referred to. It would be naturally assumed that all of said claims affected by this bill in naval reserve No. 2 would come within the provisions of the Pickett Act, as they were all located prior even to the first withdrawal in 1909, and upon all producing oil wells have been developed. It would now seem too late for the Government to question the diligence of the locators, and yet the Government has based its hope largely upon defeating title of the claimants upon the grounds that they were guilty of either a lack of diligence in the prosecution of such work before or after the withdrawal. The Government has taken the position that the work required was the actual sinking of a well on each claim; that the work had to be practically continuous; that the cessation of work even for a few weeks would constitute a lack of diligence and forfeit the rights under the Pickett Act. In other words, the Government has attempted to place such a strict construction upon the Pickett Act that in the very nature of things no one could have complied with it. This position of the Government is firmly and decisively denied by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and by other Federal courts. The opinion hereinbefore quoted, in dealing with this phase of the case, which it will be remembered involved section 28 in naval reserve No. 2, says:

"And by its act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 847), entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases,' Congress expressly declared:

"'That the rights of any person who, at the date of any order of withdrawal heretofore or hereafter made, is a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands, and who at such date is in diligent prosecution of work leading to discovery of oil or gas, shall not be affected or impaired by such order, so long as such occupant or claimant shall continue in diligent prosecution of said work.'

"This was the first legislative recognition ever made by Congress of any right on the part of an occupant or claimant of oil-bearing lands prior to the discovery of oil thereon. By that act, which was obviously a remedial statute and therefore to be liberally construed to effect its object, Congress expressly gave to the good-faith occupant or claimant of either oil or gas bearing lands who at the date of the act was 'in diligent prosecution of work leading to discovery of oil or gas' a status.

"That the appellants were at the time of the passage of the act in the actual and exclusive possession of the lands here in controversy and in diligent prosecution of work on one of two contiguous claims for the benefit of both as well as other contiguous ones, in the effort to discover oil thereon, which continuous work resulted in the discovery of oil in each of the quarter sections here involved, in large quantities, is clearly shown; and that the appellants continued from the date of the passage of the said act 'in diligent prosecution of said work' is undisputed. We therefore regard it as clear that the appellants also come within the express provisions of the act of June 25, 1910.

"In deciding adversely a much stronger case for the Government than are the present ones, the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit in the recent case of United States v. The Grass Creek Oil & Gas Co. and the Ohio Oil Co. (236 Fed., 481, 487), in speaking of the act of June 25, 1910, said:

"'It is claimed that actual drilling operations were not commenced until July 1, 1914, on the northwest quarter and on July 31, 1914, on the east half of the southwest quarter, and that until the actual drilling was begun there was no prosecution of work within the meaning of the act of Congress. We are of the opinion that this is too narrow a view to take of this statute. The enactment of this proviso by Congress could have had but one object in view, and that was to protect the rights of all persons who, at the date of an order of withdrawal, are occupying or claiming oil-bearing lands in good faith for the purpose of acquiring them under the laws of the United States, and are diligently prosecuting the work leading to the discovery of oil. Before the enactment of this statute discovery of the mineral was essential to make a location. As frequently, in fact in most instances, prospecting was necessary in order to determine whether oil or gas are on the public lands, and large sums of money were necessarily expended to ascertain this fact, Congress by this proviso in the act of 1910 extended its protecting arm to those acting in good faith in an effort to ascertain whether there was oil or gas under them. In our opinion, when a citizen of the United States in good faith enters upon public land for the purpose of discovering oil or gas takes possession of the land by placing a caretaker thereon while he is taking proper steps to obtain the material necessary for the work of constructing the camps enters into contracts for drilling, acting as expeditiously as possible in erecting camps and preparing for the drilling, spends money and enters into contracts whereby he becomes liable for sums of money to prosecute the work leading to the discovery of oil or gas, and as soon as it is possible by the exercise of proper diligence begins the work of drilling and continues it diligently and expeditiously until oil is discovered in commercial quantities he is within the protection of this proviso.'"

The foregoing opinion discloses the condition of such claim and other claims prior to August 8, 1912, and yet, notwithstanding this development which had been permitted by the Government, the Navy Department on August 8, 1912, attempted to include the land described in the foregoing opinion and said other claims affected by this bill which were in the same condition in a naval reserve known as naval reserve No. 2. About the same time the Navy Department and the Department of the Interior set aside and reserved other oil-bearing lands for Navy purposes. The following is a complete description of the oil naval reserves:

Oil reserve No. 1, in the State of California, 38,124 acres.
Oil reserve No. 2, in the State of California, 30,177 acres.
Oil reserve No. 3, in the State of Wyoming, 9,420 acres.

The amount of oil in each of these reserves, according to the estimate of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines, is as follows:

Reserve No. 1, 100,000,000 barrels.
Reserve No. 2, 300,000,000 barrels.
Reserve No. 3, 30,000,000 barrels.

In addition to these oil reserves there was also reserved for the Navy 131,820 acres of the withdrawn oil lands containing oil shales estimated by the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines to contain 1,000,000,000 barrels of oil. In addition to this shale land withdrawn for the Navy, the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey estimated that there are 20,000,000,000 barrels of oil in additional shale lands in the States of Colorado and Wyoming.

The bill does not affect in any way either the land or the oil contained in oil reserves Nos. 1, 3, or shale lands, and therefore they need not be further considered.

AS TO RESERVE NO. 2.

In this oil reserve there are 7,680 acres of unpatented land that is affected by section 16 of this bill. Upon all of this land mining locations were made for oil prior to the first withdrawal by President Taft in 1909. On all of this land producing oil wells have been sunk by such claimants or their successors in interest, and all deraign their titles from locations made prior to any withdrawal. On all of the claims in this said 7,680 acres of land producing oil wells had been developed prior to the reservation of said land for naval purposes in 1912. Of the 7,680 acres 2,080 acres have been clear listed for patent by the Department of the Interior; that is, the Department of the Interior, after a thorough investigation and trial, has finally held that such claimants have complied with the law entitling them to United States patent from the Government. Notwithstanding this determination by the Department of the Interior, which has sole jurisdiction in the matter, the Department of Justice, at the request of the Navy Deparment, is still seeking to prevent the Department of the Interior from issuing patent in accordance with its decree. This case is known as the Honolulu Oil Co. case. The Attorney General, in testifying before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate on February 16, 1916, said:

"In response to these assertions I have this to say: First. These suits were instituted (all of them, I believe) with the approval of the Interior Department, whose liberal view of the Pickett Act is reflected in its decision of the Honolulu Consolidated Oil Co.'s case.

"Second. The Honolulu case, I understand, is regarded by the Interior Department and by the attorneys of my department as a case supported by a state of facts far more favorable to the claimants than exist in any of the cases in suit."

The Attorney General in the foregoing statement was referring to the cases involving section 28 and section 2 as cases less favorable to the claimants than the Honolulu case. In fact, the testimony of the various witnesses of the Department of Justice, made before the various committees, clearly indicated that the Government not only considered such cases the weakest as far as the claimants were concerned, but held them up as examples of the fraud attempted to be perpetrated upon the Government. And yet these were the cases that the Circuit Court of Appeals has just decided so emphatically in favor of the claimants, a portion of the opinion of which is hereinbefore cited. These are the cases which involved the so-called "dummy entries" or "fraudulent entries"—known as the McNamara and McLeod locations. The Government set up in such cases the fraud and attempted to prove it. The Government was not even able to produce sufficient evidence of fraud to justify the Circuit Court of Appeals in retaining a receiver for the property. In other words, the Government could not even make out a prima facie case of fraud. What did the court say with regard to the allegation of fraud? The court in its opinion with regard to this issue says:

"Not only has no attack, so far as appears, been made by the Government on the register's final certificate of entry, but there is in these cases not the slightest showing of any fraud or lack of good faith at any time on the part of the appellants or of any of their predecessors in interest. True, the bills of the Government, which were verified by an agent upon information and belief, alleged that the location notices under which the appellants' claim were posted by 'mere dummies' to enable 'defendant McLeod or some one else' to obtain the land; but that allegation was put in issue by positive denial under oath, and there was no undertaking whatever to sustain the charge."

This was the prize case of the Department of Justice in the naval reserve. It was the alleged facts in this case that gave grounds to the Department of Justice for most violent charges of fraud and corruption in the location of oil claims throughout the United States, charges that have been reiterated and published with the knowledge, and if not with the encouragement, certainly without the opposition of the Department of Justice. It has been the prejudice aroused by the pictures of fraud against the Government, painted in connection with the facts in this case, that have largely tended to prevent calm and intelligent consideration of legislation necessary to the development of the oil resources of this country.

Both the district court and the circuit court of appeals have decided against the Government with regard to the 640 acres included in section 2 in said naval reserve No. 2. First, on June 7, 1917, the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Judge Bean presiding, upon a trial upon the merits, in a case wherein the Government was plaintiff and the claimants of the land defendants, held that while the claimants had not made discovery prior to the withdrawal order of 1910 at said time they were in the diligent prosecution of work leading to a discovery, and subsequent to said date did discover oil, and therefore said claimants came within the remedial provisions of the Pickett Act and were entitled to patent for the land. Prior, however, to such decision Judge Bean had appointed a receiver in the case, and from the decision appointing such receiver an appeal had been taken to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. On the 20th day of August, 1917, the said circuit court of appeals in reviewing such appeal found as a fact that the claimants had complied with the law entitling them to the property, and the receiver was discharged.

How can the Government hope to win the Honolulu Oil Co. case, which is admittedly the strongest case for the claimants, in the face of the decisions which have just been rendered and which are referred to in this report? The Government has not so far won a single case in oil reserve No. 2. The result of this litigation so far, which has covered a period of three or four years, is that the Government has expended large sums of money, is bankrupting men who have spent millions of dollars in a legitimate belief that they were entitled to develop unknown supplies of oil, and is retarding the production of oil in the known oil fields, that is so critically needed by the Government at the present time. The chances of recovery by the Government are, to say the least, not encouraging. It is a condition in which an individual, being in the place of the Government, would be most apt to seek a favorable compromise. The committee has long sincerely and industriously sought such a compromise. The committee simply proposes that this land, which has already been developed by the claimants and the development of which must continue by reason of the geological and physical conditions, be leased by the Government to the claimants under the general provisions of the bill upon the payment by the lessee to the Government of a royalty of one-eighth of the oil. The language of the compromise provision contained in section 16 was prepared and submitted by the Interior Department at the request of a joint committee composed of members of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate and the Public Lands Committee of the House. A compromise of this nature was authorized and directed by the Congress of the United States by an act approved August 24, 1914. By such act the Secretary of the Interior was expressly authorized to execute leases to applicants for patent for oil lands within withdrawn areas, both inside and outside of naval reserves, pending the determination of the application for such patents. The only distinction with regard to leases in naval reserves is that the royalty shall be placed in a naval fund. The Secretary of the Interior obeyed the instructions of the act with regard to such claims within reserved areas and executed leases, except in naval reserves. He declined to execute such leases within naval reserves, in obedience to the act, solely by reason of the request of the Navy Department that no such leases be executed. In discussing the intent of Congress in the passage of this act, the Attorney General, in testifying before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate on June 27, 1917, said:

"The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Under the act of 1914 he was given power to lease. I want to say right in this connection that my theory in regard to these leases was expressed by your chairman in some remarks in committee recently, with regard to the act of 1914, to the effect that by that leasing system it was intended to provide a cheaper way of taking the place of receiverships; and the general idea of that provision of the act of 1914 is that pending disposition of applications for patents the Commissioner of the Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior may issue these leases. That he has done very extensively. I understand he has issued a circular inviting them all to come in.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN (PITTMAN). Not inside of the naval reserve?

"The ATTORNEY GENERAL. Outside.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. They are pursuing the practice of operating wells inside of the reserve by receivership and declining to let them be operated under the act of 1914 by contract.

"The ATTORNEY GENERAL. I know he made no leases inside the reserve. I understand the Secretary of the Navy seriously objected to it. As far as my department is concerned, when he issues leases and fails to pass on application for patents, my hands are tied. There is nothing I can do in any way. It depends upon the Commissioner of the Land Office how many suits I can bring.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. The testimony in the hearing before the committee shows that the Land Office Department intended to execute these contracts inside of the reserve as well as outside of the reserve and on the withdrawn area on the same terms and conditions, but that the Secretary of the Navy requested him not to do that. It is by reason of that request that he failed to execute the act of 1914, which, as I have stated, was intended to take the place of the receiverships. Instead of following the act and allowing a claimant to work a well that he had sunk, they have taken the wells away from him and put them into the hands of a receiver.

"The ATTORNEY GENERAL. I can not agree with you that the act to which you refer is mandatory and requires him to issue leases. It merely gives him the power. When the Secretary of the Navy protested he merely did not use the power which he had."

The Commissioner of the General Land Office recognized, as must every lawyer, that such discretion was not arbitrary but was a sound judicial discretion, and testified that the only reason that he did not let leases within the naval reserves as he did outside of the reserves and within other withdrawn areas was because of the protest of the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy, in making such protest, knew that he was violating the expressed intent of Congress, because he appeared before the Public Lands Committee of the House and sought to have naval reserves excluded from the operation of such acts, and his request was expressly denied by such committee and by Congress. Instead of obeying the mandates of such act, the Department of Justice, on behalf of the Navy, had these wells on these claims, which had been sunk at the expense of many thousands of dollars, and in some cases millions of dollars, taken out of the hands of the claimants and operated under the supervision of a receiver. The appointment of some of these receivers, in fact, in the very strongest cases that the Government claims to have, have been discharged by the circuit court of appeals, as is disclosed in the opinion hereinbefore cited.

The only legitimate and plausible argument presented by the Navy Department in support of its opposition to the compromise is that it desires to preserve the oil in the ground for future use. This would be a laudable desire if it were possible and if its present use were not more valuable to the Government. The argument fails, however, because, first, the conditions essential to a permanent reservoir have been destroyed; and, second, because the oil must be used now. There are 270 producing wells upon the land in naval reserve No. 2. These wells are all flowing, and with the oil gas is escaping. It is admitted that these wells can not be economically shut off. The Navy Department has no intention of shutting them off, according to the testimony of the Secretary of the Navy. The land is not only being drained of oil, but the gas pressure is being released, the structure is weakening, its life as a supply field is brief, and its existence as a permanent reservoir impossible. If the Government does not get its share of this oil now in the ground, it will be drained off to a large extent from the patented lands adjoining. These opinions have been concurred in by Mr. W. A. Williams, of the Bureau of Mines, and by numerous other oil experts who have given their opinions to the committee. The testimony of Mr. Doheny given before the committee settles this question. He says:

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Government has no claim on section 2. According to this map there are 350 wells, producing wells. Would you say that the reserve could ever serve the purpose of a permanent reservoir of oil for the Government for use at some future time?

"Mr. DOHENY. It is my opinion that it will not or could not.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Why?

"Mr. DOHENY. Because there are a sufficient number of wells on it now to relieve the gas pressure, leaving the wells drilled in the distant future to depend entirely upon the gravity flow of oil for the cleaning out of the sands and the final drilling in of the well itself, as that territory is pretty deep territory, and the wells would have to be drilled much closer together in order to exhaust the oil sands, by reason of the fact that the gas pressure has been relieved and is not there to assist in the flow of the oil. A great deal of the territory would never pay to drill. * * *

"Senator PHELAN. You know, undoubtedly, that the Government lays great store upon the oil in the ground in naval reserve No. 2. You are familiar with the private ownership on that reserve. What do you think of the contention of the Government that it is valuable storage ground for the future needs of the Navy?

"Mr. DOHENY. Well, I think any area containing oil that yields under pressure must necessarily yield that pressure to the influence of any well drilled in the same pool of oil in the same undisturbed geological horizon or undisturbed oil-containing formation; unless the area is very great, wells drilled around the outside of it would relieve the gas pressure, just as a pin prick in the edge of a balloon will relieve the gas from the balloon; and as the pressure is relieved, the oil yield per acre, per well, or per day will change, because the force of gravity will not overcome the capillary attraction nearly so quickly as the additional influence of the gas pressure, with the gravity force, will overcome it.

"I have got to choose my words at random, because I only have them in mind for a moment. Say that a well is drilled into an oil-containing formation. After the gas pressure is relieved a well drilled in the vicinity will not yield oil to the extent that it would yield under other circumstances, for this reason: If the gas pressure is still on, the oil sands surrounding the well are forced into the well by the rush of oil and gas, and under the influence of the gas those sands accumulate in the bottom of the well. They are kept in suspension in the oil and are brought to the surface by the flowing or pumping of the well. In the eastern fields the wells often yield very little oil because of the limited drainage area of the perimeter of the well; hence, they use from 300 to 500 quarts of nitroglycerin to increase the drainage area by crevassing and splitting the rock.

"In the loose sands of California the gas forces the sand around the well into the well, creating a chamber at the bottom of every well that is drilled in the loose sands, and that chamber, if the gas pressure is relieved, continues to supply oil in proportion to its drainage area. If the gas pressure is relieved before the well is drilled, the drainage area of the chamber would be the circumference of the well multiplied by the depth or thickness of the oil sands, but as most good wells in California drilled in the loose sands, when the gas pressure has not been disturbed, will yield many thousands of tons of sand, the drainage area is multiplied by a very large figure. An oil-containing formation without gas pressure will never yield all its content to wells sparsely distributed. They have got to be drilled close together to get the oil. It will take ten times as many wells to produce the oil from a formation not containing its normal gas pressure as it will from another formation if it retains the normal gas pressure that usually exists in large areas of oil-containing formations. I use the figure 10 because some figure should be used to give an idea of the extraordinary loss. That is a theory founded upon experience that I have had covering a period of a great many years.

"Senator PHELAN. In an area where there are oil wells being operated constantly there are two reasons which militate against holding that area for storage-reserve purposes: One is an actual diminution of the oil in the area by reason of pumping by wells lawfully operated, and the second is the loss of gas pressure, which would make it very expensive to operate the wells.

"Mr. DOHENY. Yes, sir; those are two reasons. * * *

"I think, in the present emergency, the Navy needs fuel. There is a place where they can get oil much more rapidly than any other place in California already being drilled. Taking the view of the Navy Department, I certainly hope that it will never have another use for this oil that will be as urgent as the one that obtains at the present time, and if I were to pass upon the advisability of the development of that land now, or the development of it at all, I would say that the supreme moment to develop it as quickly as possible has arrived.

"Senator KELLOGG. You have been testifying in that regard solely with relation to naval reserve No. 2?

"Mr. DOHENY. With regard to any naval reserve or any place where oil can be produced within the confines of the United States, and not only in the United States but in Mexico and in South America.

"Senator KELLOGG. Taking all the Government oil fields that you know of in California, will they not be more or less injuriously affected by the development of private ownership?

"Mr. DOHENY. Undoubtedly.

"Senator KELLOGG. It is your opinion, taking all these fields together, that the Government should develop or provide some means of developing the Government oil field?

"Mr. DOHENY. I think if the Government wants to get the maximum oil value, that the sooner it is done the more certain the Government is to get it.

"Senator KELLOGG. In other words, that the Government is going to lose by letting the lands lie idle?

"Mr. DOHENY. That has been my opinion.

"Senator KELLOGG. The development of the oil fields is limited by capacity to procure pipe and machinery?

"Mr. DOHENY. At the present time; yes, sir.

"Senator KELLOGG. Will private owners bring about a development which will take up all the pipe and machinery which can be procured, even if the Government stays out of the field?

"Mr. DOHENY. I think there is a shortage right now in that respect.

"Senator KELLOGG. Then the total oil production can not be increased by the Government opening up these fields?

"Mr DOHENY. Yes, sir; because a great deal of pipe is now being used in territory that will not produce one-quarter or one-half as much per well as they will get out of that field. * * *

"Senator PHELAN. The Navy is building oil burners. The Secretary of the Navy is much concerned about the future oil supply, because the oil is better fuel than coal for the Navy. Now, what would be your advice to the Navy Department, if you were asked, as to the opening up of the California fields?

"Mr. DOHENY. My advice would be——

"Senator PHELAN. Speaking in a public capacity, without reference to any private interest. Of course the Government can commandeer private interests.

"Mr. DOHENY. My advice would be to throw open for development, on the best terms possible to the Government, all probable oil lands in the State of California, and at the same time for the department to use its influence with the administration to afford as much protection and encouragement as possible, and relieve anxiety to as great an extent as possible; also to provide for shipments from Mexico, whether they are English, Dutch, or anything else, because it all goes into a common pot. There are two pots. One is available to the Teutons and one to the allies. The United States and Mexico are the sole source of supplies for allies.

"Senator PHELAN. Why should not the Government of the United States open wells on its own account?

"Mr. DOHENY. Apart from the present emergency, I have always been of the opinion that the Government should leave these wells in the hands of people who know how to manipulate them. When they are properly taken care of a great portion of the oil can be saved. Crude oil taken out of the ground deteriorates in value by volatilization, and the part that goes off that way is very valuable. The waste in California has been simply enormous from overproduction and the necessity for storing millions of barrels of crude oil. The gasoline should be taken off at once, and then the residuum containing lubricants and fuel oil and asphaltum can be stored indefinitely without appreciable loss. That is something that can be very well worked out. * * *

"Senator KELLOGG. England, France, and the United States can not carry on this war without an adequate supply of gasoline. Can any emergency that may ever arise in this country be greater than the present one, in your opinion?

"Mr. DOHENY. I hope not. I think we should not leave a stone unturned to get the necessary supply. We should all do all that we can in that direction. I want to say that all patriots are not in office; some of them are oil men, and they are perfectly willing to give up what they have to the Government. * * *

"Senator WALSH. Considering these naval reserves, and taking the center of the reserved area, about how far would it be necessary to carry the oil to the trunk lines?

"Mr. DOHENY. The greatest distance in reserve No. 2 would be less than 10 miles but I am quite sure the greatest distance any well in that reserve would have to be piped would be 10 miles. In this connection, in order that I may not be criticized with regard to this statement about the trunk lines, I want to say that the pipe lines can be increased by the addition of pumping stations. By putting in extra pumping stations, without adding to the pipe lines, they can increase the capacity of the pipe lines, so that I think the statement is conservative that twice the amount now being piped could be pumped through the trunk lines in California. * * *

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You have testified that you were informed the railroads were going back to the use of coal instead of oil. Is that by reason of the price of oil?

"Mr. DOHENY. Yes, sir; and the impossibility of getting it in California.

"The ACTING CHAIRMAN. If the fields were opened up to the fullest extent, would that necessity on the part of the railroads be obviated?

"Mr. DOHENY. It would be delayed for a long time."

There are those in the Senate who are bitterly opposed to the principle involved in the leasing system. They have been able in the past to prevent the passage of any bill similar to this. They have been bitter in their denunciation of what they believe to be the arbitrary, harsh, and illegal oppression of mining prospectors and explorers on the public domain. They have unhesitatingly stated that the protection of the humblest citizen in his rights is the highest function that a Government can perform. These Senators, however, by reason of the great emergency that faces this country, have consented to compromise their views in the form of the bill presented. In view of these circumstances, and in view of the small proportionate area of naval oil-reserve land that is affected, the committee most earnestly urges that the bill be passed in its present form.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask to have the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. The bill having been read, I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be temporarily laid aside.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7572) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 7572. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7572) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, to report it back favorably, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, namely:

EXECUTIVE.

The appropriation of $100,000,000 "for the national security and defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President," contained in the general deficiency appropriation act approved April 17, 1917, is continued and made available until June 30, 1918.

LEGISLATIVE.

SENATE.

For mileage of Senators, $51,000.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For mileage of Representatives and Delegates and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $175,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 35 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7572) making appropriations to supply dificiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 17, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 14, 1917.

EXPLOSIVES INSPECTOR.

Joseph S. Giudice, of Schleisingerville, Wis., explosives inspector for the State of Wisconsin, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

CHAPLAINS.

Rev. Joseph Burt Webster to be chaplain with rank from October 5, 1917.

Rev. Frank J. Barry to be chaplain with rank from October 5, 1917.

Rev. J. Donald Hockman to be chaplain with rank from October 5, 1917.

Rev. Frank Meredith Thompson to be chaplain with rank from October 7, 1917.

Rev. John Roswell Edwards to be chaplain with rank from October 8, 1917.

Rev. Henry Augustine Norman to be chaplain with rank from October 9, 1917.

Rev. Alexander W. Thomas to be chaplain with rank from October 19, 1917.

Rev. Jesse Stuart Pearce to be chaplain with rank from October 19, 1917.

Rev. Frank Connors Rideout to be chaplain with rank from October 23, 1917.

Rev. Alfred Coolswan Oliver, jr., to be chaplain with rank from October 24, 1917.

Rev. James L. Blakeney to be chaplain with rank from October 29, 1917.

Rev. Woodward Howard Morgan to be chaplain with rank from October 29, 1917.

Rev. William P. Sherman to be chaplain with rank from October 30, 1917.

Rev. James L. Robinson to be chaplain with rank from October 31, 1917.

Rev. John Hall to be chaplain with rank from November 16, 1917.

Rev. Washington Cannon Pinson to be chaplain with rank from November 22, 1917.

Rev. George H. Nerison to be chaplain with rank from November 22, 1917.

Rev. Thomas Joseph Lennan to be chaplain with rank from November 26, 1917.

Rev. Elmer Orlando Hoffmeister to be chaplain with rank from November 26, 1917.

Rev. Charles Coburn Merrill to be chaplain with rank from November 28, 1917.

Rev. Claude Skene Harkey to be chaplain with rank from November 30, 1917.

Rev. Stanley Cladius Harrell to be chaplain with rank from December 1, 1917.

MEDICAL CORPS.

To be first lieutenants with rank from December 12, 1917.

Maj. Donald Paul McCord, Medical Reserve Corps.

Capt. Henry Reuben Weston, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Carlton Lakey Vanderboget, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Matthew Aloysius McGarty, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. John Edwin Boland, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Joseph Jacobson Hilton, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Clay Ray Murray, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Lee Franklin Turlington, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Edgar Warden Phillips, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Walter Brambiette Martin, Medical Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Francis Carrillo Tyng, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Ezra Ralph Bridge, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Jerome Pierce Webster, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Magnus Jacob Myres, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Reginald Ducat, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. James McAllister, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Ralph Ward Walker, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Rudolph Duenweg, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Oliver Sheley Gilliland, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Frederic Hamilton Thorne, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Alfred Robert Thomas, jr., Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Neuton Samuel Stern, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Albert Bowen, Medical Reserve Corps.
Capt. Russell Morse Wilder, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. William Milton Caffee, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Edward Raymond Easton, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Francis Xavier McGovern, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. John DuBose Barnwell, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Solomon Fisher Hoge, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Thomas Grant Tousey, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. George Benjamin Kent, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Eugen Gottfried Reinartz, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. John Joseph Lancer, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Sam Hardeman, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Harvey Montreville Andrew, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Robert James Platt, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Horace Tyner Doust, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Niels Peter Paulsen, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Verner Trenary Scott, Medical Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Hall Glesnor Van Vlack, Medical Reserve Corps.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS, BY PROMOTION, IN THE ARMY.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

First Lieut. Sherman L. Kiser, Field Artillery, to be captain from May 19, 1917, subject to examination required by law, vice Capt. Joseph W. Rumbough, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

First Lieut. Emer Yeager, Field Artillery, to be captain from May 19, 1917, subject to examination required by law, vice Capt. Joe R. Brabson, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

First Lieut. Marvin C. Heyser, Field Artillery, to be captain from May 19, 1917, vice Capt. Truby C. Martin, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

First Lieut. Idus R. McLendon, Field Artillery, to be captain from May 31, 1917, vice Capt. Thurman H. Bane, detailed in the Aviation Section, Signal Corps, May 31, 1917.

First Lieut. Michael J. Fibich, Field Artillery, to be captain from June 3, 1917, vice Capt. Scott Baker, who died June 2, 1917.

First Lieut. Sidney G. Brady, Field Artillery, to be captain from June 4, 1917, vice Capt. Lesley J. McNair, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

First Lieut. George A. Pollin, Field Artillery, to be captain from June 4, 1917, subject to examination required by law, vice Capt. Sherman Miles, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

First Lieut. David E. Finkbiner, Field Artillery, to be captain from June 4, 1917, vice Capt. Roger S. Parrott, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

First Lieut. Chauncey F. Ruoff, Field Artillery, to be captain from June 4, 1917, vice Capt. Nelson E. Margetts, detailed in the General Staff Corps.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 24, 1917.

First Lieut. Joseph W. Del Alamo, Philippine Scouts.
Second Lieut. Richard Weaver Hocker, One hundred and fortieth Infantry, National Guard.
Pvt. William McKee Dunn, Coast Artillery Corps, District of Columbia National Guard.
Second Lieut. Willard Sears Simpkins, One hundred and first Field Artillery, National Guard.
Sergt. Rene Joseph Le Gardeur, jr., Headquarters Company, One hundred and forty-first Field Artillery, National Guard.
Corpl. Corydon Hubert Sutton, jr., Troop B, Cavalry, Virginia National Guard.
Sergt. Henry Manchester Ladd, jr., Company L, Seventh Regiment Infantry, New York National Guard.
Second Lieut. Gustav Edwin Moe, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Philip Ramer, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Ozro Freeman Rideout, Infantry, National Guard.
Sergt. Floyd Courtland Marshall, One hundred and third Machine Gun Battalion, National Guard.
Pvt. Harris Markham Findlay, Troop B, First Cavalry, Virginia National Guard.
Corpl. Thomas Foster Furness, Battery A, One hundred and first Field Artillery, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Joseph Lovell Corcoran, Infantry, National Guard.
Sergt. Dana Mortimer Hubbard, One hundred and third Field Artillery, National Guard.
Corpl. Clyde W. White, Battery C, Second Field Artillery.
Second Lieut. Preston Southworth Hoyt, Infantry, National Guard.
Second Lieut. Clifford Adin Laflin, Infantry, National Guard.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 25, 1917.

First Lieut. Willis Wilkinson Hubbard, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Fairfax Stuart Landstreet, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Floyd W. Stewart, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Fairfax Davis Downey, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Bernard Carter Law, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Faber Downey, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Andrew Carrigan, jr., Twentieth Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harley Latson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Vincent Thompson, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carl Z. Draves, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Archibald Donald Fisken, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Samuel Cromwell Holliday, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Emory McKinley Hoover, Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William McBlair Garrison, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leon Jenkins Paddock, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Brian Cutler Curtis, Ordnance Section, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Henry Lewis Nicholls, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arthur N. Selby, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Hall McKoy, jr., Cavalry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter A. Phillips, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Stuart M. Canby, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Y. Stebbins, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edmund D. Margrave, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Darby, jr., Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Samuel Powel Griffitts, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Joseph William Loef, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Benjamin Bonner, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Arthur Lafayette Warren, honor graduate, of California.
Thomas Kenneth Vincent, honor graduate, of Kansas.
Merritt Halstead Greene, honor graduate, of Vermont.
William Beattie Weakley, honor graduate, of Missouri.
William Bennett Tucker, honor graduate, of Maryland.
Philip Dorn Tryon, honor graduate, of Minnesota.
Ary Clay Berry, honor graduate, of Kansas.
George Davidson, jr., honor graduate, of Maryland.
David Lewis Ruffner, honor graduate, of Virginia.
Mark Milton Serum, honor graduate, of Minnesota.
Louis H. Penney, honor graduate, of California.
Ross Breckon Warren, honor graduate, of Missouri.
William Murray Whittle, honor graduate, of Virginia.
Addison Henry Douglass, honor graduate, of Minnesota.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 26, 1917.

Arthur Eugene Fox, of Maryland.
Lewis Alexander Bond, of Oregon.
Robert Alexander Barnard Goodman, of Michigan.
Devereux Colt Josephs, of Pennsylvania.

Henry Maynard Rees, of Massachusetts.
John Gray Paul, of Virginia.
Second Lieut. James Embury Brinckerhoff, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Gerald Cummings, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Harold Taylor Brotherton, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Larkin W. Glazebrook, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Samuel Dalia Smolev, of New York.
Second Lieut. Charles Ferriday Neave, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Wilbar Wilson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Donald Howlett Brown, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph de Poix Terrell, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Stephen Bradshaw Ives, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Robert Fulton Webb, of Florida.
Second Lieut. William George Lasch, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Miller Hall Pontius, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Fritz Andrew Nagel, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Adrian James McDonald, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Eaton Hartigan, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Littlefield Handy, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edgar Allen O'Hair, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Stephen Mahon, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Addison Bennett Green, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. John Rutledge Shepley, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Roger Allen Sanford, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Kenneth Leeds Holmes-Brown, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Oliver Baty Cunningham, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harvey Ernest Ragland, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Henry Burchenal, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Emmett Crotty, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Wilton Lloyd-Smith, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Combs Delaney, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Pell William Foster, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Kennedy Hassenzahl, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arthur Pruden Patterson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Parker Reynolds, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Philip Gibson Hodge, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Dennis Percy McCarthy, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Albert Tate, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
LeCount Haynes Slocum, of California.
Second Lieut. John Howard Shelton, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Louis Heyward Lathrop, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Van Hoesen Challiss, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Junius Stuyges Roberts, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frederic W. W. Graham, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Joseph Reed Estabrook, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Daniel Finley, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leo Joseph Vogel, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Patrick Kelly, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Baldwin von Maur, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Trumpler Deeds, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Millard Lindsey Hamaker, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Brainard Fidlar, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Wilbur Burnette Sumner, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Cabell Breckinridge Ten Eyck, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Douglas Henry, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Arnold Graves, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Hastings Seth Morse, of New York.
Second Lieut. George Munro Schurman, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Edward Corkill, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Donald Brown, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lester Martin Kilgarif, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Henry Wiley Krotzer, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Bland Catlett, of South Dakota.
Second Lieut. Robert Luther Randol, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Douglas Lee Crane, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Melville Halstead Rood, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Lewis Chalmers, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Newton Blue, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frederic Harris Timmerman, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Howard McHenry, of Maryland.
First Lieut. Alford John Bradford, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Gurney Lapham Smith, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Merryman Franklin, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Sidney Goodspeed, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Amos Eugene Carmichael, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Raymond Hoff Seagle, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Victor Anderson, of Texas.
Second Lieut. Henry Wood Wiley, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter Rompel, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Winfred Charles Green, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Marion Irwin Voorhes, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Algernon Sydney Coleman, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leslie Warnick Devereux, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Francis La Barron, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edgar Gibson Crossman, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Hollam Boyd, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph King Learnard, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Pitt Fessenden Carl, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. David Wentworth Potter, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Henry Gardner, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Earl Cranston Ewert, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Donald Degray Demarest, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. David John Fitzgerald, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Chamberlain Chanler, of New York.
Second Lieut. Ralph Waldo Hahn, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Orrin Paul Kilbourn, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Ellsworth Jacobson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Terence Clancy, of District of Columbia.
Second Lieut. Richard Almerin Miller, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Winthrop Worcester Leach, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John William O'Harrow, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Blanding Dick, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carol Spencer Snowden Kennedy, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Dan Cummins Kenan, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Joseph Adelbert Martz, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Andrew Stewart Messick, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lee Burwel Goff, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Kenneth Smith Wallace, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Heatherington, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Eugene Bradford Ripley, jr., of Connecticut.
Second Lieut. Thornton Davis, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frederick Major Williams, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Benjamin Routh, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. William Eugene Farthing, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Jackson Herr Boyd, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Noel Noyes, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Calvin Butner, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Boardman Bowles, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edward Cummings, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Eugene Weston, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edward Stanley Ott, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Dupree Roquemore, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Bridges Bagby, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Kenneth Hodges, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Theodore B. Moore, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Melvin Leslie McCreary, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Stacy Brown, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Eugene Miner Re Qua, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Herman Hollie Felix Gossett, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Murray Matthews Montgomery, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Roderick James McIntosh, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lester Johnson Whitlock, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Lee Campbell, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Hinton Fort Longino, of Georgia.
Frederick Harry Black, of Missouri.
Second Lieut. William Ballinger Cobb, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Angelus Geague Burch, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Chisholm Garland, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harvey Edward, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Everett Banfield Jackson, of Colorado.
Second Lieut. George Price Hays, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Washington Cassell, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Hugh Applegate Reid, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Edward Wadsworth Tanner, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Ralph Julian Canine, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Lloyd Baily, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Donald Alfonso Carson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Herbert Sydney Duncombe, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Donald Julius Cranston, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Josef Robert Sheetz, of Maryland.
Second Lieut. Hugh St. Clair Clarke, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Glenn Witter, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Elmer Jamison Gray, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. George Meade Parker, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alfred Proden Kelley, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Oliver Ferguson Marston, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clarence Clemons Park, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Eugene Dodd, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Swift Anderegg, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Austin Vincent Clifford, of Indiana.
Second Lieut. Maurice R. Harrison, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Fred Bidwell Lyle, of Missouri.
Second Lieut. Zim E. Lawhon, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Irving Laggren, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Fletcher Settle Riley, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Willoughby Talbot Cooke, jr., of the District of Columbia.
William Bogardus Merselis, jr., of New Jersey.
Norman Underhill White, of New Jersey.
Second Lieut. Thomas Joseph Ross, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Jerome Bowes, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harding Chambers Woodall, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John White McCaslin, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Jefferson Cleveland Campbell, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Harold Keatinge, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Hoyne Howe, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Julian Bobbs, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Warren Andrews, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carlton Benton Rettig, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Kirk Wesley Howry, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Maurice Meyer Minton, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Frederic Arthur Metcalf, of Iowa.
Second Lieut. Thomas Wilson Wilmer, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Hudson Burr, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harrison Marshall Robertson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Russell Philp, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edward Taylor Kirkendall, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Herbert William Nauts, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter Harold Soderholm, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Terre Nichols Hendricks, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles E. Finney, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Milton De Bell, of Massachusetts.
Edward Carrington Thayer, of Massachusetts.
Clyde Bassett Sturtz, of Minnesota.
Second Lieut. Vennard Wilson, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Blair Barnwell, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Oswald Burnett Higgins, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Albert Webster Long, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Marrs Barnett, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Alexander Staebler, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Percy Custer Fleming, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Sievers Whitehead Susmann, of Nebraska.
Second Lieut. Paul Bomberger Shearer, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Samuel Cabot Almy, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Francis Roehm, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Thomas Shea, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Driscoll, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Chilton Richardson Cabot, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Nathan David Gordon, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alexander Louis Schlesinger, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Clyde Creushan Caswell, of Florida.
Murray Lloyd Goldsborough, of Maryland.
Robert Taft Staples, of Rhode Island.
Second Lieut. Howell Redd Hanson, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Robert Hayman, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Howard Everett Camp, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Samuel Chester Gale, of Minnesota.
Second Lieut. Allan Boyd Smith, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Allie Waldron Miller, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lloyd Smith Partridge, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frederick Howes Ruppel, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Jackson Howard Farrar, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Whittle Blakeley, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Etter, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Willie Charlton White, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Edward Bradley Anschutz, of Connecticut.
Charles Burgess Arthur, jr., of Ohio.
Second Lieut. Davis Jones Cloward, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Leon Dessez, of the District of Columbia.
Vernon King Hurd, of Colorado.
Henry Porterfield Taylor, of Virginia.
Armin Adams Uebelacker, of New Jersey.
Mark Allan Van Liew, of New York.
Yssell Yvette Young, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Carl Arnold Grasse, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Gaulding Watkins, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Paul Mitchell Arnold, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Miner Miller, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Curtis Thomas Everett, of Tennessee.
Second Lieut. William Samuel Jacobs, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Patrick Crehan, of New York.
Second Lieut. Charles Mortimer Sheldon, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Samuel Owen Taylor, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Bernard Marshal Barcalow, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Donald Sutter McConnaughy, of the District of Columbia.
James Bruce, of Maryland.
Second Lieut. James Taylor, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Samuel White, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 24, 1917.

First Lieut. Edward Franklin Chase, Coast Artillery Corps, Massachusetts National Guard.
Sergt. Robert Andrew Wheeler, Second Company, New York Division, Military Police, New York National Guard.
Pvt. Catesby ap Lucian Jones, Headquarters Troop, Thirty-first Division, National Guard.
Corpl. William Warren Savage, One hundred and eleventh Field Artillery, National Guard.
Pvt. Charles James Schaefer, jr., Troop A, First Cavalry, Pennsylvania National Guard.
Corpl. Le Roy Allen Whittaker, Coast Artillery Corps.
First Class Pvt. Harold Waldo Kramer, One hundred and sixty-sixth Infantry, National Guard.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 25, 1917.

First Lieut. Harold P. Detwiler, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clarence Francis Hofsetter, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John J. Vandenburgh, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Paul Sheeley Roper, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Scott Beck, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clarence Gordon De Swarte, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Brandley Belknap Brown, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Mahlon Apgar Combs, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leslie Arthur Kibbe, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Lawrence Locke Clayton, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Sanford Dole Ashford, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. William Mayer, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Laird Craig, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Glenn Howenstein Stough, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Ernest Loucks, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Edmund Bradford Tazewell, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Hugh McCauley Cochran, 3d, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Bruce Wilcox Thayer, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arthur Cavanagh Cox, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Paul Jamison Hunt, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Chauncey Kenneth Smullen, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Moses William Pettigrew, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold H. Hilton, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter Francis Kraus, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Duval Marshall Taylor, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Samson Heller Rosenblatt, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Hugh Nelson Mavor, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
George Abe Woody, honor graduate, of Texas.
Maurice Rice Gowing, honor graduate, of Ohio.
Geoffrey Maurice O'Connell, honor graduate, of New York.
Lloyd William Goeppert, honor graduate.
Frank Richard Rawson, honor graduate, of Pennsylvania.
Francis Bell, jr., honor graduate, of Virginia.
Harrison George Overend, honor graduate, of Illinois.
Arthur William Gower, honor graduate, of Wisconsin.
Guy Cephus Smith, honor graduate, of Kansas.
Otis Corcoran Moore, honor graduate, of South Carolina.
George Calvin Tinsley, honor graduate, of Virginia.
Arthur Foster Gilmore, honor graduate, of Vermont.
Thomas Blair Hobson, honor graduate, of Ohio.
John T. Lewis, honor graduate, of Illinois.
Walter A. Upham, honor graduate, of New Hampshire.
Julian Darst Conover, honor graduate, of Wisconsin.
Ralph Anderson Grant, honor graduate, of Wisconsin.
Alvah Putnam R. Conklin, honor graduate, of California.
William Quintullus Jeffords, jr., honor graduate, of South Carolina.
Ernest Carroll Porter, honor graduate, of Virginia.
Frederick Wells Gilchrist, honor graduate, of Ohio.
Samuel Lusker McCroskey, honor graduate, of Washington.
Arthur Leo Lavery, honor graduate, of Vermont.
George Anthony Patrick, honor graduate, of the District of Columbia.
Horace H. Powers, honor graduate, of Vermont.
Walter Christian Thee, honor graduate, of Pennsylvania.
Gwynne Gravelle McCaustland, honor graduate, of Missouri.
Wayne Edson Davis, honor graduate, of Vermont.
Oliver Boone Bucher, honor graduate, of Virginia.
Edgar William King, honor graduate, of South Carolina.
John Wilson Dillard, honor graduate, of Virginia.
Jesse Kuykendall Mattox, honor graduate, of Texas.
Wallace Edgar Armstrong, honor graduate, of Massachusetts.
Riley Edward McGarraugh, honor graduate, of Kansas.
Fletcher Hanson Etheridge, honor graduate, of Georgia.
David Beale, honor graduate, of Massachusetts.
Charles Thomas Trickey, honor graduate, of Texas.
Allan Preston Bruner, honor graduate, of South Carolina.
Edwin Mahlon McGinnis, honor graduate, of Ohio.
Francis Stuart Swett, honor graduate, of Vermont.
Arch Charles Huston, honor graduate, of Ohio.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 16, 1917.

Samuel Louis Kuhn, of Massachusetts.
Louis Graham, of New York.
Roy Marsh McCutchen, of New Jersey.
William Lohmeyer, jr., of West Virginia.
William Allen Clark, of Massachusetts.
Aubrey Hoodenpyl Bond, of Wisconsin.
Hubert Walter Collins, of North Carolina.
Harold Joseph McDonald, of Massachusetts.
Maurice Pelham van Buren, of New York.
Frederick Slocum Howland Smith, of Pennsylvania.
Frank Bowman Hastie, of New Jersey.
Harold Van Vechten Fay, of New York.
Oscar Rudolph Peterson, of Massachusetts.
Thomas Kronenberg Meloy, of New York.
Robert Adams Love, of Pennsylvania.
Bennet Hart Bowley, jr., of California.
Robert Dorrance Ingalls, of New York.
William Lloyd Garrison Mackenzie, of Massachusetts.
Walter Lyman Medding, of Massachusetts.
Warren Adams Lyon, of New York.
Roger Williams Parkhurst, of Ohio.
Albert Carl Lieber, jr., of Massachusetts.
Robert King Munroe, of Connecticut.
James August Bjerregaard, of Ohio.
Eugene Franklin Gaebler, of Missouri.
William Clair Atwater, of Ohio.
Henry Elmer Strout, jr., of Massachusetts.
John Arthur Strang, of New Jersey.
George Earl Robinson, of Massachusetts.
Frank Claxton Rogers, of Connecticut.
Philip Nahm Cristal, of Kentucky.
Clifford Harry Springer, of Ohio.
Edward Perry Morton, of New Jersey.
Langley Stoddard Homer, of New York.
George Jacob Nold, of Indiana.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 14, 1917.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

William M. Ingraham to be surveyor of customs in customs collection district No. 1, with headquarters at Portland, Me.

ASSISTANT CHIEFS OF THE BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Chauncey D. Snow to be (First) Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce.

Grosvenor M. Jones, to be (Second) Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce.

AID IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

William Daryl Patterson to be aid in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Charles S. McWhorter to be a lieutenant commander.
Lieut. (Junior Grade) Robert R. Paunack to be a lieutenant.
The following-named citizens to be assistant naval constructors:
Charles W. Colby,
Lowell Cady,
Harold C. Neumann,
Thomas F. O'Brien,
Emil A. Gramstorff,
Irving Fineman,
William W. Cargill,
Paul D. Childs,
George R. Duryea,
Irving B. McDaniel,
George T. Paine,
Robert G. Shand,
Walter G. Farr,
William A. Sullivan, and
Benjamin S. Wells.
Lieut. Col. Philip M. Bannon to be a colonel in the Marine Corps.
Maj. Richard M. Cutts to be a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps.
Maj. Henry C. Davis to be a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps.
Capt. Rush R. Wallace to be a major in the Marine Corps.
The following-named captains to be majors in the Marine Corps:
Robert O. Underwood,
Gerard M. Kincade,
Harry O. Smith,
Robert B. Farquharson,
Lauren S. Willis,
Sydney S. Lee,
Ross E. Rowell,
Harold H. Utley,
Howard C. Judson,
Paul A. Capron,
William F. Bevan,
John Potts,
Edward A. Ostermann,
Edward S. Willing,
Ralph S. Keyser,
Julian P. Willcox,
Benjamin S. Berry,
Ross S. Kingsbury,
Robert E. Adams,
Edwin N. McClellan,
Littleton W. T. Waller, jr.,
John Dixon, and
Henry M. Butler.
The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Marine Corps:
Louis E. Fagan, jr.,
Louis M. Bourne, jr.,
Edward S. Chandler,
James Keeley,
Eugene B. Mimms,
William H. Stevens,
Henry Baptist,
Francis Fisk,
Robert W. Williams,
Peter Conachy,
Charles E. Mills,
Wilbur G. Gunn,
John Blanchfield,

Carl E. Clark,
Arthur J. Stout,
Julius T. Wright,
Andrew E. Creasy,
Arthur H. Page, jr.,
Donald Curtis,
Jesse L. Perkins,
Samuel J. Bartlett,
Clarence N. McClure,
Michael Kearney,
Edward H. W. Holt,
Bror G. Brodstrom,
Frederick W. Karstaedt,
Angus Wilson,
Fred Lueders,
Charlie Hansen,
Charles S. Beale,
Roswell Winans,
Raymond F. Dirksen,
Walter J. Eddington, jr.,
Frank Whitehead,
Ery M. Spencer,
Charles P. Holliday,
James P. Smith,
Frank E. Verner,
Norman M. Shaw,
Joseph Watson,
Abel E. LeBlanc,
Oliver A. Dow,
John P. Harvis,
William Borghart,
Gaines Moseley,
John F. Duffy,
William R. Perry,
William J. Holloway,
Bert Pearson,
Harry H. Couvrette,
John H. Fay,
Pink H. Stone,
Harry T. Rodenhoffer,
Frank Patterson,
Charles G. Knoechel,
Charles F. Merkel,
John F. Evans,
John A. McDonald,
Ray W. Jeter,
Albert J. Grimes,
Clarence H. Medairy,
Robert Yowell,
Louie W. Putnam,
Stephen F. Drew,
Charles F. Finger,
William S. Robinson,
Edward G. Huefe,
John Kearns, and
James H. McGan.

The following-named second lieutenants to be first lieutenants in the Marine Corps:

Louis E. Fagan, jr.,
Louis M. Bourne, jr.,
Frederick W. Karstaedt,
Roswell Winans,
Ery M. Spencer,
Charles P. Holliday,
Gaines Moseley,
John H. Fay,
Arthur J. Trask,
Thomas B. Wood,
Archie Farquharson,
Glen C. Cole,
Orlando C. Crowther,
David T. Jackson,
John H. Nichols,
George L. Littlefield,
Daniel J. Readey,
Herman R. Holljes,
Franklin T. Steele,
William E. Campbell, jr.,
Stanford W. Hoffman,
George F. Hill,
Walter T. H. Galliford,
Charles N. Muldrow,
John T. Walker,
Frank W. Wilson,
Robert C. Anthony,
Ralph L. Schiesswohl,
William A. Duckham,
Benjamin Goodman,
Harold D. Campbell,
James A. Nelms,
Raymond E. Knapp,
Samuel C. Cumming,
George H. Yarborough, jr.,
Edward L. Burwell, jr.,
Lemuel C. Shepherd, jr.,
John F. Blanton,
James F. Moriarty,
Arthur T. Elmore,
Edward B. Hope,
Charles P. Nash,
Durant S. Buchanan,
Fielding S. Robinson,
William H. Taylor, jr.,
Charles Z. Lesher,
John C. Wood,
Thomas R. Jewett,
James R. Henderson,
William T. Evans,
George D. Hamilton,
Benjamin W. Gally,
Lloyd B. Dysart,
Joseph F. Gargan,
Charles I. Emery,
Clyde P. Matteson,
Rolla R. Hinkle,
William R. Mathews,
Charles T. Lawson,
David I. Garrett,
Nathaniel H. Massie,
Richard H. Jeschke,
Sidney W. Wentworth,
Frank L. Shannon,
Samuel M. Noblitt,
Francis P. Mulcahy,
Frederic C. Wheeler,
Benjamin H. Brown,
Thomas E. Kendrick,
Benjamin L. Harper,
Albert A. LeBoouf,
Will H. Walter,
Alfred W. Ogle,
William van D. Jewett,
Robert S. Lytle,
Paul E. McDermott,
Albert P. Baston,
Donald J. Kendall,
Harold St. C. Wright,
Horace B. Derrick,
Leonard Stone,
Alton A. Gladden,
Lewis B. Reagan,
Dudley S. Brown,
Robert H. Pepper,
Robert L. Nelson,
John B. Wilson,
James McB. Sellers,
James D. Colomy,
Lathrop B. Flintom,
Clive E. Murray,
Joseph A. Hagan,
Ivan Langford,
Galen M. Sturgis,
Mordecai C. Chambers,
Carl W. Meigs,
Joseph W. Knighton,
Charles I. Murray,
James A. Poulter,
Karl S. Day,
George L. Maxwell, jr.,
Joseph C. Bennet,
Clarence W. Smith,
James A. Mixson,
Cecil B. Raleigh,
George L. Maynard, jr.,
William H. Hollingsworth,
Lades R. Warriner,
John O. Hyatt,
Oakley K. Brown,
Charles D. Roberts,
Gus L. Gloeckner,
Graves B. Erskine,
Frederick I. Hicks,

Phillips B. Robinson,
Thomas W. Scott,
Leo F. S. Horan,
Felix Beauchamp,
Maurice Brulay,
James B. McCormick,
Walter R. Macatee,
Philip A. Murray, jr.,
John H. Craige,
Kortright Church,
John N. Popham, jr.,
Reginald C. M. Peirce,
Theodore C. Johnson,
Claude M. Bain,
Thomas A. Tighe,
Thomas W. Bowers,
John R. Foster,
Russell W. Duck,
David Bellamy,
Robert W. Claiborne,
Robert P. Jeter,
Lawrence B. Smith,
Richard O. Sanderson,
Louis S. Davis,
Archie W. French,
Jonathan Lucas, jr.,
William L. York,
Harry D. Gibbons,
John F. Williams, and
Howard B. Freeman.

The following-named noncommissioned officers to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps:

Q. M. Sergt. Charles P. Holliday,
Gunnery Sergt. Arthur J. Trask,
Gunnery Sergt. Archie Farquharson, and Gunnery Sergt. Glen C. Cole.

The following-named officers of the National Naval Volunteers (Marine Corps Branch) to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps.

Franklin T. Steele,
William E. Campbell, jr., and
George F. Hill.

The following-named citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps:

Earle M. Randall,
Leland S. Swindler,
John P. Manton,
Ernest H. Lowenthal,
Ray A. Robinson,
Howard N. Stent,
Gillis A. Johnson,
Kenneth B. Collings,
Basil Gordon,
Donald Spicer,
Ford O. Rogers,
Creswell M. Micou,
Walter G. Farrell,
Raymond T. Presnell,
Lloyd A. Houchin,
Roy M. Simpson,
William L. Harding, jr.,
John B. Neill, jr.,
David Duncan,
Lyle C. De Veaux,
Charles G. Thoma,
Greenough Townsend,
Henley M. Goode,
Ralph R. Robinson,
Floyd W. Bennett,
Norman E. True,
Thurston J. Davies,
Walter E. Bilisoly,
John K. Martenstein,
Francis J. Kelly, jr.,
Daniel B. Brewster,
Douglass P. Wingo,
Conrad S. Grove, 3d,
Dale S. Young,
Charles M. Portis,
St. Julien R. Childs,
Clifford C. Cowin,
Hamilton M. H. Fleming,
Walter I. Greth,
Frederick E. Stack,
George C. Collar,
John F. Roy,
Edward S. Shaw,
Stanford H. Moses,
Edward L. Pollock, jr.,
William J. Parrish, jr.,
Hascall F. Waterhouse,
Gardiner Hawkins,
Campbell R. Coxe,
Leland D. Breckinridge,
Merritt A. Edson,
Laurence T. Stallings, jr.,
Edgar A. Poe, jr.,
Edward O. Bogert,
Randolph A. Christie,
George Wale, jr.,
John A. Tebbs,
John C. Wemple,
Curtis W. Le Gette,
Cleghorn Foote,
Thomas B. McMartin,
Thomas W. Ashley,
Thomas H. Raymond,
David C. Levy,
Joseph H. Fellows,
Louis G. De Haven,
John S. Tyler,
Luther W. Jones,
Harry E. Stovall,
Chester R. Milham,
David P. Cowan,
Robert L. Montague,
Lester A. Dessez,
John R. Minter,
Robert B. Stuart,
Edmond F. Fisher,
James Wood,
Andrew R. Holderby, 3d,
Charles S. Willcox,
Fillmore W. Eiker,
Merton A. Richal,
William B. Shealy,
Francis B. Reed,
Lester D. Johnson,
Edgar B. Pendleton,
John Kaluf,
Judson H. Fitzgerald,
Samuel A. Milliken,
Timon J. Torkelson, and
Ross S. Wilson.

The following-named temporary second lieutenant to be a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps:

Fillmore W. Eiker.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 14, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art from everlasting to everlasting, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; our God and our Father, whose infinite wisdom, power, and goodness are everywhere apparent in the work of Thy hands, inspire us to do Thy Will, that we may reflect those attributes in thought and purpose, and thus live with Thee, in Thee, for Thee.

Give to us this day the bread that feeds the soul and strengthens the mind, to do the tasks before us; that we may accumulate the wealth that never dies, and enjoy the blessings of the now, by doing those tasks, willingly, patiently, faithfully, in the Spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN BUREAU.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement of the Federal Farm-Loan Bureau.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement of the Federal Farm-Loan Bureau. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the omnibus pension bill, H. R. 7674, at the conclusion of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. But there is a special order for to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Why not let that follow the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]? The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] have leave to address the House to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry in connection with the request for unanimous consent. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether the pension bill has been reported and is on the calendar.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It is on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. When was it reported?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yesterday.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is printed and in the document room, where Members can get it.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept the suggestion of the Speaker, but I do not want to lose any rights of the bill to-day.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the chairman of the committee is willing to have the bill follow the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin, but he does not want to lose the rights of the bill for to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that after the Post Office bill is concluded I propose to ask the House to take up the deficiency bill.

Mr. GARNER rose.

Mr. MOON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOON. Does the special order for to-day interfere with the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the general pension legislation be in order to-morrow.

Mr. SHERWOOD. That will be satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the pension legislation be in order to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose did the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARNER. I rose to make the same inquiry that the gentleman from Tennessee did—whether the special order for to-day interfered with the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. No; the Post Office bill is a privileged bill.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that, and the pension bill is also a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. But one is of pressing importance and the other is not.

Mr. LANGLEY. Which one does the Speaker consider of pressing importance?

The SPEAKER. The Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. The pension bill is very important too. Old soldiers are dying every day.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Arkansas to insert in the RECORD a report of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas what the statement consists of that he wishes to insert in the RECORD.

Mr. WINGO. The statement is a report of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, a statistical statement, showing by districts the number of charters approved, the number under consideration, the total amount of loans applied for, the total amount of loans approved, the total amount of loans closed, and so forth. My object in asking to have it inserted in the RECORD is that the board is asking for further legislation, which the Committee on Banking and Currency will probably present to the House within the next few days. The statement is purely statistical and contains information that will throw some light on the necessity of that legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

Statement showing the number and amount of loans applied for, approved, and closed, and farm loan associations whose charters have been approved, those under consideration, and those in process of formation at the close of business Nov. 30, 1917.

Districts and States.	Associations.				Total amount of loans applied for.				Total amount of loans approved.
	Number charters approved.		Number under consideration.		By States.		By districts.		By States.		By districts.
	By States.	By districts.	By States.	By districts.	Number.	Amount.	Number.	Amount.	Number.	Amount.	Number.	Amount.
1. Springfield:
Maine	6				186	$371,190			151	$250,300
New Hampshire	1		1		45	87,300			17	24,200
Vermont	2		6		176	596,287			39	157,750
Massachusetts	11		1		419	1,166,030			337	784,425
Rhode Island	2				40	98,960			31	66,350
Connecticut	11		2		223	672,840			178	450,640
New York	16		17		787	2,467,581			308	847,315
New Jersey	11	60	3	30	196	620,495	2,072	$6,080,683	171	431,900	1,232	$3,012,880
2. Baltimore:
Pennsylvania	10		12		512	1,253,545			223	635,531
Virginia	51		24		2,456	5,524,518			1,450	3,258,000
West Virginia	12		17		774	1,070,836			369	559,500
Maryland	6		1		125	358,485			87	257,203
Delaware	1				13	29,150			12	24,000
District of Columbia		80		54			3,880	$8,236,534			2,141	4,734,234
3. Columbia:
North Carolina	68		37		4,468	6,498,319			1,528	2,199,046
South Carolina	50		14		2,621	5,486,397			806	1,838,278
Georgia	20		14		1,448	2,771,778			291	643,340
Florida	32	170	21	86	3,349	5,905,062	11,886	20,662,556	607	914,050	3,232	5,594,714
4. Louisville:
Tennessee	86		24		3,398	6,086,252			1,972	3,431,600
Kentucky	54		13		2,521	3,888,505			1,455	2,222,700
Indiana	51		9		1,705	3,810,770			989	2,247,500
Ohio	12	203	3	49	261	763,040	7,885	14,548,567	179	415,300	4,595	8,317,100
5. New Orleans:
Alabama	64		9		3,162	6,253,832			2,897	3,169,001
Louisiana	17		10		702	2,036,161			668	780,220
Mississippi	102	183	1	20	5,644	7,003,184	9,508	15,293,177	5,328	4,606,144	8,893	8,555,365
6. St. Louis:
Illinois	29		10		738	1,697,660			(1)	1,084,515	(1)
Missouri	59		36		1,811	3,778,615			(1)	2,195,945	(1)
Arkansas	77	165	64	110	3,658	5,276,440	6,207	10,752,715	(1)	2,634,990	(1)	5,915,450
7. St. Paul:
North Dakota	48		74		4,009	12,104,150			2,944	7,711,500
Minnesota	36		48		2,887	5,708,900			2,233	4,188,300
Wisconsin	35		9		1,189	2,137,270			1,125	1,735,100
Michigan	33	152	51	182	3,049	4,743,980	11,134	24,694,300	2,254	2,784,800	8,556	16,419,700
8. Omaha:
Iowa	8		32		(2)	3,020,700	(1)		(1)	809,700	(1)
Nebraska	58		106		(2)	7,764,995	(1)		(1)	3,766,100	(1)
Wyoming	7		52		(2)	2,439,670	(1)		(1)	545,830	(1)
South Dakota	31	104	95	285	(2)	5,158,930	(1)	18,381,395	(1)	2,407,000	(1)	7,528,630
9. Wichita:
Kansas	82		7		2,405	7,826,577			(1)	(2)	(1)
Oklahoma	86		17		2,804	6,075,157			(1)	(2)	(1)
Colorado	100		26		2,815	6,782,642			(1)	(2)	(1)
New Mexico	76	344	7	5	2,423	4,207,473	10,447	24,891,949				12,335,845

[1] Not given.

[2] Not segregated.

Statement showing the number and amount of loans applied for, approved, and closed, and farm loan associations whose charters have been approved, etc.—Continued.

Districts and States.	Associations.				Total amount of loans applied for.				Total amount of loans approved.
	Number charters approved.		Number under consideration.		By States.		By districts.		By States.		By districts.
	By States.	By districts.	By States.	By districts.	Number.	Amount.	Number.	Amount.	Number.	Amount.	Number.	Amount.
10. Houston:
Texas	165	165	148	148	8,731	$22,113,972	8,731	$22,113,972	6,675	$11,488,531	6,675	$11,488,531
11. Berkeley:
California	96	.....	40	.....	4,966	16,102,789	.....	.....	1,677	4,958,360	.....	.....
Utah	15	.....	39	.....	1,073	2,822,625	.....	.....	296	681,000	.....	.....
Nevada	2	.....	4	.....	131	461,938	.....	.....	29	126,700	.....	.....
Arizona	3	116	18	101	520	1,161,487	6,690	20,548,839	79	228,900	2,081	5,994,960
12. Spokane:
Idaho	40	.....	7	.....	2,085	4,555,546	.....	.....	866	2,102,010	.....	.....
Montana	75	.....	11	.....	4,377	11,915,249	.....	.....	1,915	4,604,815	.....	.....
Oregon	63	.....	14	.....	2,774	7,260,783	.....	.....	1,501	3,829,670	.....	.....
Washington	99	277	17	49	4,770	9,824,475	14,006	33,556,053	2,645	4,702,625	6,927	15,239,120
Total	[1]2,019	[1]2,019	1,171	1,171	92,446	219,760,740	92,446	219,760,740	44,332	105,136,529	44,332	105,136,529

Districts and States.	Total amount of loans closed.				Approximate total of loans rejected and reduced.	Approximate amount of loans pending.	Average amount of each loan by districts.	Number associations in process of formation.
	By States.		By districts.					By States.	By districts.
	Number.	Amount.	Number.	Amount.
1. Springfield:
Maine	48	$82,500	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1	.....
New Hampshire	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	([2])	([2])
Vermont	1	4,850	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	([2])	([2])
Massachusetts	110	263,305	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	([2])	([2])
Rhode Island	12	35,600	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	([2])	([2])
Connecticut	26	73,850	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	([2])	([2])
New York	69	214,950	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	([2])	([2])
New Jersey	12	33,400	278	$708,455	$456,000	$4,916,000	$2,548	4	5
2. Baltimore:
Pennsylvania	74	190,600	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	20	.....
Virginia	427	1,106,750	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	16	.....
West Virginia	87	182,850	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	12	.....
Maryland	33	110,100	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	7	.....
Delaware	6	9,600	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
District of Columbia	.....	.....	627	1,599,900	782,000	5,855,000	2,552	.....	55
3. Columbia:
North Carolina	243	418,430	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	82	.....
South Carolina	143	382,395	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	58	.....
Georgia	26	56,150	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	40	.....
Florida	38	61,370	450	918,345	900,000	18,844,000	2,041	36	216
4. Louisville:
Tennessee	142	398,100	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	18	.....
Kentucky	246	471,100	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	21	.....
Indiana	342	879,500	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	19	.....
Ohio	18	33,600	748	1,782,300	1,492,000	11,274,000	2,383	10	68
5. New Orleans:
Alabama	304	470,870	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	72	.....
Louisiana	2	850	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	51	.....
Mississippi	1,190	1,162,615	1,496	1,634,335	698,000	12,961,000	1,092	76	199
6. St. Louis:
Illinois	101	186,635	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	70	.....
Missouri	278	623,455	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	125	.....
Arkansas	281	444,380	660	1,254,470	1,449,000	8,049,000	1,901	100	295
7. St. Paul:
North Dakota	648	1,825,600	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	100	.....
Minnesota	566	1,038,500	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	125	.....
Wisconsin	407	667,300	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	53	.....
Michigan	569	886,700	2,190	4,418,100	3,073,000	17,203,000	2,017	86	364
8. Omaha:
Iowa	14	96,300	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	184	.....
Nebraska	323	993,600	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	116	.....
Wyoming	80	170,400	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	23	.....
South Dakota	157	527,100	574	1,787,490	333,000	16,261,000	3,114	113	436
9. Wichita:
Kansas	1,170	3,594,000	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	10	.....
Oklahoma	913	1,747,200	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	15	.....
Colorado	722	1,170,200	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	20	.....
New Mexico	695	879,500	3,500	7,390,900	7,202,000	10,399,000	2,112	15	60
10. Houston:
Texas	491	1,145,345	491	1,145,345	2,234,000	18,735,000	2,333	125	125
11. Berkeley:
California	471	1,452,600	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	35	.....
Utah	76	170,500	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	25	.....
Nevada	17	82,500	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	5	.....
Arizona	24	112,800	588	1,818,400	5,682,000	13,048,000	3,089	7	72
12. Spokane:
Idaho	327	762,945	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	13	.....
Montana	613	1,632,020	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	38	.....
Oregon	461	1,189,806	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	11	.....
Washington	997	1,781,850	2,398	5,366,615	2,391,000	25,799,000	2,233	28	90
Total	14,000	29,824,655	14,000	29,824,655	26,692,000	163,344,000	2,130	1,985	1,985

[1] Of this number 1,839 have been actually chartered up to Dec. 1, 1917.

[2] Not reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution extending the commission provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, with the same authorities, powers, and provisions until on or before March 1, 1918; and

S. J. Res. 110. To amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," etc., approved February 23, 1917.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 110, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," etc., approved February 23, 1917, to the Committee on Education.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that consideration of the resolution for a constitutional amendment on woman suffrage be made the order of the day on Monday, January 7, 1918.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the woman suffrage amendment be made a special order for Monday, the 7th of January, 1918. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLER of Washington, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence until January 7, 1918, on account of important business.

RESIGNATION OF MR. ADAMSON.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like a few minutes on a question of the highest privilege, involving the membership and organization of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I herewith send up my resignation as chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the joint committee on transportation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: As it is my purpose to resign from Congress in a few days, I think it advisable and in the interest of the public service that I should at once resign the chairmanship of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in order that the new chairman, already selected by the Ways and Means Committee, may be elected by the House and begin the work of the committee for the session.

It is also desirable that I now resign my membership on the joint subcommittee for the investigation of transportation problems, in order that the gentleman already selected to succeed me may also participate in the investigation. The gentleman selected by our committee to fill the vacancy on the joint subcommittee is Hon. DAN V. STEPHENS, of Nebraska.

I therefore respectfully resign from both positions.

With highest regards and best wishes, I am,

Yours, truly, W. C. ADAMSON.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, with many pangs of regret, accompanied by emotions of great pleasure when I reflect upon the kindness I have received in this House, I shall resign early next week. What I have done and tried to do in this House Members know, and I shall not refer to it.

Their kind indulgence has overlooked my shortcomings, and their cooperation and support have contributed to whatever I have succeeded in doing. If I have ever received from any Member of this House during my 21 years of service anything but the utmost friendship and kindness, I failed to notice it. I shall bear grateful recollections to my grave of the kindness shown me by the Members, who are the best men, the best body of men without any exception, ecclesiastical or otherwise, that I have ever observed on the face of this earth. [Laughter and applause.]

My successor, Hon. W. C. Wright, of Newnan, Ga., has already been designated and will be elected. He has been nominated on a resolution emphatically indorsing the United States against the Kaiser and all other emissaries of the devil in opposition to the United States Government and people. [Applause.] He will support the administration and the waging of the war until it is finally completely and gloriously won. [Applause.] I bespeak for my successor the same consideration that has been accorded me, and I specially request that he be not treated as a stepchild, as new Members often are, and put in the position which the Irishman advised, as never going into the water until you learn to swim—not being recognized until you show yourself, and you do not get a chance to show yourself. [Laughter.] When I came here I was taken by the hand and put to work at once.

I want to tell my comrades here that my successor will be equally if not more worthy than myself. He is a great lawyer, a good man, and I hope they will take him by the hand and say, "We know you can work, go and do it," and he will prove himself a man worthy of a seat in this House.

Mr. Speaker, there are only two subjects to which I wish to call the attention of the House, and that will require but a minute. One is the Public Health Service. Its necessity is now recognized in time of war more than ever. It is a peace institution, however, and not a war expedient. The surgeons of the Army and Navy can not do the work that the Public Health Service can do. It is a sanitary institution, intended to look after healthful conditions in the country not in but around military camps and institutions, and elsewhere throughout the country. There is now pending here a bill already passed by the Senate and reported to this House by substitute for a reserve corps of the Public Health Service. There are hundreds of doctors belonging to State boards of health who are willing to help in that work, but existing law forbids it, and this is a simple little proposition to authorize them to be called into service during the war and pay them only when they are on duty, and involves no expense otherwise. I had hoped to get that bill passed before I left Congress. I commend it to my colleagues here and ask that it be put through. The other is the subject of water power, on which our committee has worked for 20 years. We fought between two extremes, those who demanded only a bill that will give them everything and those who will not consent to any bill that is not accompanied by such restrictions as to prevent any development at all.

Our committee has tried to steer a middle course and secure legislation that would build dams and improve the navigable rivers of the country and electrify the country and make it blossom like a rose and flourish like a trust. [Laughter and applause.] I do hope this House will proceed and continue to give it attention until a rational water bill is enacted into law that will secure private capital to make navigable all our streams, and at the same time cause the country to hum with industry.

Mr. Speaker, I beg the pardon of the House for this long time. I pronounce my benediction upon all my colleagues and hope that the blessings of heaven will smile upon us during war and insure prosperity and happiness during peace, and that the blessing of liberty and the glory of the Republic will endure forever. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignations are accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I want on this occasion to say a few words. I think I voice the universal sentiment of the committee as well as of this House in expressing regret over the departure of the Hon. W. C. ADAMSON, for many years chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. He has had a service of almost 21 years in this House and during that entire period has been associated with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That record alone is unique as far as experience in this House is concerned, but during that long membership on this important committee he has been identified with some of the most important legislation that has been placed upon the statute books by Congress. Even before he became chairman of the committee he was closely identified with such important subjects of legislation as the bill determining the location of the Panama Canal and its type; he was closely identified also with the act of 1906 which gave to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to determine what is a just and reasonable rate, also with the act of 1910 still further increasing the powers of that commission. He has always been strongly interested in the railroad employees of the country and lent his power and aid in the adoption by Congress of safety appliance acts. He has also had a deep interest in the public health of the country and has identified his name with some of the acts which have made the public-health laws of the United States memorable.

Since he has become chairman, since the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, he has introduced and secured the passage of some of the most important bills that Congress has enacted, and I have time only to state a very few of those. For instance, the so-called Adamson eight-hour act, the uniform bill-of-lading act, the priority of shipments act, the act increasing the number of members on the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other acts relating to amendments of the interstate-commerce act, the original war-risk insurance act and its recent amendment which gave allowances, compensation, and insurance to the soldiers and sailors of the pending war, and other acts.

Due to his skill, his ability, his knowledge of the subject matter, those great measures were passed through the committee, through the House, and through Congress, and they constitute for him a fitting monument, a monument of which any Member might well be proud. Because of his activity in matters of legislation, because of his efficient service in the House, because of his ability, his genial character, and his many excellent qualities of mind and heart, we all profoundly regret his separation from this House. But he has been called to another place, and the great qualities of mind and heart that characterized him in this House will characterize him in the fulfillment of the duty of his new and high office, and we all wish him the utmost success in the position to which he has been appointed.

And finally, as a member of the committee with which he has served so long, and as a Member of the House associated with him during almost his entire period as a Member of the House, I wish to express to him my deep regret over his departure and the good wishes of every Member here for his success hereafter. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. In connection with what the gentleman from Wisconsin has so well and lucidly stated, I wish to ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the resolutions adopted by the convention that has just recently nominated the successor of Judge ADAMSON, and also the resolutions of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, expressing regrets at the resignation of Judge ADAMSON from that committee and the appreciation of the membership of the committee of the long and useful service of Judge ADAMSON.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print as a part of his remarks the resolutions passed by the Committee on Interstate Commerce in reference to Judge ADAMSON, and also the resolutions passed by the congressional convention which nominated his successor. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

RESOLUTION IN HONOR OF HON. W. C. ADAMSON, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE, UPON HIS RESIGNATION AS A MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Whereas our distinguished chairman, Hon. W. C. ADAMSON, is about to sever his connection with this committee and resign his seat in the House, we, the members of this committee, as a token of our appreciation and respect herewith submit the following statement and accompanying resolution:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has always been a fitting school for promotions in public life, a Vice President, a half dozen Senators, a governor, several judges of Federal courts, members of administrative bodies of great authority and influence in the Government, have secured their training and imbibed wisdom from the work of this committee. Our chairman adds his name to the distinguished list. Owing to his long service of almost 21 years in the House and on this committee and his zeal and intelligent purpose in promoting the general welfare, President Wilson nominated him for the high and responsible position of general appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York. The same day, September 22 last, that the nomination was received by the Senate it was accorded the unusual honor of a confirmation in open session.

That he will discharge the duties of his new office with fidelity and dispatch we who know him are confident. That there will be times when he will long to be back in our midst we are equally confident.

During his long membership on this committee he took an active part in shaping some of the most important legislation enacted by Congress. We cite a few of the acts which, prior to his becoming our chairman, engaged the earnest and widespread attention of Congress as well as of the entire country:

The original act designating the Isthmus of Panama as the location of the canal and fixed its type as a lock instead of a sea-level canal;

The Hepburn Act of 1906 giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix reasonable rates;

The pure foods and drugs act;

The Mann-Elkins Act of 1910, still further increasing the power of the commission;

The various safety-appliance acts for the promotion of the safety of employees and travelers on railroads; and

Various measures for the promotion of the public health.

With the change of the complexion of the House in the first session of the Sixty-third Congress Mr. ADAMSON became chairman of our committee and at once displayed such energy, executive ability, and leadership, both in committee and on the floor of the House, as to insure passage of most weighty and complicated acts of legislation. We are safe in saying that no chairman of any committee of the House has, during an equal period, placed as many important and far-reaching acts of legislation upon the statute books. Many of these were drafted and introduced by the chairman himself. Among these the following are worthy of mention:

The Panama Canal act providing for the opening and operation of the canal;

Repeal of the tolls exemption provision of the Panama Canal act;

The Federal Trade Commission act;

The act reorganizing the Life-Saving and Revenue-Cutter Services into the Coast Guard;

Amendment of the hours-of-service act;

The uniform bill of lading act;

Amendment of the boiler-inspection act;

Enlarging the duties and functions of the Public Health Service;

Increasing the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission and empowering it to do its work by subdivisions;

The car-service act;

The exports and preferential shipments acts;

The trading with the enemy act;

The original war-risk insurance act and its amendment in the last session so as to provide for separation allowances, compensation, and insurance for soldiers and sailors of the pending war; and

The Adamson Eight-Hour Act.

Aside from these, bills were reported out of our committee and passed through the House during Mr. ADAMSON'S chairmanship relating to the construction of dams across navigable waters, control over stock and bond issues of common carriers through the Interstate Commerce Commission, and others of less importance.

This is a fine record of achievement and constitutes a monument which, in the language of Horace, "Is more enduring than brass." No wonder his alma mater, Bowdoin College, even as early as 1915, conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws.

Length of service in the House measures, in a way, a Member's fidelity to his constituency, to his country, and to his sense of duty. Twenty-one years of continuous service leaves one with few contemporaries—only three Members have had longer continuous service than Chairman ADAMSON. He is therefore one of the fathers of the House, and this fact constitutes a chief cause of regret over his departure. Our relations with him in committee, irrespective of party, have caused us to respect and admire his many qualities of mind and heart. No partisanship has disturbed or hindered the transaction of business during his chairmanship. As a further expression of the feelings of his colleagues:

Resolved, That we, the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, while deeply regretting the loss to the committee, the House, and the country, caused by the resignation of the Hon. W. C. ADAMSON, chairman of our committee, wish to express to him individually and as a committee our earnest wish for his success in his new office and extend to him whenever he shall revisit the scenes of his legislative triumphs the freedom of the committee and a hearty welcome.

Resolved further, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the committee and a copy be presented to him.

The convention recently held in the fourth district of Georgia to nominate a successor to our esteemed colleague at its opening unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Whereas the President of the United States has appointed Hon. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON to a high and lucrative office in recognition of his pure Democracy, great ability, and loyalty to every interest of the Government; and

Whereas the said ADAMSON will soon tender his resignation as the Representative of the fourth congressional district of Georgia: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the said ADAMSON has so performed his duties in Congress as to add luster to his name and glory to his posterity; that he has been polite without being suave; prompt without being punctilious; that in conserving his political interests, he has not failed to respect the interests of his constituents; that duty has been his Polar Star; and that his conduct in his high office for nearly a quarter of a century, has been such as to make him an exemplar for all who aspire to sit in the councils of the Nation.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of this convention to our said Representative.

At the close of said convention, after nominating a candidate to succeed Judge ADAMSON, with unanimity and enthusiasm closed its labors by adopting the further resolution:

Resolved, That this convention indorse the present administration and the acts of our great and good President appertaining to the part taken in the world's conflict, and we pledge to our Government and our boys who are defending our country, our everlasting support.

REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a moment to make an announcement. I would like to state to the Republicans of the House that there will be a caucus immediately after adjournment to-day for the purpose of filling committee places.

CLERKS FOR EXPENDITURE COMMITTEES.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I have several pending resolutions from the Committee on Accounts which I would like to submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up the first one.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 191 (H. Rept. 217).

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings, the Committee on Woman Suffrage, each be allowed a clerk at the rate of $125 per month during the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, beginning December 3, 1917, the salaries of said clerks to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. I offer an amendment to the resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk. After the comma following the word "Suffrage" in line 12 insert the words "Committee on Expenditures in the State Department."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAMLIN: Page 1, line 12, after the comma following the word "Suffrage," insert "Committee on Expenditures in the State Department."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Georgia inform the House what expenditure committee is omitted from the committee report, allowing it a session clerk?

Mr. PARK. Only that committee of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] is chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House why the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department was omitted?

Mr. PARK. It was voted down by the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was under consideration by the committee, then, and the committee rejected the allowance of the clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department?

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman state what the objections of the other members of the committee were?

Mr. PARK. They did not state much objection, except that at the extra session the chairman of this committee stated he did not want any clerk and did not care anything about it. Afterwards the chairman of that committee came before the committee and stated some reasons why he ought to have a clerk.

Mr. LANGLEY. He changed his mind?

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no. Mr. Speaker, it is my amendment, and I believe I am entitled to five minutes to make a statement.

I will state to the House very frankly that at the last session, as will be recalled by Members, the Committee on Accounts reported a resolution giving clerks to all these expenditure committees. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD], I think, raised the point that the chairmen of these different expenditure committees were not before this House Committee on Accounts and did not state that they needed clerks at this last session, and thought that the resolution ought not to be adopted in the absence of any information. I think the chairman of the Committee on Accounts made the statement that there were several chairmen of these committees present at that time, and that they could speak for themselves. There was a virtual call, of course, on all of us chairmen to say something about it. I made the statement at that time that that being a war session, and the Democratic Party having caucused early in the session and determined that no legislation should be taken up at that session except matters directly pertaining to the war, I did not expect to call my committee together during that session and, therefore, would not need a clerk, and consequently did not want one. I thought it was distinctly understood by everybody that at the regular session, when general legislation was taken up, that the rule that had always prevailed in these matters would prevail, and that I would expect the clerk, of course, to be appointed to the committee for this regular session. I made that statement before the Committee on Accounts, who very kindly invited me before them a few days ago; and, to my very great surprise, when this resolution was reported, all the other expenditure committees had been recommended to have clerks except my committee. That was left out. I presumed that my offense was that I was fair enough and frank enough and just enough with the House to make the statement that I did not expect my committee to do any work during the extra session of Congress and therefore did not need the clerk and did not want the clerk at that session. Now, that is the sum total of my offense.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman expect this committee to be active this session in investigating the expenditures of the State Department?

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not know just what the gentleman from Massachusetts would call "active."

I submit this—and, by the way, it is well enough to state here to the House what I said to the Committee on Accounts the other day: You will remember that under the law all the executive departments are required to report annually, at the beginning of the regular session of Congress in December each year, the expenditures of the money by the departments during the past fiscal year. These reports are made to the Speaker. They are printed and referred to the respective committees. Now, these committees are expected and required under the law to take these reports, investigate them, look them over, and, if necessary, investigate anything that seems to be irregular or in any way suspicious. Now, that report has not come to us yet, but it will come to us, and of course I expect our committee to take it up and look into the matter. It may be, possibly, that nothing will occur to members of the committee that needs investigation. I do not know.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Would that not be a matter for the chairman, rather than the clerk, to look into?

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, the gentleman will look into it. But suppose the chairman concludes that there ought to be an investigation?

Mr. LANGLEY. Do you think the possibility of that investigation would warrant a clerk at the salary proposed for the whole session?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will answer the gentleman in this way on this amendment: This amendment does not go to the merits of the resolution. It may be that the House may conclude that none of these committees on expenditures will need a clerk at this session. That question is not now before the House. I only ask that the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department be accorded the same treatment and the same consideration that the other committees on expenditures are accorded in the resolution. I do not know exactly why this committee was discriminated against, unless it was on account of the things I mentioned a while ago.

Now, I notice, in referring to the personnel of the Committee on Accounts and also to that of these committees on expenditures, that two members of the Committee on Accounts are chairmen of expenditure committees, and a clerk is recommended for their respective committees. I find that another Member, who is a member of my committee, is a member of the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, the only thing I want to say is—and I put the question up to the House frankly—the only question in this amendment is, Shall this committee be placed in the resolution on an equal footing with other similar committees, as the chairman has kindly stated he was willing it should be placed, and considered along with the other committees, and to have it determined whether any of us deserves a clerk at this session of Congress? That is all I have asked. I put it up to the House squarely. If the fact that I was frank enough and fair enough to the House to say at the last session that I was not going to transact any business through my committee at that session, and that, therefore, I did not need a clerk—if that is an offense, I plead guilty, and you can punish me by voting down this amendment. If to be frank and fair with the House and tell you the truth about it be a virtue, as I think it is, then I ask you to vote for this amendment and put it in the resolution and let it be considered along with the other committees. That is all I have got to say.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I owe it to the House perhaps to explain why I favored the adoption of this resolution because of the fact that at the extra session I opposed the passage of a similar resolution.

At that time I insisted that whether or not we should expend money for the clerks of these committees depended upon the question of whether or not there was anything for the committees to do. The House supported me in that position, and now when this resolution comes in we have given a hearing, which satisfies me entirely. The chairman of each of the committees has come before our committee and has told us his needs.

Under the operation of that system it may seem very peculiar to some of you why the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] was not included in the resolution. It was not because the committee was not favorably disposed to him or to his committee, but because of the testimony that he gave before the committee. He stated very frankly that his secretary could do what work there was to be done on this committee, and would do if he asked him to, but he would not ask his secretary to do it without extra pay. That is all there was to it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HAMLIN. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. SANFORD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SANFORD. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the gentleman think it absolutely necessary for a clerk to be appointed on the Woman Suffrage Committee?

Mr. SANFORD. I think the Woman Suffrage Committee, by the usual standards that govern the appointment of clerks in the House to-day, is entitled to a clerk.

Mr. WHEELER. Do you think that clerk would absolutely be employed one day in the month and have anything whatever to do?

Mr. SANFORD. I want to say to the gentleman—and this covers each one of these committees—that so far as I am concerned I have taken the testimony of the person who is the chairman of the particular committee, that in his judgment, the work of the committee is so great that it can not be done without a clerk. I have no personal knowledge of the facts, but I draw the conclusion from the facts that the gentlemen gave to the committee; I take them at their word.

Take the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, for example. That committee is closely in touch with the Secretary of the Navy. That committee is about to undertake to operate under the vast jurisdiction that it has under the rules, and intends to examine all the vouchers of the Navy Department and go into all the contracts and all the operations of the Navy Department, and with that one clerk they are about to find out what the Navy is doing. That is information that the House wants, and if these gentlemen, with the assistance of a committee clerk, can do that work, it certainly is work that ought to be done.

Mr. WHEELER. One more question.

Mr. SANFORD. I shall be glad to answer another question if I can.

Mr. WHEELER. Is there any other reason for appointing a clerk to the Committee on Woman Suffrage except to create one more place?

Mr. SANFORD. I would not want to say that. I think the clerk for the Woman Suffrage Committee is just as important as the clerks for these other committees, or certainly will be for the next few weeks.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAMLIN. On the point which the gentleman was stating just before he was interrupted by the gentleman from Illinois, I know the gentleman wants to quote me fairly.

Mr. SANFORD. Absolutely.

Mr. HAMLIN. When I was before the committee the gentleman did ask me if my clerk could not perform the duties incident to the clerk to the committee. I said he could, but I said, "He will not unless he receives the pay of the clerk." I felt that my private secretary ought not to be asked to do the work of the clerk to the committee unless he is paid the clerk's salary like the clerk of any other committee.

Mr. SANFORD. That is a perfectly fair statement of the gentleman's position. I think during this war, if the secretary to a Congressman can be so fortunate as to be able to do a little extra work by a little effort without any extra pay, it is an opportunity that he ought to welcome, and I believe he will welcome it. I think we ought not to create an extra position here if the work can be done by one who is already on the pay roll.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will be as generous and patriotic as the gentleman is, and if our committee is treated like other committees the gentleman will not hear one word of complaint from me.

Mr. SANFORD. With the Committee on Accounts it has simply been a question of fact, and when the facts have developed as stated to us by the chairman of the committee, that there was need for the expenditure of this money, we have voted to authorize the appointment of a clerk.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. MOON. I shall have to object. We have gone far enough on this little matter.

Mr. LANGLEY. Two minutes, then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. PARK. If the gentleman will allow five minutes more, we will not take up any more time.

Mr. MOON. All right; if you will not take up any more time, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Do I correctly understand the gentleman that he favors adding this amount to the compensation of a clerk already employed?

Mr. SANFORD. I do not favor the creation of a position here that will result only in the secretary of a Member of Congress receiving extra pay.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think the more jobs that we create, if it does not cost any more, the better it is for people who are out of employment. I think this resolution ought to provide that the secretary shall not have the additional pay, but that the committee shall employ another clerk.

Mr. SANFORD. I fully agree with the gentleman, that we ought not at any time or in any place to provide double pay for any man.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman from Missouri wish the House to understand that if this amendment is adopted it will result in giving his secretary the compensation of a clerk in addition to his salary as a Member's clerk?

Mr. SANFORD. That was the conclusion the committee drew from his testimony.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman as a member of the committee think that this House ought to adopt an amendment that would absolutely forbid and prevent that practice?

Mr. SANFORD. I think it would be a very wise thing to do. That was the practice that we discovered at the extra session of Congress. We found that in three-quarters of the cases covered by this resolution the committees were seldom, if ever, meeting, and that in almost all cases the two positions were held by one person. It seemed to me that was a scandalous condition that should be disapproved of by this House, and it was disapproved. But now, as the result of this hearing that we have given the chairman of these very same committees, makes it appear that there is work of importance confronting them, in their judgment, and work that they tell us they need clerks to assist them in doing. Therefore I am glad to take them at their word, and I believe the testimony they have given is reliable, and that they are about to undertake this work, and if that is so, they ought to have this help.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. DYER) there were—ayes 67, noes 14.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the resolution as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: At the end of the resolution insert the following:

"Provided, That no compensation shall be paid under this authority except where a clerk other than the clerk to the Member who happens to be chairman of a committee named in the resolution."

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman explain his amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. It explains itself.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HASTINGS) there were—ayes 80, noes 28.

Accordingly the resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MOON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of appropriation bills, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday tellers had been ordered on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. COX. Can not we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 1, after the amendments already adopted, insert the following:

"Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be employed for the payment of salaries except to persons who are appointed under the provisions of the civil-service act."

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 79 ayes and 91 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel and miscellaneous expenses in the Postal Service, office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, $1,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding a new paragraph to follow line 25, page 18, as follows:

"No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for the personal services of any department, bureau, or office in the District of Columbia which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MOON. We have passed the section the gentleman wants it to apply to.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what his point of order is.

Mr. MOON. I have reserved the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the point of order? I want to discuss it. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that that limitation has been offered six or eight times to appropriation bills.

Mr. MOON. To what section does the gentleman offer it?

Mr. BORLAND. At the close of page 18.

Mr. MOON. Have we not passed the point at which the gentleman wants to offer it?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I am offering it at the end of the personnel appropriations. I could offer it at the end of the bill if I saw fit.

Mr. MOON. I make the suggestion that you can not go back and offer an amendment anywhere in the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. We are not offering it at any place, although we could offer it at the end of the bill as a new paragraph, but it is appropriate at this point. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the only objection the gentleman from Tennessee makes is that it is offered at this particular point.

Mr. MOON. It is new law.

Mr. BORLAND. No; it is not new law. The only objection the chairman makes is that we are offering it at this particular point. As I have said, we could offer it at the end of the bill. At this particular place it comes in at the end of the personnel appropriations of the bill. That is, the appropriations for clerk hire come to an end practically at this point; and therefore it is a convenient point to offer it. There is nothing, I think, in this particular objection.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. COX. What has been the required number of hours for clerks to labor?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from Missouri discussing the point of order?

Mr. BORLAND. I am.

Mr. COX. What is the legal requirement as to the number of hours the clerks shall work now in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BORLAND. Seven.

Mr. COX. Do not they do it?

Mr. BORLAND. The law is that they shall be required to work not less than seven. That is the minimum, but the minimum has become the maximum in many of the departments.

Mr. COX. Is there any law to prevent a clerk working eight hours a day?

Mr. BORLAND. No; it can be done by Executive order, or Congress can direct it.

Mr. COX. Is there any law to prevent their working more than eight hours?

Mr. BORLAND. There is a law with reference to employees outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. MOON. Does this amendment apply to all postal clerks?

Mr. BORLAND. No; the employees in the bureaus and offices in the District of Columbia, but it preserves to them all their holidays, leaves of absence, and all other provisions of section 7 of the appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman have the law of 1898 before him?

Mr. BORLAND. I have not; but the law of 1898 was the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, providing a limitation of not less than seven hours for Government clerks, and providing certain exceptions—holidays, leaves of absence, and so forth. This amendment is in entire harmony with that law, because it says, "subject to the exceptions and limitations of that act."

Mr. MOON. As I understood the gentleman, his amendment is very much broader than the appropriation for the transportation of mail. He says it applies to all the employees of the Government. If it does, it is not a limitation on this appropriation, but is new law, applicable to all clerks in the service.

Mr. BORLAND. It is a limitation on the appropriation carried in this bill and does not apply to all employees of the Government.

Mr. MOON. I thought the gentleman said that it did.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman was mistaken in my answer. I said it was to apply to the employees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to an eight-hour law.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. The same amendment has been offered to former appropriation bills and has been repeatedly held in order.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has yielded the floor I would like to reply to what he has said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri undertakes to enact a law covering all the departments of the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken about that. Let us get right about that now. This is a limitation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me interpret what I think the amendment is and then the gentleman can combat that later. As I understand the reading of the amendment, it is general in its character. It does not simply apply to the bill that is pending. It covers all of the departments, and whether it applies to this department alone or covers all of the departments, in my judgment it is a change of law and therefore subject to a point of order. To say that no man who works less than eight hours a day shall be compensated out of the appropriations made in this bill would be to say that if a man by some chance completed the work assigned to him in six hours in a given day, those six hours' work should be given to the Government free of cost, a thing that ought not to be. This amendment limits the power of the department to release a man at a given hour on a certain day from the employment in which he is engaged, unless the man yields up the compensation to which he is entitled in order to get the release. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this would be a great injustice even if the amendment were in order under the rules of the House. It is unfair to say that because a man may be able to complete his work within a given time, if that time be less than eight hours, he therefore shall not be paid for that work. It is unfair to say to men who frequently work into the midnight hours in order to accomplish the work that is needed to be done by the departments shall not be permitted on some other day to be paid for work if the hours employed are less than eight. I contend that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri has no place on this bill, that it is out of order under the rules of the House; that it changes the law, and, in addition to that, it is a great injustice to the men employed in the Government service, and I submit to the chairman that the only thing he can do under the circumstances is to hold the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Of course, the Chair recognizes that he is an experienced parliamentarian, but the Chair is of opinion that this amendment is a proper limitation and it does retrench expenses and is in order. If gentlemen think the Chair in error about that, they can appeal from his decision.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment which has been offered to previous appropriation bills, and every time it is offered one of these camouflage economists, like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is always willing to talk economy and vote against the interests of the taxpayer, gets up and makes some technical argument against it. It is as plain as sunlight. All it means is that the American taxpayer is entitled to a square deal. There are nearly half a million Government employees in the United States. Of those approximately 37,000 were in the District of Columbia prior to the war. Now, there are close to 50,000 in the District of Columbia. In other words, less than 10 per cent of the Federal employees are in the District of Columbia. All Federal employees outside of the District of Columbia work a minimum of 8 hours, and some of them work 9 and 10 and 11 hours.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not true that some of the rural carriers work only two or three hours a day?

Mr. BORLAND. I shall yield in a moment. All of the Federal employees outside of the District of Columbia work upon an eight-hour basis. It took us some little time after the Democrats came into power to get an eight-hour law for Federal employees in the post offices throughout the United States, but we finally got it, and we have not yet been able to get it into full working order. From 7 to 10 per cent of the Government employees who happen to work in the District of Columbia constitute a favored class. They have never been required to work more than seven hours except in extraordinary emergencies. We are now confronted with a condition of war, where the American taxpayer is being taxed to the limit, until it hurts, and we must tax him to preserve the national life of the Government. There is no room in the National Capital for any set of slackers working less than an honest day of eight hours. Gentlemen can now vote with their eyes open on this proposition.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to the eight-hour law, but do I understand the gentleman wants to limit it to eight hours?

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to have the gentleman from Tennessee get that perfectly clear. A long time ago before the civil service was in working order the clerks around Washington worked from four to six hours a day, as happened to suit their fancy. During the Spanish-American War we were compelled to put a minimum limitation on the hours of work because the Nation demanded an efficient service, and we put a minimum limitation of seven hours. We said they should not maintain less than a seven-hour day. I am saying by this amendment that we shall not maintain less than an eight-hour day, which is recognized as a standard. The same construction exactly will be put upon my limitation as is put upon the existing law, no different so far as the individual clerk is concerned. It simply means that we shall increase the minimum from seven to eight hours as far as the District of Columbia is concerned, and all other limitations and exceptions in the existing law apply to this limitation.

Mr. MOON. Then, if I understand the gentleman correctly, he is not attempting to fix a maximum but a minimum?

Mr. BORLAND. I am attempting to fix a minimum. It does seem to me that eight hours is an honest day's work. I have fought a great many battles for the eight-hour day, and I intend to keep on fighting those battles for the eight-hour day, but I have always believed that eight hours was fair both to the employer and the employee. I never believed either one ought to be short changed in the transaction. I do not believe in a short-change day for some men and a full day for others. Wherever men are paid out of the Federal Treasury it is a burden laid upon all citizens, farmers, laboring men, merchants, all citizens, and these men by every dictate of good faith and honesty ought to be compelled to render a full business day in return for their salary.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. In a moment. If the salary be not adequate, that is another proposition; but we must admit that Congress knows how to fix those salaries and will fix them with fairness and justice. A man should render an honest business day's work for his salary. All organized labor has united in the proposition for eight hours for work, eight hours for sleep, and eight hours for recreation and mental improvement as being an honest day's work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. COX. I want the gentleman's interpretation of his limitation. I desire to know if his limitation should be adopted will it apply only to the employees of the Post Office Department here in the District or would it apply to them and the employees of all other departments? What is the gentleman's interpretation?

Mr. BORLAND. It must apply only as a limitation to the employees provided for in this appropriation bill.

Mr. COX. And those would be postal employees?

Mr. BORLAND. It would be only postal employees and only in the District of Columbia. It would be necessary to offer the same amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the District of Columbia bill, and other bills. In other words, it would be a matter of legislation if we attempted to cover other services not provided for in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the gentleman's opinion of this? If his limitation is placed on this bill, would any person working less than eight hours a day under any circumstances which may arise be entitled to any compensation under the act?

Mr. BORLAND. Now, the gentleman is an awfully sharp man and he knows that this does not change the construction of existing law at all—that if a man worked less than seven hours and he gets full pay he will get it under this law if he works less than the eight.

Mr. FORDNEY. If it does not change existing conditions, what is the object in offering it?

Mr. BORLAND. I hope the gentleman will give attention, and he will find out.

Mr. FORDNEY. I heard the gentleman. The gentleman said we voted with our eyes open. What has he given us that would open our eyes more than they were before his statement?

Mr. BORLAND. If the matter is not clear to the gentleman I shall be glad to explain it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. STEENERSON. This appropriation in this bill does not cover departmental employees in the city of Washington, as the gentleman just stated. Departmental officials are covered, as the gentleman well knows, in the legislative bill——

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Which bill is reported by the Committee on Appropriations. Now, the gentleman has also stated that he has been instrumental, to the great benefit of the country, in passing the eight-hour law to apply in outside post offices. Now, this bill covers outside post offices. What is the necessity of this limitation on this appropriation when the gentleman says through his splendid efforts in the past he has succeeded in securing the eight hours? This would only cut down the pay of rural carriers.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will look at the limitation he will see that it does not apply outside of the District of Columbia, and therefore does not affect rural carriers.

Mr. REED. Does it apply to city carriers?

Mr. BORLAND. It does not apply to anyone outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. Well, to city letter carriers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BORLAND. It applies to all employees within the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. A letter carrier will have a light mail one day and he can not work for more than six hours, and another day he will have a heavier mail and the department tells him to come back——

Mr. BORLAND. I have already replied to that question in answering the gentleman from Tennessee. The present limitation is seven hours, and in exactly this language. This simply increases it one hour, and therefore all limitations and exceptions which apply under the present law on the seven-hour basis will apply under the eight-hour basis. There will be no difficulty about that.

Mr. REED. Is not a letter carrier ordered to return and not to deliver mail if his hours run over?

Mr. BORLAND. It would not affect this legislation any more than the present law. The same construction and the same exceptions apply to this limitation as to the present law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman's amendment says that no part of this appropriation shall be paid to an employee who does not render eight-hour service?

Mr. BORLAND. No; it does not say so.

Mr. AUSTIN (reading)—

No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal services in any department, bureau, or office in the District of Columbia which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 15, 1898, requiring eight hours of labor each day.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, if the man serves less than eight hours, he can not be paid under the provision. Your language is plain. It says that this appropriation shall not be used to pay any Government official unless he has served eight hours.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman wants an answer, I will give it. He is simply talking to the press gallery.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not talking to the press gallery. I have not noticed it.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman knows the limitation applies to the department, bureau, or office. It requires the department, bureau, or office to maintain now an eight-hour day under the limitation instead of a seven-hour day. All of the individual exceptions which are at present applied to the seven-hour day, which the gentleman has in mind, will be applied to the eight-hour day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no difference as to the extraordinary exceptions of the individual man whatever. The difference consists in compelling the department, bureau, or office to maintain an eight-hour basis. Now, there is no basis for the gentleman's objection——

Mr. AUSTIN. Suppose the department does not do that?

Mr. BORLAND. Then it does not get any money.

Mr. AUSTIN. If he serves less than eight hours a day, does he get any money?

Mr. BORLAND. The department does not get any money unless it maintains an eight-hour basis.

Mr. AUSTIN. And you maintain that the clerk does not get any money unless he serves eight hours?

Mr. BORLAND. The law I am amending is in exactly the same language. Now, gentlemen, I have this to say: We are to-day confronted with a shortage of labor. We are to-day confronted with a shortage of employees for the Government. We are to-day confronted with objections and criticisms on all sides because the Government is not efficient in providing for the Army in the conduct of this war. We are confronted with a shortage of people who are available for clerical service in the District of Columbia. Great pressure is put upon the Government to respond promptly, with a miraculous promptness, to the demands of the Army in the field. And yet in the face of all of that, gentlemen want to oppose an eight-hour day, the honest day's work, for clerical employees in the District of Columbia. Who is going to benefit by employing an excessive number of employees in the District of Columbia? Why, it is perfectly manifest who is going to benefit. The landlords and the merchants in the District of Columbia are the only persons on earth who are going to benefit from it. The American taxpayer is handicapped in two ways—first, by the added expense of the public service, and, second, by the decreased efficiency.

Now, gentlemen can raise all the technicalities they choose. The plain fact is that we are simply requiring these departments to maintain, with the same individual exceptions that they now maintain, an eight-hour day instead of a seven-hour day. And if you put that question squarely to any honest set of business men in your district, there will be but one answer.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman has so nearly stated what I was going to ask that I may not be justified in asking it. The substance of your amendment is that you take out "seven" and write "eight"?

Mr. BORLAND. That is all.

Mr. HARDY. And all rules of the department applicable to seven hours would be applicable to eight?

Mr. BORLAND. That is exactly it.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any data or information to give to the House showing if this limitation is put upon all the departments how much economy we would effect by increasing the hours of labor?

Mr. BORLAND. I had it at the last session of Congress. At that time the pay roll in the District of Columbia was $50,000,000, in round numbers. A saving of 14 per cent in time ought to save 14 per cent in the expense, which would be $7,000,000. But they assumed that it would not work out with perfect harmony, and I assumed it would save $5,000,000 on the existing pay roll. But the pay roll will now run $65,000,000 or $67,000,000, and the saving ought to be $8,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not know that the employees of the War Department have been employed very much more than eight hours since the beginning of the Mexican trouble and from the beginning of the present war? They were employed during the Spanish War overtime to a very large extent, nights, Sundays, and holidays, and they never received a single cent of compensation for that extra work?

Mr. BORLAND. That is no reason why another set of employees in the District of Columbia should work less than eight hours. As fast as we can relieve that congested condition in the War Department the Government is relieved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I have had occasion to look into the crowded condition of the War Department. I know what the condition is. We can not find employees fast enough, unless we maintain an eight-hour day, to relieve the congestion of the War Department, and therefore we can not properly carry on the great work of arming for this war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is presenting his ancient fad on the subject of labor. I think it ought to be treated now as it has been heretofore, namely, rejected. He undertakes to fix an arbitrary eight-hour day. Conditions may be such that the day ought to be less than eight hours for labor, and yet he would not pay anything if it be less by the limitation he fixes upon this appropriation. There ought to be no reason why a department, in its discretion, if the public necessities require it, should not have the service of employees beyond eight hours, provided that they pay them for that service beyond eight hours. It is an attempt to hold down the department to an exact minute and hour in the employment of labor and to prevent laborers who want to serve longer than eight hours, if they see fit to do so, at an increased compensation, from having it; and I think it is an error in administration, to say the least of it. Legislation is not necessary for the department nor in the interest of labor.

I favor as much as any man in this country an eight-hour law. I am in favor of limiting the service to eight hours if it is necessary to do it. I am in favor of having the eight-hour law and the work for eight hours in the discretion of the employee, even, if it is necessary; but there is no necessity for presenting to this general law a crude amendment that has not been considered by this committee or any other committee, which upon its face would indicate, if the limitation placed upon the appropriation is to count for anything, the department must have exactly eight hours and no more and no less.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. What do you say in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], that it simply changes the word "seven" to "eight," and all other limitations and all other discretions heretofore exercised would still remain in force?

Mr. MOON. I say it is not the law and it is not the fact when the whole law is construed together.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this question be closed, unless some gentleman wishes to speak.

Mr. BLACK. I want 5 minutes.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move then that the debate close in 10 minutes; 5 minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is recognized.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in favor of this amendment. I have a very high regard for our honored chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, Judge MOON, who has just spoken in opposition to this amendment. I am a member of that committee, and usually I give a great deal of deference to what he has to say and am glad to vote otherwise when I think he is wrong, as I certainly do in vote with him when I think he is right but do not hesitate to this case. I do not see how, in view of existing conditions, in view of the situation that actually exists here in the departments in Washington, where an unusual amount of work is to be done, that any Member of Congress can justify himself in opposing an amendment that merely requires an eight-hour day. Certainly no one has any right to complain that eight hours is too long for a department clerk to work here in Washington. If eight hours is recognized as a fair day's work throughout the country, why should it not prevail here? Will some one please give a good reason? In reading the Official Bulletin that we get each day, I see the insistent calls of the departments for clerks, stenographers, and help of that kind. Only a few days ago Capt. J. H. Moffatt, of the civilian personnel division of the Ordnance Department of the Army, addressed the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union and said that his department was in urgent need of a very large number if stenographers and appealed to these women to go back home and appeal to the young women there to come to Washington and relieve the situation. It does seem to me that if the need for extra help is so urgent, that it would not be unreasonable to install a general eight-hour day among the Government employees here in Washington. This one hour of added labor would certainly help some. It does seem to me that if this Congress really wants to practice economy that is reasonable and will hurt nobody, then we should adopt this amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is there anything in the present law that limits the time during which these clerks can be employed to seven hours?

Mr. BLACK. There is not. My understanding is that the law merely says they shall not work less than seven hours. I also understand further that the heads of departments have used this minimum as a maximum, and have actually put into effect a seven-hour day. I assume that if the limitation of eight hours is substituted for seven hours the departments will obey the mandate of Congress and substitute an eight-hour day for a seven-hour day.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The Cabinet heads have the discretion now to make them work 8 hours, or 9 hours, or possibly 15 hours.

Mr. BLACK. Possibly they have such authority in some cases, but they do not exercise it. If we put this limitation of eight hours instead of seven, then they will have to inaugurate a general eight-hour day in the departments, and it is certainly my unqualified opinion that they should have to do that very thing.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. You say the department heads have practically put into effect a seven-hour day?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If they work eight hours, do they have extra compensation?

Mr. BLACK. I think not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If we adopt this amendment, designed to put into effect an eight-hour day, will the employee be allowed to work beyond that time, or can they be made to do it?

Mr. BLACK. I understand there would be no change in the labor policy now practiced by the departments, except to lengthen the hours of labor by one hour. I see no reason why there would be any cause for overtime work. This amendment simply substitutes the limitation of eight hours for seven, and makes an eight-hour day instead of a seven-hour day.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then the effect of the amendment is to enable us to repeal the action of the departments in establishing seven hours and make it an eight-hour day?

Mr. BLACK. That is the effect of the amendment, and that is the reason why I favor it. I can not see how any Member of Congress can consistently oppose it. In this hour of unprecedented public expenditures, in this hour when we are confronted with the problem of where we will get sufficient funds to meet these staggering expenditures, I do not see how we can afford to sit idly by and not undertake to establish economy wherever we can get it without any embarrassment to the public service or undue hardship to individuals. I think it would be absurd for anyone to contend that eight hours of clerical labor is excessive.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Does not the gentleman from Texas know that in all the departments, or in most of them, at the present time under the present law the clerks and heads of bureaus and the stenographers are working every night, or nearly every night, until late at night?

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand that is so.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. That is so.

Mr. BLACK. On the contrary, my understanding is that the relatively small number of those who work at night work on the night shift, and that no excessive hours of labor are required. I think that there can be no successful disputation of the fact that the general work day of Government employees is seven hours, and I do not think there are very many, as compared with the whole number, that work more than seven hours.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. They are doing it, and without extra pay.

Mr. BLACK. I do not know of very many of these special exceptions, but I do know from inquiries that I have made that where night work is required that they make these night shifts, and no one has to work any excessive number of hours. The departments do not keep a man 9 or 10 or 12 hours a day at work, with possibly a few occasional exceptions. The general work day of Government employees here in Washington is seven hours, as I have stated, and I do not think that fact can be successfully controverted.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. One other question. Does it occur to the gentleman from Texas——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be allowed two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time has been limited. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to publicly certify to the efficiency and excellent conduct of the Government officials and employees in the city of Washington. I do not believe any other service, public or private, is more faithfully, efficiently, or honestly served than by the average Government official and employee in this Capital City. We require the very highest class of men and women for the Government service, and practically all of them have entered after going through competitive civil-service examinations which tested their intelligence and their efficiency.

Now, if the public service is being injured or harmed in the administration of the Post Office Department under the existing law, the responsibility of it rests with the Postmaster General, who hails from the State of the gentleman [Mr. BLACK] who just preceded me. I will not join him in an indirect criticism of the Post Office Department, because I have every reason to believe that in the city of Washington it is well and faithfully administered. The head of it served many years in this House as an able and faithful member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe we can trust him to exact full and proper service from his subordinates, even if the gentleman from his own State has any doubt on that subject.

If we are going to legislate on this subject why not have a hearing before a committee? No department of the Government has requested this new and additional legislation. The Postmaster General does not request it, and not a single head of any bureau of that department or any other department has appeared before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and urged this new departure. But if we are to legislate here on the subject why not do it in a fair and just way and have it apply to every Government official in and out of Washington City? A statement was made in the discussion of this bill that some of the men outside of Washington who were provided for under its provisions actually work an average of four or five hours a day. So why apply this proposed provision to officials, clerks, and employees in the departments at Washington who have no votes and fail to have it apply to every Government official in the United States? It is true of every department in Washington that the clerks are not only working 7 hours, but their general average month in and month out will be more than 8 hours a day, and in thousands of cases during this period it will average more than 10 or 12 hours a day.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not the time. Some of the clerks are actually working 15 and 16 hours a day right through this war period without any extra compensation; and I say there is no excuse or justification for putting this amendment on the pending bill; certainly not now, when every Government department is doing its best to keep up with the congested public business, and every employee is under orders from his superior to remain at his desk not only 7 hours, 8 hours, 10 hours but in many cases more than 15 hours, and they are doing this willingly in the faithful performance of their duty. There is no excuse for this reflection upon or this injustice to the Government officials, who are faithful and efficient, and are attempting in every possible way to help out the Government in the present emergency which faces the country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND) there were—ayes 19, noes 47.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of limited indemnity for the injury or loss of pieces of domestic registered matter, insured, and collect-on-delivery mail, $670,000.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if this includes the loss on articles carried by parcel post?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman state what proportion of the $670,000 is for injury or loss of insured parcel-post matter?

Mr. MOON. I can not tell the gentleman the proportion. Of course, it is in proportion to the losses on that matter.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Then the committee were obliged to put that item in from guesswork?

Mr. MOON. I will say to the gentleman that in the preparation of a bill like this we have to look to what has occurred heretofore and to the estimate made by the department of what may possibly occur hereafter. It can not be determined exactly in advance.

Mr. MADDEN. The loss is very small.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I want to find out the degree of efficiency which the department is giving to the American people in the transportation of insured parcel-post matter, and how much the Government is losing by loss and injury to parcels.

Mr. MOON. I have no accurate information on the subject. There is really no way to get at it accurately that I know of. At least it has not been furnished to us. The presumption is that there is no loss on parcel-post matter.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Is most of this for losses of registered letters?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Of course, the receipt given by the department for registered letters is different from the receipt for parcel-post matter.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Of course, the department could work this out. I did not know whether they had given you that information or not.

Mr. MADDEN. There is a profit on this item, if that is what the gentleman wants to know.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I wanted to know what the loss was.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no loss; but a profit.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenses in the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints, including tracing for photolithographic reproduction, $20,000; and the Postmaster General may authorize the sale to the public of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints at the cost of printing and 10 per cent thereof added, the proceeds of such sale to be used as a further appropriation for the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints; of this amount $500 may be expended in the purchase of atlases and geographical and technical works.

Mr. ROBBINS. I want to ask my friend if these are maps of rural-mail routes?

Mr. MOON. The gentleman knows what the ordinary postal maps are.

Mr. ROBBINS. The State maps showing the routes?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Prepared from State and county surveys.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$500" and inserting "$1,500." It does not add anything to the total of the appropriation, but the department tells us that these maps and books are needed very badly, and that $500 is not sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 25, strike out "$500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a statement from the First Assistant Postmaster General in reference to clerkships, and also a statement from the department on the question of the delay of mail, and to print some telegrams in connection therewith.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 12, 1917.

Hon. JOHN A. MOON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR JUDGE MOON: At the time I appeared before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in connection with the appropriation bill Representative MADDEN asked me how many second-class post offices had not been granted any portion of the appropriation authorizing the promotion of 15 per cent of the employees from $1,100 to $1,200. I was unable to furnish this information at the time, but find upon examination of our records that 809 offices have been granted such increases and 1,490 have not.

In determining the number of clerks to be advanced the department ascertained first the number of such employees in the second-class offices and advanced 15 per cent of this number. It was found, however, that this 15 per cent did not make sufficient promotions to give one for each second-class office, so they were allotted to the larger second-class offices where the salary of the postmaster was above $2,500. The allotment was made in this manner because it advanced the employees in the larger cities, where the responsibilities of the position are greater and the cost of living is higher. I think the method of making this allotment is generally understood by the postal employees.

Sincerely, yours,
J. C. KOONS,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

—

A number of statements have recently appeared in the press, no doubt inspired by interested persons, that the Postal Service is not efficient at this time, that the mails are not being handled promptly, and that this condition is due to the fault of the Post Office Department. In order to again ascertain the true conditions a telegram was sent yesterday by the First Assistant Postmaster General to each of the 50 largest post offices of the United States. These offices represent one-half of the entire postal business of the country, also the congested and heavy-mail centers, where it is most difficult to perform the service. Because the mails are abnormally heavy, due to the holiday season, and the fact that a blizzard was prevailing in many parts of the country and the conditions most unfavorable for the prompt handling of the mails, the telegrams were sent at this time.

Owing to the adverse criticisms made of the service, it is believed that the public should know the truth. For that reason I will insert in the record a copy of the telegram sent out by the First Assistant and copies of the replies from the postmasters. It will be observed that, notwithstanding the unusual conditions prevailing throughout the country and the heavy mails which are now being handled, the telegrams show that the criticisms are unfounded, unfair, and unjust. The service is efficient and reflects great credit upon the department, the postmasters, and the employees.

—

DECEMBER 13, 1917.

POSTMASTER: Wire whether all mail received at your office is being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly. If not, state fully reasons why.

KOONS.

—

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT,
Washington, D. C.:

Demoralized screen-wagon service (contract service) and delayed trains only factors in delaying mails through this office. Record shows mails handled after receipt with proper promptitude.

DIGNAN, Postmaster.

—

ST. LOUIS, MO., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received speedily distributed without delay and expeditiously dispatched. No delay in delivery of incoming mail on schedule time. We have local situation absolutely under control, although unprecedented weather conditions have badly demoralized train service.

SELPH, Postmaster.

—

ST. PAUL, MINN., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail at this office is being distributed, dispatched, and delivered immediately. No delay is occurring.

RATHS, Postmaster.

—

LOUISVILLE, KY., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT,
Washington, D. C.:

No congestion at this office. Only delay due to irregular train schedules. Weather conditions delay city delivery in residence sections due to 16 inches of snow. Service to and from Camp Taylor gradually reaching normal. Street-car service partially suspended.

SCHMITT, Postmaster.

—

JERSEY CITY, N. J., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All first-class mail dispatched and delivered promptly. Extreme weather conditions caused delay in delivery small portion parcel post and newspapers Monday and Tuesday.

ELY, Postmaster.

—

RICHMOND, VA., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

No congestion. All mails promptly handled, delivered, or dispatched as received.

THORNTON, Postmaster.

PITTSBURGH, PA., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

No delay whatever in distribution of mails for dispatch; incoming mails promptly distributed and connecting with carrier delivery following receipt. Train service apparently demoralized on incoming mails, delays varying from 1 to 12 hours existing; past six days principal eastern trains, due midday regularly, fail to arrive for last carrier delivery. Parcel-post matter distributed for dispatch heavily taxing railroad porter service. Matter brought to attention of the superintendent. Fifteenth division express embargoes create unusual demands on parcel post. Consider this office as maintaining standard of efficiency. Sole delay chargeable to railroad service.

GUFFEY, Postmaster.

NASHVILLE, TENN., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Wire received. All mail cleaned up daily at this office.

SHANNON, Postmaster.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly.

SCHULZ, Postmaster.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

At this time of the month all first-class mail, daily papers, parcel post, quotation circulars, promptly handled. Incoming circulars considerably delayed, due to accumulation at first of month, when it is necessary to utilize the entire force on more important mail. All clerks working overtime; no substitutes eligible; register exhausted and forced to use excessive inexperienced auxiliary help. Train service very irregular.

POSTMASTER.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail, local and transit, received is distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly daily to date.

BROWN, Postmaster.

OMAHA, NEBR., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

By working overtime all mails dispatched and delivered promptly. Office clean of all classes.

FANNING, Postmaster.

NEWARK, N. J., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail is being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly.

SINNOTT, Postmaster.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT,
Washington:

All incoming and outgoing mail promptly dispatched and delivered, except circulars and unimportant mail on heavy days left for delivery following day. Deliveries rural route 5 not completed on five days past, due to heavy snow, machine trouble, failure of patrons to place names on boxes, and new carrier.

KINNEAR, Postmaster.

HARTFORD, CONN, December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT,
Washington:

All mail received at this office is being promptly distributed, discharged, and delivered.

WILSON, Postmaster.

WORCESTER, MASS., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received is distributed and delivered promptly. All mail dispatched promptly.

CHASE, Acting Postmaster.

BOSTON, MASS., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Mail is being dispatched and delivered promptly. Three heaviest mail trains were average four hours late this morning; mail missed first two deliveries.

MURRAY, Postmaster.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Mail received rather irregular; result storm. Distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly.

KESEL, Postmaster.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Answering your wire, this office cleaned up, distributed, and dispatched for two or three days after 12-inch snowfall. On the 8th it was impossible to deliver specials by motorcycles. Street car service was seriously crippled, as well as mail messenger auto service (contract); trains then running as much as 24 hours late; in some instances to-day incoming trains from 2 to 12 hours late. Some morning trains not yet in at 4 p. m. Locally, however, we are taking care of situation.

CLORE, Postmaster.

PORTLAND, OREG., December 13, 1917.

Hon. JOHN C. KOONS,
First Assistant Postmaster General:

All mail received at this office is being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly. Business heavy, but ample provision has been made to care for the maximum.

MEYERS, Postmaster.

TOLEDO, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received at this office being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly as human energy will allow. No delay, except that caused by heavy storm for past few days. All mail arriving late. Dispatches leaving depot since last Saturday.

PARISH, Postmaster.

NEW YORK, N. Y., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram. Since 10th instant distribution, dispatch, and delivery mail delayed, due to failure contractor 407012 to furnish adequate screen-wagon service. Situation corrected by use of extra outside wagons. Mail now being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly.

PATTON, Postmaster.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., December 13, 1917.

KOONS,
Post Office Department, Washington, D. C.:

All mail received at this office distributed and dispatched promptly daily.

POSTMASTER.

DES MOINES, IOWA, December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All trains four to eight hours late; zero weather. All mail delivered and dispatched promptly on receipt. Small quantity Camp Dodge mail on December 10 missent through error.

HUFFMAN, Postmaster.

KANSAS CITY, MO., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Local schedules normal. Numerous delays account interrupted train service due to severe weather.

STEELE, Postmaster.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL:

Everything up to date in every respect, with exception terminal circulars, 75 per cent of which are handled within 12 hours. R. P. O. separations delayed from time of receipt about 15 hours.

CHANCE, Postmaster.

AKRON, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received at this office with the aid of auxiliary, and some overtime is being distributed, delivered, and dispatched promptly, except one rural route, on account of snowstorm, and some dispatches missed by unreliable screen-wagon services. Contract.

READ, Postmaster.

MEMPHIS, TENN., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mails received are being distributed and delivered promptly. Outgoing mails distributed and dispatched promptly. Mail delayed daily, incoming and outgoing, because railroads are not handling same promptly at depots and on trains.

METCALF, Postmaster.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington:

No congestion; no delay to mail. Have made all preparations and am in position to handle heavy holiday mail without congestion.

FAY, Postmaster.

SEATTLE, WASH., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington:

All mail received at this office being distributed and dispatched promptly at present time.

BATTLE, Postmaster.

CHICAGO, ILL., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington:

Your wire of the 13th, larger force employed this year and slightly more overtime by reason of war conditions, but all mail distributed, dispatched, and delivered with usual promptness. Train connections made regularly during heavy snowstorm past 24 hours. Further conscriptions would cripple service, but indications point to elimination of that danger through new classification and compliance with suggestions contained in your wire of the 9th.

CARLILE, Postmaster.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington:

All first, second, and fourth class mail is being distributed, dispatched, or delivered promptly; 24-hour delay on part of terminal circular mail.

SPRINGSTEEN, Postmaster.

—

DAYTON, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

JOHN C. KOONS,
First Assistant Postmaster General, Washington:

Absolutely no serious delays in outgoing mails at this office in past six months, except for delayed trains. Mail for city delivery is being promptly distributed and delivered since November 1; some delays between October 8 and above date owing to change of all city routes in reorganization plan; parcel-post delivery and collection service not up to standard owing to faulty auto service (contract) 9.

MAY, Postmaster.

—

DETROIT, MICH., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Division of Post Office Service, Washington:

Answering your telegram of to-day, all mail received is being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly.

POSTMASTER.

—

BROOKLYN, N. Y., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail at this office is being distributed and dispatched to terminals promptly. Dispatches to and from carrier stations were badly delayed at a few points yesterday and generally delayed to-day on account of bad condition of equipment of local transportation contractor. Two Government-owned White machines were placed in this service at 3 p. m. to-day and eight Government-owned White machines will be available for this service, if necessary, to-morrow morning, and all schedules will be fully maintained to-morrow. Contractor assures me that his equipments will be in serviceable condition to-morrow.

BURTON, Postmaster.

—

SCRANTON, PA., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Wire received. All mail being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly to date.

DURKIN, Postmaster.

—

BALTIMORE, MD., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

My mail running very heavy, especially parcel post, all being distributed, delivered, and dispatched promptly except ordinary parcel-post and paper mail for Georgia and Florida, which, according to instructions of R. M. S., we begin to withhold 36 hours prior to departure of Merchants & Miners' steamers.

SWANN, Postmaster.

—

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Your wire 13th. All mail distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly on receipt at this office.

THORNTON, Postmaster.

—

BUFFALO, N. Y., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received distributed, dispatched, and delivered daily. No delay here.

MEYER, Postmaster.

—

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., December 13, 1917.

KOONS, First Assistant Postmaster General,
Washington, D. C.:

Mails all promptly handled except some incoming circulars; working overtime to accomplish it; trains running late.

COSTELL, Postmaster.

—

PROVIDENCE, R. I., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received at this office is being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly.

CARROLL, Postmaster.

—

HOUSTON, TEX., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received is distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly.

HOUSE, Postmaster.

—

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., December 13, 1917.

KOONS, First Assistant Postmaster General,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received here being promptly distributed, dispatched, and delivered; some delays have been caused by late trains.

HOGADONE, Postmaster.

—

DENVER, COLO., December 13, 1917.

KOONS, First Assistant Postmaster General,
Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram 13th. This office in excellent condition. Christmas rush not on us yet. Not a piece of mail of any character failing of dispatch. All trains delayed on account of storms. All incoming mail promptly distributed and delivered on first trip of carriers. We are prepared to and will handle all holiday mail in the same manner.

STAPLETON, Postmaster.

—

ALBANY, N. Y., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received at this office is distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly.

MURRAY, Postmaster.

—

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., December 13, 1917.

KOONS, First Assistant,
Washington:

All mail at this office distributed, dispatched, and delivered without any delay.

PURDY, Postmaster.

—

ATLANTA, GA., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail received at this office for dispatch or delivery handled promptly and satisfactorily; no complaint.

JONES, Postmaster.

—

NEW ORLEANS, LA., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

All mail at this office being distributed, dispatched, and delivered promptly; no delay or congestion in any department, and there will be none; absolutely normal conditions prevail and will be maintained.

JANVIER, Postmaster.

—

NEW HAVEN, CONN., December 13, 1917.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington:

Late trains and transfers occasionally cause delays. Resignations, draft, and substitutes employed in munition factories cause some difficulty, but all mail received here distributed and delivered promptly.

TROUP, Postmaster.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of rural carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, tolls, and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof, $53,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for the compensation of clerks in charge of rural stations.

Mr. WATKINS. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATKINS: Page 23, line 9, after the word "thereof," strike out "$53,000,000" and insert "$66,250,000."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, in discussing the proposition of increasing the pay of rural free-delivery carriers when the bill was under general debate the statement was made on the floor that a special subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was investigating the question so as to determine as to what would be a reasonable amount to add to the compensation of the rural free-delivery carriers as well as post-office clerks. The gentleman from Indiana, in discussing that question, intimated very strongly that in all probability if any increase was allowed it would not be more than 15 per cent. This amendment calls for an increase of 25 per cent. I have carefully estimated the expenses of the rural free-delivery carriers, and I am satisfied that no increase of less than 25 per cent will be adequate. I have made a compilation of figures showing not only the living expenses of the rural free-delivery carriers, but also their expenses incident to the maintenance and upkeep of their vehicles—whether motor propelled or horse drawn—and the expense of maintaining the animals when they have to use horse-drawn vehicles. These figures show that foodstuffs have increased from 50 to 200 per cent in three years; gasoline, 100 per cent; provisions, as follows:

		1914	1917
Bacon	per pound	$0.20	$0.45
Ham	do	.18	.35
Lard	do	.08	.23
Macaroni	do	.07	.12
Cheese	do	.18	.35
Butter	do	.25	.50
Flour	do	.04	.07
Sugar	do	.05	.10
Onions	do	.03	.06
Rice	do	.07	.10
Grits	do	.03	.05
Black-eyed peas	do	.07	.12
Codfish	do	.15	.24
Bread	do	.05	.10
Beef (fresh)	do	.17	.35
Pork (fresh)	do	.20	.40
Irish potatoes	per peck	.22	.50
Sweet potatoes	do	.20	.45
Eggs	per dozen	.25	.45
Tomatoes	per can	.08	.12
Sirup	per gallon	.65	.90

Laborers' wages have increased 100 per cent. The price of cotton and other agricultural products having increased in like proportion, there is a great inducement for rural free delivery carriers to engage in other vocations.

This same statement applies in reference to letter carriers, as well as to rural free delivery carriers, except as to stock, feed, and gasoline.

I regard an increase of 25 per cent for rural free-delivery carriers as most reasonable and just, and insist that the amendment do pass.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I presume that my friend from Louisiana is not serious in offering this amendment. His amendment increases the appropriation $16,000,000. That is a question that ought to be and will be considered very carefully by the committee and a report made before passed on by the House. His proposition does not go to the extent of increasing the salaries or furnishing pay for equipment to rural carriers, but just adds $16,000,000 to the general appropriation, which can not possibly be used if the amendment was passed under the present law without an increase of the salaries and allowances for equipment. It seems to me that it is entirely useless to increase the gross sum of appropriations when there is no law to authorize its application anywhere. It would be an idle thing on the part of the House, and I presume the gentleman only offered it for the purpose of submitting some remarks and not with the idea that it would be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, $600,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 13, after the numerals "$600,000," insert: "No part of this money shall be used in any town, place, or village until a majority of the patrons of the post office in such town, place, or village shall request village delivery, and upon the failure to so request the Post Office Department shall not exact from said patrons of such office any box rentals in excess of 10 per cent of original cost of construction of such box: Provided, however, That a minimum charge of 20 cents per annum may be made.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to discuss the point of order, but simply call the attention of the department through the committee to this fact: That if the idea proposed in this amendment is carried out you will eventually save many million dollars to this Government. There are in this country to-day ten to twenty thousand villages that are entitled to village delivery. I have no objection to their having it if they want it and this Government wants to spend the money for it. But I do say that if we can satisfy the people of small towns in any other method we ought to do it, and by so doing we will save the Government a great many million dollars, because eventually the village delivery will cost the Government from twenty to thirty million dollars. If one town is going to have it, the other town is bound to have it unless the citizens are satisfied in some other manner. My experience in these towns is that they do not care for village delivery in most instances. A great many prefer to go to the post office and receive the mail, but they do object to being taxed an exorbitant price for the box. In a town of a thousand or two thousand inhabitants they are taxed $500 or $1,000 for the privilege of going to the post office and getting their mail. The farmer gets his mail free, the man in the city gets his mail free, while the citizen living in a village has to pay from $1 to $4 per year for the privilege of walking to the post office and carrying his mail back home. The man in the village ought to have the right to go to the post office, have a box, and not pay over 10 per cent of the cost of the box to the Government. If you will adopt this plan, you will save to the Government ten or twenty million dollars. This great Post Office Committee should thoroughly investigate this matter, and if the proposition is as I state, see that it is corrected before it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is subject to a point of order and therefore the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise; that the Chairman be directed to report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments adopted in the committee be agreed to; and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee rose; and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FERRIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7237, the Post Office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with directions to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendment as a separate paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BORLAND moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with directions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment as a separate paragraph:

"No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal services in any department, bureau, or office in the District of Columbia, which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 15, 1898, requires eight hours of labor each day."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND) there were 20 ayes and 36 noes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, the Clerk will call the roll, and those who are in favor of a motion to recommit will answer yea and those opposed will answer nay.

The Clerk called the roll, and there were—yeas 82, nays 250, answered "present" 1, not voting 100, as follows:

YEAS—82.

Anthony	Foster	Lobeck	Sherley
Barkley	Garrett, Tex.	McClintic	Shouse
Barnhart	Gillett	McKeown	Sisson
Black	Glass	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sloan
Booher	Godwin, N. C.	Mapes	Snook
Borland	Gordon	Miller, Wash.	Stafford
Caraway	Green, Iowa	Moore, Pa.	Steagall
Connally, Tex.	Greene, Vt.	Moores, Ind.	Steele
Connelly, Kans.	Gregg	Norton	Stephens, Miss.
Cox	Hardy	Oldfield	Sterling, Ill.
Cramton	Harrison, Va.	Platt	Strong
Darrow	Hastings	Quin	Sumners
Davidson	Haugen	Rainey	Taylor, Ark.
Dewalt	Hensley	Reed	Tillman
Dies	Jacoway	Robbins	Venable
Doolittle	James	Romjue	Walker
Doughton	Kehoe	Rouse	Walsh
Edmonds	Kincheloe	Rucker	Wilson, Tex.
Fairfield	La Follette	Sears	Winslow
Fitzgerald	Langley	Sells
Flood	Lever	Shallenberger

NAYS—250.

Adamson	Chandler, N. Y.	Dyer	Gray, Ala.
Alexander	Church	Eagan	Gray, N. J.
Almon	Clark, Fla.	Elliott	Greene, Mass.
Ashbrook	Clark, Pa.	Elston	Griest
Aswell	Classon	Emerson	Hadley
Austin	Claypool	Esch	Hamill
Ayres	Coady	Evans	Hamilton, Mich.
Bankhead	Collier	Fairchild, B. L.	Hamlin
Beakes	Cooper, Ohio	Ferris	Harrison, Miss.
Bell	Cooper, W. Va.	Fess	Hawley
Blackmon	Cooper, Wis.	Fisher	Hayden
Bland	Copley	Focht	Heaton
Brand	Crisp	Fordney	Heflin
Britten	Crosser	Foss	Hersey
Brodbeck	Currie, Mich.	Francis	Hicks
Browning	Dallinger	Frear	Holland
Brumbaugh	Davis	Freeman	Hollingsworth
Burnett	Decker	French	Hood
Burroughs	Dempsey	Fuller, Ill.	Houston
Butler	Denison	Gallagher	Huddleston
Byrnes, S. C.	Dent	Gandy	Hulbert
Byrns, Tenn.	Denton	Gard	Hull, Iowa
Caldwell	Dickinson	Garland	Hull, Tenn.
Campbell, Kans.	Dill	Garner	Humphreys
Campbell, Pa.	Dillon	Garrett, Tenn.	Igoe
Candler, Miss.	Dixon	Glynn	Ireland
Cannon	Dominick	Good	Johnson, S. Dak.
Carew	Dowell	Goodall	Jones, Tex.
Carlin	Drane	Goodwin, Ark.	Juul
Carter, Mass.	Dunn	Graham, Ill.	Kearns
Carter, Okla.	Dupré	Graham, Pa.	Keating

Kelly, Pa.	Maher	Rodenberg	Timberlake
Kennedy, Iowa	Mansfield	Rose	Towner
Kennedy, R. I.	Martin	Rubey	Treadway
Kettner	Mays	Russell	Van Dyke
Key, Ohio	Merritt	Sabath	Vestal
Kiess, Pa.	Mondell	Sanders, Ind.	Vinson
Kinkaid	Moon	Sanders, La.	Voigt
Kitchin	Morgan	Sanders, N. Y.	Volstead
Knutson	Morin	Sanford	Waldow
Kraus	Mudd	Scott, Iowa	Walton
Larsen	Nicholls, S. C.	Scott, Mich.	Ward
Lea, Cal.	Nichols, Mich.	Shackleford	Wason
Lee, Ga.	Oliver, Ala.	Sherwood	Watkins
Lehlbach	Oliver, N. Y.	Siegel	Watson, Pa.
Lenroot	Osborne	Sims	Watson, Va.
Lesher	Overstreet	Sinnott	Weaver
Little	Padgett	Slayden	Welling
Littlepage	Park	Slemp	Welty
London	Parker, N. Y.	Small	Whaley
Lonergan	Peters	Smith, Idaho	Wheeler
Longworth	Phelan	Smith, Mich.	White, Me.
Lufkin	Polk	Snell	White, Ohio
Lundeen	Pratt	Stedman	Wilson, Ill.
Lunn	Purnell	Steenerson	Wilson, La.
McAndrews	Raker	Sterling, Pa.	Wingo
McArthur	Ramsey	Stiness	Wise
McCulloch	Ramseyer	Sweet	Wood, Ind.
McFadden	Randall	Switzer	Woods, Iowa
McKenzie	Rankin	Talbott	Woodyard
McLaughlin, Pa.	Reavis	Temple	Zihlman
Madden	Riordan	Thompson
Magee	Robinson	Tilson

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Schall

NOT VOTING—100.

Anderson	Fairchild, G. W.	LaGuardia	Rayburn
Bacharach	Farr	Lazaro	Roberts
Baer	Fields	Linthicum	Rogers
Bathrick	Flynn	McCormick	Rowe
Beshlin	Fuller, Mass.	McKinley	Rowland
Blanton	Gallivan	McLemore	Saunders, Va.
Bowers	Gould	Mann	Scott, Pa.
Browne	Griffin	Mason	Scully
Bruckner	Hamilton, N. Y.	Meeker	Smith, C. B.
Buchanan	Haskell	Miller, Minn.	Smith, T. F.
Cantrill	Hayes	Montague	Snyder
Capstick	Heintz	Mott	Stephens, Nebr.
Cary	Helm	Neely	Stevenson
Chandler, Okla.	Helvering	Nelson	Sullivan
Costello	Hilliard	Nolan	Swift
Crago	Howard	Olney	Tague
Curry, Cal.	Husted	O'Shaunessy	Taylor, Colo.
Dale, N. Y.	Hutchinson	Overmyer	Templeton
Dale, Vt.	Johnson, Ky.	Paige	Thomas
Dooling	Johnson, Wash.	Parker, N. J.	Tinkham
Doremus	Jones, Va.	Porter	Vare
Drukker	Kahn	Pou	Webb
Eagle	Kelley, Mich.	Powers	Williams
Ellsworth	King	Price	Young, N. Dak.
Estopinal	Kreider	Ragsdale	Young, Tex.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. WEBB with Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota.
Mr. THOMAS with Mr. WILLIAMS.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. VARE.
Mr. RAYBURN with Mr. MOTT.
Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia with Mr. NOLAN.
Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. PAIGE.
Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. PORTER.
Mr. SULLIVAN with Mr. ROGERS.
Mr. BESHLIN with Mr. ROBERTS.
Mr. DOOLING with Mr. ROWE.
Mr. EAGLE with Mr. ROWLAND.
Mr. GRIFFIN with Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania.
Mr. HOWARD with Mr. SWIFT.
Mr. LAZARO with Mr. TEMPLETON.
Mr. HELVERING with Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts.
Mr. BRUCKNER with Mr. DALE of Vermont.
Mr. JONES of Virginia with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. OLNEY with Mr. BOWERS.
Mr. MCLEMORE with Mr. DRUKKER.
Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. BROWNE.
Mr. BUCHANAN with Mr. CORY.
Mr. HELM with Mr. CRAGO.
Mr. POU with Mr. KAHN.
Mr. OVERMYER with Mr. MEEKER.
Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. HUTCHINSON.
Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. GOULD.
Mr. FIELDS with Mr. COSTELLO.
Mr. FLYNN with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.
Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. KING.
Mr. MONTAGUE with Mr. MANN.
Mr. HILLIARD with Mr. MASON.
Mr. PRICE with Mr. BACHARACH.
Mr. SCULLY with Mr. HEINTZ.
Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. TINKHAM.
Mr. DALE of New York with Mr. LAGUARDIA.
Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.
Mr. BATHRICK with Mr. CAPSTICK.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. HUSTED.
Mr. YOUNG of Texas with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.
Mr. NEELY with Mr. CURRY of California.
Mr. BLANTON with Mr. HAYES.
Mr. TAGUE with Mr. HASKELL.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7572, the urgent deficiency bill, and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7572, and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be controlled one half by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The motion is on going into the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7572, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. MOON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7572, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7572) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from New York if he will kindly yield to me now, as I should prefer to precede him if he is willing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this is the last bill which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will report to this House as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I think it is proper that we should take notice in the House of the departure of so distinguished a colleague. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask him to read the following letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOHNS HOPKINS HOSPITAL, December 13, 1917.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GILLETT: I wish very much that it were practicable for me to leave Johns Hopkins Hospital long enough to come over to the House and say a word about the loss to the country through the resignation of Mr. FITZGERALD. I regard FITZGERALD as one of the ablest men who has ever sat in Congress.

[Applause.]

Intelligence is the usual thing in Congress. Good nature is very common with the Members. The desire for economy is not unusual, but independent courage and determined bravery are at least not two common attributes of politicians or statesmen. FITZGERALD possesses all of the qualities that I have referred to. I shall regret greatly his leaving the House and am truly sorry that my temporary indisposition will not allow me to make a public statement to that effect in the House before he retires.

Yours, very sincerely, JAMES R. MANN.

[Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that all on this side of the House indorse very heartily these cordial sentiments expressed by our leader, and we regret exceedingly the loss of our colleague from New York. He has attained such an eminence in this House that every man for some time will really miss him, and that is more than can be said of many Members. He has won his eminence not by any primrose path of dalliance. He has fought his way to his distinction. He has given and received blows from foes and friends alike without sparing himself or sparing others, always aiming at a definite goal, and any man with such fixity of purpose and with his ability behind it is sure to achieve success. I remember very well when he came here, and how our attention was soon attracted by the very young man who persisted in putting such searching and often embarrassing questions to members of the appropriating committees. He showed such knowledge of the subjects he discussed, such assurance of his parliamentary rights, and such determination to assert and defend them that before long he convinced the leaders that it was much better to have him inside the Committee on Appropriations defending than outside attacking. [Laughter and applause.] So he literally fought his way by his own sheer ability onto that important committee. I have served with him as chairman of subcommittees of which he was a member and as member of subcommittees of which he was chairman. We have often differed strenuously, but I have never had occasion even to suspect any unworthy motive on his part. [Applause.]

As chairman of the committee he has upheld the traditional policy of that office. He always had an instinctive hostility, or at least antagonism, to the executive representatives who came before us for appropriations. He has felt that he was the guardian of the public purse, that anybody who wanted money from the committee must show cause, must prove by reliable evidence that he was entitled to the appropriation. That has always been characteristic, as far as my experience dates, of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and I think it is his proper attitude as representing the privileges and duties of the House. I recall many instances of new officials coming before the committee with the apparent expectation that they had only to state their needs in order to have them granted, and their discomfiture was ludicrous when they found out that their request counted for little or nothing, but that they must show the fundamental reasons for their requests and that not upon their opinions, but upon the facts on which that opinion was based.

Mr. FITZGERALD was peculiarly well equipped for the chairmanship by his strong, penetrating intellect, his unflagging pertinacious industry, and his remarkable power of grasping and retaining enormous details, and, as you know, in this House he made himself powerful and formidable by his pungent speech, his dauntless courage, his unquestioned sincerity, and his resourceful ingenuity. The same qualities which have won his eminence here and in the committee insure prominence in the profession to which he is now returning, and I know that we all with full hearts wish him that ample success and happiness to which his talents and character entitle him. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, 10 years ago I became a member of the Committee on Appropriations and it was my good fortune to be assigned to two subcommittees upon which were then my friend and colleague, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

From that time to this we have been associated together not only in full committee but in the subcommittee work that comes as a result of the various divisions of the work of that committee. And therefore, perhaps more than almost any man in the House, it has been my good fortune to be in constant and intimate association with him. Certainly no man in the House is as conscious as I am of the loss that the House will suffer when he retires from it, because none have been in a position to so fully realize the work that he has done and the work that he is laying down. No exaggeration is possible of the great debt that the country owes to him.

Popularity is gained in many ways in the House and in the country, but the esteem and respect of the House is only gained in one way, and that is by loyalty and devotion to duty and the industry and courage that justifies faith on the part of one's colleagues. And I know of no better thing that a man can carry away from this place of harsh conflicts, of extreme rivalries, of ambitions that conflict, a place which has sometimes been described as a "bear pit," than not simply the liking of your colleagues but the respect and admiration of them. [Applause.] No man who ever knew JOHN FITZGERALD but what has always accorded to him all those attributes that go to make real statesmanship. I have seen him under peculiar trials not only in committee but in party relationships. There have been times in his career when his viewpoint did not coincide with that of a majority of his party colleagues. Nothing is more difficult than differing with your party associates. Nothing so tests the fiber and the fine courage of men as that. I have seen him meet that test, knowing that in taking the position he did he was sacrificing some friendships and that he was doing the then unpopular thing. But I knew then, and his colleagues all know now, that whenever he took that position it was not with the desire to differ but because of a compelling sense of duty and obligation. And he always justified from his viewpoint that position by the reasons that he advanced and the motives which prompted him in it.

He is not only leaving behind him a reputation as a very great chairman of one of the most difficult committees in Congress, but he goes out of Congress with perhaps a more intimate knowledge of the Government of the United States and a more technical knowledge of the rules that control this body than any man now in public life. He is not only a parliamentarian who knows the rules but he is one of those more rare people who knows the reason for the rules. And in this day of misjudgment of rules, of criticism by the thoughtless, the unthinking, it is worth while to have in Congress a man who can justify the procedure here because of a knowledge of the reason for that procedure.

And so we lose not only a man whom we all admire and many love but we lose one who has been to the country of distinct service, who has justified and ennobled service in the Congress of the United States. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could most eloquently say what I desire to say, and then sit down, by indorsing the letter of Representative MANN and the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. I most heartily indorse all that has been said, and better said, I presume, than I could say it, and yet I will add a little thereto.

The Committee on Appropriations was formed 65 years ago. Prior to that time the Committee on Ways and Means not only reported the bills to raise the revenue but also reported the bills to put the money on the wheel—to appropriate the revenue. The first chairman of that committee was Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania. His service was for about three years. My recollection is that he died during his service as chairman in 1869. Many distinguished, many great men have served as chairmen of that committee. I have the names here. They are Thaddeus Stevens; Elihu B. Washburne, of Illinois, whose term was short; Henry L. Dawes, of Massachusetts; James A. Garfield, of Ohio; Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania; J. D. C. Atkins, of Tennessee; Frank Hiscock, of New York; and then myself, of Illinois [applause]; William S. Holman, of Indiana; Joseph D. Sayers, of Texas [applause]; James A. Hemenway, of Indiana; James A. Tawney, of Minnesota; and JOHN J. FITZGERALD, of New York. [Applause.]

Since the creation of that committee in 1865 up to the present time many things have happened. The population of the country has increased by threefold. The Union Pacific and the Central Pacific were the first railways across the desert, tunneling the mountains to reach the Golden Gate; but since then they have been followed by I know not how many, but I think I can say from 10 to 15 transcontinental railroads have been constructed since that time. The population, as I have already said, has increased by threefold plus.

There have been stormy periods in this House and the country since that time. Partisanship, earnest, at times ferocious, and necessarily so. This is a Government under the Constitution, the fixed law, by the will of the majority, as manifested at the ballot box from time to time. Some things have been done by the party of which I am a member and some by the party that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is a member in that time, but, so far as I am concerned, would have been left undone if I had had my way about it. And sometimes, perhaps, I would have preferred to dwell in a recollection a different result.

I do not know how many men have served in the House of Representatives since I became a Member, but several thousand. My honored friend here, Gen. SHERWOOD, and I entered Congress together. [Applause.]

I believe we two, with Mr. Hazelton, of Wisconsin, are the surviving Members. I am not speaking of myself, but these men who have been chairmen of this committee, whose names I have read, have nearly all crossed over. Nearly all of them were giants intellectually, and they were partisans. I have no defense to make or excuse to make for partisans. Great Heavens! If we all belonged to one party and were wishy-washy; if we were cowardly and all belonged to one party, God help the poor devil, you know, if there happened to be one anywhere in the country, that disagreed with us. [Applause.]

Some time, perhaps, before I die, I may have a little more time to speak of the rules of the House of Representatives, of the mistakes that we have made from time to time, and of the consequences of those mistakes. Something in the not distant future will have to be changed, whichever party may be in power, touching our procedure. With the bill pending, however, it is not the proper time and it is not expected of me to enter upon that matter. Of those great men that I have spoken of who have crossed over—and nearly all of them have crossed to the other side, although Mr. Tawney and Mr. Hemenway and Mr. Sayers are still living—there were men who had more notoriety than the gentleman from New York who is about to retire to private life. I have known them all since 1873, and have served with them all, from the practical as well as from the intellectual standpoint. While some of them have held great positions—Mr. Garfield became President—and made great reputations. I want to say, and I say it without reservation, that the gentleman from New York who is about to retire as chairman of that committee has been equal in his service and in his ability to guard the Public Treasury, not ignorantly but wisely; he has been equal to any of them. [Applause.]

Think of it! Since war was declared in April last the committee over which he has presided, and of which I am a member, has been almost constantly in session through the day and frequently at night, and has recommended appropriations and authorized contracts for appropriations in round number aggregating $20,000,000,000. The hearings thereon, in tolerably fine print, stacked up, I presume would just about be covered by my two hands, held 2 feet apart; and I want to say that in my judgment there has been nothing appropriated or authorized to be met by contracts under future appropriations that did not meet his approval and that of his committee, including myself. By means of the investigations incident to the preparation of those bills I think I am within the bounds of truth when I say there were $2,000,000,000 left unappropriated or unauthorized, without any harm to the public service.

I exceedingly regret the departure of the gentleman from New York. I wish there were some way—there is none, however; but I have frequently wished it, and I wish it now more than I ever did—by which adequate compensation could be made for him for the support and maintenance of his wife and the care of his children pending his service in the House of Representatives. I met the children once when they were younger; the children were little bits of lads and lasses from 3 feet high down. [Laughter.] He leaves Congress, he tells us, in justice to his family. I wish it were possible that at least during this great emergency, during this great war to which we are committed—committed by the appropriation of treasure, committed by proper legislation, committed for service across the sea—that it had been possible for him to have remained as a Member of this House and as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, when I first saw the announcement that the gentleman from New York had decided to resign as a Member of the House, I said that the House and the country could better afford to lose any other Member than JOHN J. FITZGERALD. [Applause.] In this crisis of our country the House and the Nation need his counsel, his wisdom, his judgment, his integrity, his courage.

In all these virtues no man in this body is his superior. We have many able and wise and diligent Representatives here, men who faithfully represent and serve their constituents; but to how many of us could the term statesman properly apply?

FITZGERALD comes as near measuring up from every view to the standard of statesmanship as any man in this Capitol. [Applause.] As a Member of the House he has given the country—the entire country—19 years of faithful, honorable, and effective service. His record stands to justify our high estimate of him. We know him. We associate with him daily. We esteem and admire him, and more, we love him. He has our respect and our confidence. As a man, we know FITZGERALD to be brave and loyal and truthful. He has never turned his back upon friend or foe.

I sometimes fear that too many of our colleagues set up as the true measure of service here the amount of money which they can filch out of the Treasury into their districts and States for creeks or rivers or public buildings or the like. FITZGERALD'S idea—and effort—has been to keep the money in the Treasury and not take it out except for the country's needs. I have known him to oppose appropriations that he knew would endanger his popularity at home.

With respect to every question or measure he asked not "Will it pay? Will it help me?" but only "Is it right? Will it help my Government and the country?"

There have been many eminent men chairmen of the Committee on Appropriations in the last half century. Their names have been recalled in your presence by the distinguished ex-Speaker, Mr. CANNON. In my judgment, the three who loom out preeminently for their distinguished services as chairmen of that great committee are Holman, CANNON, and FITZGERALD. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I but reflect that which is in the heart of the entire membership of the House in expressing profound regret that our beloved comrade in service here feels it his duty to separate from us, and in extending to him the best wishes for a long life and for an abundance of success and happiness. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, when I came to Congress my first assignment was to the Committee on Appropriations, and in my capacity as a member of that committee I had the privilege of serving on a subcommittee with the distinguished gentleman from New York.

During that service I learned to realize his incorruptibility, his interest in the public welfare, his disinterested devotion to duty. During all of my service and intimate relationship with him in committee work I never knew him to cast a vote upon any question with any idea in mind as to how it would affect him politically. His interest was the public interest. His devotion to the public service is equal to that of any man I have ever known in public life. He has ability, which has been displayed upon the floor of this House on many occasions, courage beyond that of most men, singleness of purpose that no one can question. He has earned the right to the confidence of the American people. He has earned the gratitude of the Government, if there be such a thing as gratitude in the Government. He lives a clean life; his character has been above reproach; he stands among the great public servants in America [applause], and I know of no title that can be conferred upon any American greater than that of a worthy public servant. [Applause.]

It is unfortunate that the Government has not the power, or if it has the power, not the desire, to retain a man of his ability in public office. If he were employed by a private corporation and had performed the service for that corporation which he has performed for the Government of the United States, he would not be permitted to leave the service, no matter at what price; they would retain him. You could not employ the services of a man like JOHN FITZGERALD for $50,000 a year. The service he has rendered to the Government is above price. I regret to see him leave this body, for he has displayed an unselfish devotion to public duty and an ability that justifies not only the confidence of his associates but the gratitude of the American people. And now that he finds himself forced to leave public life in order that he may provide for his growing family when he shall have passed away he takes with him from this body the confidence, the respect, and the love and devotion of every Member of the House. I shall always remember my association with him as one of the pleasantest parts of my official life, and I wish him Godspeed in the business upon which he is about to enter and unbounded success wherever he may go and in whatever he may engage. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I confess that this is a very painful occasion to me. I was not very much surprised when I heard that Mr. FITZGERALD was going to resign, but I was very much grieved. I do not know whether you have all observed it or not, but in the popular estimation the four great committees in this House are Ways and Means, Judiciary, Appropriations, and Foreign Affairs. Actually the Members of the House know that in addition to these two the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the Post Office Committee are forcing themselves into that same class. These are the six committees that are always the greatest of our legislative committees. Occasionally some other committee becomes exceedingly prominent. It is a strange thing that during the seven years I have been Speaker of this House we have lost the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and now we are about to lose the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. We have also lost the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, always an important committee, and during these troublous days one of the most important.

Gen. James A. Garfield once said that there was no place on earth where a man could reach his proper level more quickly than in the House of Representatives. The position that Mr. FITZGERALD has occupied for several years, being recognized as one of the very strongest men in this House, is an illustration of Garfield's proposition. In my time here several men have become authorities in this House on some one subject. Mr. FITZGERALD enjoys the peculiar distinction of having become an authority on two very difficult subjects, one of them finance and the other parliamentary law. Men do not achieve places of this kind unless they have brains in their heads, courage in their hearts, and a great deal of industry.

There is a fable extant in this land that if the executive departments did not hold Congress in check we would appropriate everything there is betwixt the two oceans. [Laughter.] Exactly the reverse of that is true. [Applause.] The chairmen of the Appropriations Committee, the great ex-chairman and ex-

Speaker [Mr. CANNON], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and those who have come in betwixt and between as chairmen of the Appropriations Committee, have waged a constant warfare with the executive departments of this Government to hold the appropriations within bounds. [Applause.] Generally, they have held the appropriations below the estimates of the executive departments. The newspapers of the country could not do a better thing than to reverse the tale they have been telling, and tell the exact truth as to appropriations. [Applause.] A good many of you men have come in here in recent years. The heads of departments got so in the habit of exceeding the appropriations that Mr. FITZGERALD and the rest of the men on the Appropriations Committee, after warning them four or five times, finally put a clause into an appropriation bill making it a criminal offense for them to exceed the appropriations. I do not know that that has been referred to in any of these newspapers' excoriations of Congress. I will refer to it if nobody else does, and I have as good a right to speak for this House as any man living. [Applause.]

When FITZGERALD first came here he was the youngest man in the House, and by assiduous industry and close attention to business, I have seen him go up year by year. I like to see these Members go up. It is one of the strangest things in the world to sit up here in the Speaker's stand, where you can see everybody in the House, and see men going up and men going down—ebbing and flowing. It is not always a steady march in one direction.

The resignation of Mr. FITZGERALD ought to be exploited all over this land as an illustration of one thing: Here he is, in the very prime of his splendid powers and flower of his years, going out of a body which he likes to serve in, one that he is especially adapted to serve in, giving up one of the greatest positions in the House, because he is so poor financially that he deems it his duty to his wife and children to give it up to make money enough for their proper uses, notwithstanding the fact that not only millions but billions of dollars have passed through his fingers during his service in this House, not one penny of which stuck to his palms. [Applause.] After a conspicuous career he departs from our midst poorer than when he came.

I read a newspaper squib the other day—I do not know whether it was about ADAMSON or FITZGERALD; it was about one of them—which said that one Congressman had resigned, and that it was that much clear gain. Now, it is not clear gain for a seasoned Representative of approved ability to resign. It is a clear loss to the United States Government and to the American people. [Applause.] A man does not become a leading Congressman except by immense toil and great ability, and every Congressman who comes here, I do not care where he comes from or what he is, has to learn to be a Congressman, and the reputation that a man has outside of this House does him precious little good when he gets into this House. He must learn to be a Congressman just like a man learns to be a carpenter, a blacksmith, or anything of that sort. It is a great pity that the circumstances of the case force men like these chairmen I have named to quit their great offices and retire from public life when they have just learned how to be of most service.

It is very lucky for Mr. FITZGERALD that he was put on the Committee on Appropriations. I asked Gov. Dingley once about service on committees, and he said that the ideal service would be to serve a while on Appropriations and learn to master details, then serve on Ways and Means and learn the generalization of legislation. He was a success, and his words are worth quoting.

These men who have been chairmen of the great Appropriations Committee rank high in the estimation of mankind and in the history of the United States. They have rendered a great service. When I was first elected Speaker the newspapers said I was green as a gourd about parliamentary matters, and they did not overstate it. [Laughter.] I never had paid more attention to parliamentary law than any other man that had been as active in the House as I had, but you can not stay here 16 years without learning something about it. When I first came in I consulted privately quite a number of parliamentarians in the House. I wanted to make a good record. Mr. FITZGERALD was one of those I always consulted. I might have had some hesitation about taking the opinion of a crack parliamentarian when he was engaged in a hot controversy on the floor of the House, but I had no sort of hesitation in taking the opinion of a crack parliamentarian in private when I asked his opinion.

I wish that Mr. FITZGERALD could stay here. [Applause.] I not only admire his shining talents but I entertain deep personal affection for him. Of course, we will get along, but to have an expert as he is in financial matters quit at such an exigency as this is in the affairs of this country is a pitiable comment on the rewards of politics. [Applause.] He had natural ability, but the thing that stood him in the best stead in this House was his persistent industry. He has achieved a great name, and the young Members—of course, they can not change the quantity of brains they have; some may have as much as he has and some may not have as much—but all of them can imitate Mr. FITZGERALD in the quality of his industry. [Applause.]

The sweetest of all American poets said:

> The heights by great men reached and kept
> Were not attained by sudden flight;
> But they, while their companions slept,
> Were toiling upward in the night.

Those words fit the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] like a glove. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I have used all the time in discussing the bill that I care to at present, and I wish the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] would use some of his time. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, no one could be otherwise than deeply affected by such a generous expression of sentiment toward my service in this House and its impending termination. During a somewhat active career in this body many times some of my friends have been worried because of difficult situations in which I was involved, and they were somewhat perplexed as to how I should extricate myself. I honestly believe that this is the only time in my 19 years of service that I have been really embarrassed and found it difficult to express myself. [Laughter and applause.] Indeed, if those gentlemen who have so generously spoken, instead of heaping so many golden words of kindness upon me, had savagely assailed my career, I could with much more enthusiasm, and unquestionably with much more effectiveness, have responded to their addresses. [Laughter and applause.]

It is not an easy thing to leave the House of Representatives, and I go with considerable regret. If I consulted only my personal preferences, or if I alone were involved, I should not go. Neither would I go at this time if I did not know that the work that I shall drop will be carried on by men as well qualified and as eminently fit to discharge the duties of the position which I shall relinquish.

I might have left Congress at the end of the last Congress if it had not been for a statement by a good friend that I could not come back. [Laughter.] I was somewhat influenced at this time in quitting now lest, perchance, some other unfortunate utterance might compel me to make the one who made it demonstrate his ability to retire me from Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

But I love this body! I believe that it is the great bulwark of our liberty, and upon its wise, intelligent, and courageous action depends the prosperity and the happiness of the American people. [Applause.]

I had an early ambition to become a Member of it. Long before I left college I looked forward to the day when I might sit in it, and before I was graduated I had considerable familiarity with the rules of the House. During my service and for some years prior to it, I read every publication to which I had access that treated of the history of the procedure and of the rules, not only of this body but of the Commons in England. I spent many nights in careful reading of what many consider the dry discussions had at different times when comprehensive changes in the rules of the House were proposed. Whoever knows the philosophy of the rules of this body and understands the underlying principles responsible for many of the rules can have but very little patience with outside agitation against this body for not making chaotic the transaction of public business by the adoption of many well-intended but ill-advised and impractical reforms.

It is difficult for me to at all adequately express the sincere appreciation I have of the most generous expressions that have been uttered regarding my service. I know fully my own limitations and failings. They have been ignored, and such manifestations of friendship chain me more firmly to those who are so loyal in their affections. Early in my career in Congress I read a speech that made a deep impression upon me. Mr. James G. Blaine, in his matchless eulogy upon James A. Garfield, delivered in this House, I believe, on February 27, 1884, said:

> There is no test of a man's ability in any department of public life more severe than service in the House of Representatives; there is no place where so little deference is paid to reputation previously acquired or to eminence won outside; there is no place where so little consideration is shown for the feelings or the failure of beginners. What a man gains in the House he gains by sheer force of his own character. If he loses and falls back he must expect no mercy and will receive no sympathy. It is a field in which the survival of the strongest is the recognized rule, and where no pretense can deceive and no glamor can mislead. The real man is discovered, his worth is impartially weighed, his rank is irreversibly decreed.

I know this House is never deceived in men. It is generous at all times, but ever in its own estimation the place of Members is accurately fixed. I have tried in all my service, as far as it was possible for one to do—and I have the same human weaknesses that all other Members have—to do the thing that I believed was the best for the country regardless of its effect upon my own political fortunes. It has not been an easy road to travel. I made up my mind early in my service that, regardless of how long I served in this body, when I left it I would go away with one satisfaction, and that was that I would have the knowledge that every act and every spoken word by me as a Member of this body would be my own act and not the act of anyone else, and that for everything I did I would myself be personally responsible. [Applause.]

Gentleman, I could not if I tried express in words the appreciation which I feel for this demonstration. I have been overwhelmed with kindly expressions in the few days since I announced that I was to retire at the end of the present month. If it were possible for me to remain I should not leave. But it is one of those inevitable things which men can not control. As I have already said, I love this body, and the work, although arduous, has been congenial. When I am outside I can look back with great satisfaction to my service here. I am going from public life forever. I am free to speak about some matters that other Members may be reluctant to discuss. The most unfortunate thing about the public is the willingness to believe evil of Members of this body. It seems incomprehensible that men who at home are loved and esteemed and highly honored, as soon as they are elected to Congress seem to be regarded in an entirely different light by their constituents. Their every act is regarded with suspicion. One of the more recent manifestations, of which perhaps I can speak when others will not, is the preposterous notion that the salary of a Member of Congress can in any way be construed as containing excess profits which should be subject to a special tax. [Laughter.]

I had at one time hoped that if a certain reform here were effected, I might be here to participate in it. I have repeatedly urged that all of the appropriation bills be consolidated in one committee. When I had no thought of quitting this body I made the statement that I would willingly retire as head of the Committee on Appropriations and from the committee itself to bring about that reform. One of the objections is that it would give great power to a small group of Members. It undoubtedly would do so. But this House needs to concentrate power and responsibility if it is to maintain its unique and unrivaled position in our system of government. We have emasculated the speakership. That office, which derives its name from the fact that its occupant was the chosen spokesman of the Commons to present to the King the grievances of the people and demanded their redress before the Commons would make grants required by the Crown, has been so stripped of its power in this body that the Speaker is not the important and influential factor he should be in our system of government. We so diffuse our power that we do not exercise the influence in the affairs of the Government that the House should exercise. I am glad that the President has made this recommendation. I believe it is the most important reform that this House can adopt if the continual encroachments of the Executive upon the power of the House and the rights of individual Members is to be checked.

Mr. Chairman, I am a member of a commission to reconstruct the Hall of the House of Representatives. I shall resign from that commission, for under the law I would continue a member of it even after I resigned from Congress. I intend to resign from it, because, in my opinion, if that work is ever done it should be done under the control of Members of the House itself. At one time it looked as if the reconstruction might take place, and I had studied carefully the plans in the hope to find an appropriate place where they would always impress not only the Members of this body but those who visit this Chamber the words of a very distinguished British statesman, Edmund Burke, which accurately picture the relationship and duty of a representative. In a speech to his constituents at Bristol on November 4, 1774, he said:

> It should be the glory, as well as the honor, of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes should at all times have great weight with him, their opinions high respect, their business unremitted attention. But his mature opinion, his unbiased judgment, his enlightened conscience he should not surrender to you, nor to any man, nor to any set of men living. These he does not derive from you, nor from the law, nor from the constitution. They are a gift from Providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply responsible. Your representative owes you not only his industry but his judgment, and he is betraying instead of serving you when he sacrifices that judgment to the opinions of another.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that Edmund Burke in those immortal words has pictured for members of a representative body the true measure of their conduct. It requires courage to exercise judgment, it requires courage not to subordinate judgment to the opinions of others. Yet the whole course of this Government and the safety and the happiness and the prosperity of the people of the United States depend not only upon the intelligence of Members of Congress, but, much more, upon the courage with which they exercise their own unbiased judgment. [Applause.]

I wish to say that in going from this body I go with the highest opinion of its Members, of their integrity, of their industry, and of their patriotism. During my service here I have been in many, many bitter controversies. I have hit hard and I have taken hard blows in return, but I never carried from the floor of the House any feeling of antagonism whatever toward the Members with whom I had been engaged in controversy. I discharged on the floor of this House my duties as a Member of the House according to my best lights, and when I left this Chamber I left here all acrimony, partisanship, and bitterness. I rejoice in the fact that in leaving this body I go, as I believe, with the same friendship and good will which I entertain for every individual Member of it. [Applause.] I shall carry away and cherish the many, many pleasant associations of my service, and they shall not be crowded out by other occupations. I have served the best part of my life in this body. Its Members have uniformly been kind and more patient than I had reason to expect. They have been tolerant when my views differed from the majority; they have frequently given me loyal and unstinted support in many difficult controversies. I wish to express my thanks and appreciation for the innumerable expressions of esteem and friendship and for the unquestioned loyalty and assistance that have been so liberally accorded to me by Members here regardless of party, and I assure the House that this day will be recalled with reverent affection till the end of my life. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it has occurred to me that perhaps many of the very kind things said about me to-day were to prevent any opposition on my part to probably the most important feature of the pending bill [laughter], which is the annual mileage for Members of the Congress. The bill has in it practically two items. One is the provision continuing available until the end of the fiscal year the appropriation of $100,000,000 placed at the disposal of the President as an emergency fund in the deficiency bill of last April. Under the terms of the appropriation it was available until the 31st of this month. The President requested that it be continued until the end of the fiscal year, and he has stated in communications, which are printed in the report, the reasons for the request. Of the $100,000,000 there has been allotted by the President for various purposes approximately $31,000,000, and of this sum there has been expended $21,000,000, leaving unexpended $79,000,000. Out of the $21,000,000 which have been expended, more than $17,000,000 were expended for the purpose of repairing alien enemy ships which were taken over by the Government after the declaration of war, and the balance of somewhat over $3,000,000 has been expended for a number of miscellaneous objects. Certain funds have been expended for secret and confidential work under the President himself, about which, for reasons that are apparent, it would be impossible to give particulars. Some of it has been allotted to the fuel administration, to the food administration, to the war board, and to other bodies which have been created out of the necessities of the war. The wisdom of making this money available, apart from the request of the President himself and his statement that it would be embarrassing in many ways unless some such fund were created, is apparent when it is known that at the outbreak of the war practically every department of the Government requested the Congress to place at the disposal of the head of that department a large emergency appropriation to be expended at the discretion of the head of the department.

It was strongly urged that as the country was at war, and innumerable situations were being rapidly created which could not be anticipated, and in view of the fact that the country was to have a very large military force operating abroad, that not only the War Department but a number of other departments of the Government would find it imperatively necessary to have an emergency fund. So far as I have been able to ascertain, no embarrassment of any serious character has resulted to the Government because those requests were not granted. Upon the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations the emergency fund was placed in the personal supervision and control of the President, so that with the responsibility upon him he would exercise that wise discretion and care which it was anticipated should be exercised in the expenditure of moneys given without restriction. It is very gratifying to know that the President has not spent this money with a liberal hand, but that there has been continual complaint upon the part of those seeking to obtain part of it that it was practically impossible to obtain his consent to part with any part of the appropriation. That is quite apparent when it is shown that out of $21,000,000 expended over $17,000,000 was spent for the one purpose of repairing enemy alien ships taken over by this country.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. TILSON. I was going to ask the gentleman along that line as to the possibility of acquainting oneself as to the details of the expenditure of this money sometime after it has been expended, recognizing the entire propriety of its being placed at the discretion of the President.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is only one item that the President expressed the opinion that there should not be publicity concerning the expenditure, and that was for secret service and confidential work amounting to about a million and a quarter dollars, and it may be that even after the war the character of the work necessary would make it inadvisable to have public just what the Government was required to do under the existing circumstances.

Mr. TILSON. That answers my question entirely, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But as to the other expenditures, the President has expressed a perfect willingness to give complete and full information to the Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has spoken of appropriations for the Shipping Board out of the President's allotment. That constitutes the largest item of expenditure thus far made out of the total appropriation of $100,000,000. We have already appropriated for the Shipping Board something like a billion dollars, have we not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nine hundred million dollars and more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the President allotted out of his appropriation upward of $17,000,000 in addition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true; but the appropriations made to the Shipping Board were for specific purposes, and none of the money appropriated was available for repairs to alien enemy ships which had been taken over by the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is what I want to learn from the gentleman, if possible: Was any of this $17,000,000 allotted by the President out of his appropriation to the Shipping Board used for any other purpose than for the repair of ships taken over from the enemy?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My information is that it was not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. None of it used for the purchase of land?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The present bill simply permits the President to use the unexpended balance?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The balance unexpended on the 31st of December, during the six months which are the last six months of this fiscal year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And places it at his disposal for another six months?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The only other items in the bill, Mr. Chairman, are items for mileage for the Members of the two Houses of Congress, which under the law is payable annually as part of their compensation. [Applause.]

I desire to insert in the RECORD a more detailed statement of expenditures under the Committee on Public Information, together with a statement of the scope of its work. A more complete statement would have been furnished had it not been that the head of the committee is absent from the city:

Statement of disbursements of the Committee on Public Information from May 4, 1917, to Nov. 30, 1917, inclusive.

General committee expenses (including all salaries to Sept. 30)	$65,365.73
Civic and educational cooperation (including preparation and printing of books and pamphlets)	81,417.98
Publishing Daily Bulletin	96,710.13
Four-minute men	14,198.96
Distribution and mailing of publications	7,697.69
New division	7,678.72
Syndicate features	2,323.45
Film division	14,255.42
Speaking division	2,283.55
Foreign-language division	1,738.41
Picture division	1,082.53
Foreign educational work	4,604.59
Woman's war work	432.46
Reference division	220.83
Art division	75.84
Total	300,086.29

NOTE.—Number of employees regularly engaged, 151; four-minute men, 19,000; pay roll (average for November), $5,333.28 per week; allotments to the committee for general purposes, $350,000.

Statement of allotments made through Committee on Public Information from May 4, 1917, to Nov. 30, 1917, inclusive.

For informational work in allied, neutral, and enemy countries	$1,285,500

NOTE.—These allotments have not yet been expended.

Books and pamphlets published and distributed by the Committee on Public Information up to Nov. 30, 1917.

Publication.	Number printed.	Number distributed.
How the War Came to America:
English	4,533,250	3,955,515
German	237,500	216,765
Bohemian	70,750	68,400
Yiddish	80,000	62,700
Italian	97,800	27,275
Spanish	14,500	13,650
National Service Handbook	300,000	141,080
Battle Line of Democracy	9,980	1,000
President's Flag Day Address	1,427,000	252,582
Conquest and Kultur	23,000	22,750
War Message and Facts Behind It	23,000	22,750
The Nation in Arms	1,658,250	1,329,057
The Government of Germany	1,052,500	940,334
The Great War	1,098,000	956,084
A War of Self-Defense	715,600	171,693
American Loyalty:
English	278,000	265,600
German	337,500	226,500
American Interest in Popular Government Abroad	489,000	127,293
Home Reading Course for Citizen Soldiers	251,000	239,600
First Session of the War Congress	271,900	60,993
Total	11,870,530	9,101,621

Classification of distribution of the books and pamphlets issued by the Committee on Public Information up to November 28, 1917.

Congressional lists	3,288,485
Ministers	1,802,550
Individual requests	983,810
Subscribers to Official Bulletin	270,000
Defense councils	237,670
Newspapers	552,575
Public schools	18,275
Fraternal organizations	182,950
Libraries	3,025
Total	7,339,340

Report of expenditures of Committee on Public Information from May 4, 1917, to November 30, 1917, inclusive, shows a total of $300,087 expended out of an allottment of $350,000 for general purposes, and $1,285,500 for "informational work in allied, neutral, and enemy countries." The latter allotments have not yet been expended.

In the general expenditures are these items:

General committee expenses, including all salaries, to September 30, $65,366.

Civic and educational cooperation, including preparation and printing of books and pamphlets, $81,418.

Four-minute men, organized in many cities for propaganda speech making, $14,199; distribution and mailing of publications, $7,698; news division, $7,678; syndicate features, $2,323; film division, $14,255; speaking division, $2,283; foreign-language division, $1,738; picture division, $1,082; foreign educational work, $4,604; and less than $1,000 each for woman's war work and other activities.

The number of employees regularly engaged is 151; number of four-minute men, 19,000; pay roll average per week, $5,333.28.

The committee printed 12,000,000 books and pamphlets, distributing 9,000,000 of them, most of them being on congressional lists, and almost 2,000,000 being distributed through ministers.

There are 270,000 subscribers to the Official Bulletin.

In his statement Mr. Creel says that "any accounting that I give must first of all be prefaced by the statement that I have never considered myself a censor, nor do I, nor will I."

"The whole question of a censorship," he says, "plays but a small part in the committee work, for it is by its very constitution in the nature of an automatic device. The desires of Government with respect to concealment from the enemy of military policies, plans, and movements are set forth in certain specific requests. No law stands behind them. Their observance rests upon honor and patriotism, and I am proud indeed to be able to bear testimony that the faith has been kept. There have been violations, as a matter of course, and papers holding to the unwritten agreement have suffered injury from papers less careful and less honest, but on the whole the press has responded in the same spirit of unselfish service that animates the firing line, as it is realized that the requests of Government are concerned with human lives and national hopes as it is driven home that the passing satisfaction of a news item may endanger a transport or a troop train, the voluntary censorship grows in strength and certainty."

—

Any accounting that I give must first of all be prefaced by the statement that I have never considered myself a censor, nor do I nor will I. The whole question of a censorship plays but a small part in the work of the committee, for it is, by its very constitution, in the nature of an automatic device.

The desires of government with respect to concealment from the enemy of military policies, plans, and movements are set forth in certain specific requests. No law stands behind them. Their observance rests upon honor and patriotism, and I am proud, indeed, to be able to bear testimony that the faith has been kept. There have been violations as a matter of course, and papers holding to the unwritten agreement have suffered injury from papers less careful and less honest, but on the whole the press has responded in the same spirit of unselfish service that animates the firing line.

As it is realized that the requests of government are concerned with human lives and national hopes; as it is driven home that the passing satisfaction of a news item may endanger a transport or a troop train, the voluntary censorship grows in strength and certainty.

The continuing weak spot is due to a persistent misunderstanding in the matter of discipline. When a violation occurs, such papers as have observed the agreement at once make demand that I administer some rebuke or inflict some mysterious penalty, yet on the printed card that carries the desires of Government there appears this significant paragraph:

"These requests go to the press without larger authority than the necessities of the war-making branches. Their enforcement is a matter for the press itself."

How may I rebuke? How may I punish? If the press feels the need of discipline, then it must create its own. Were there any responsible body to which I could appeal there might be some chance of remedying the situation; but the press happens to be the one great profession in the world that is without an organization, even without an authorized code or accepted standards. No one body may speak for it, enter into bargains for it, or bind it. * * *

At no point is there abridgment of the true freedom of the press. Its historic mission can be fulfilled without let or hindrance, for we have the feeling that there is not need for less criticism in time of war, but more. * * *

Let me now, if you please, make a first complete report on the work of the Committee on Public Information, taking it up department by department, since it is only by this somewhat tedious process that I can make clear its work.

The Division of News is the medium for the issuance of official war information. It has its sworn representatives in the war-making branches of Government—trained newspaper men, whose duty it is to open up operations to the inspection of the people as far as military prudence will permit. We believe that public support is a matter of public understanding, and it is the job of this division to take dead wood out of the channels of information, permitting a freer, more continuous flow. This is not the simplest thing in the world. On one hand is the press, impatient of reticence and suspicious of concealment, and on the other hand we have generals and admirals reared in a school of iron silence. Both, however, are in process of education. The press, I feel, is commencing to realize our honesty of purpose, and the military experts are growing to have an increasing faith in the power of absolute frankness. In the beginning of the war a lie started about cruelty and neglect on the hospital ships of the fleet. It was a front-page story in almost every newspaper, although the complete disproof that followed went on the market page. Last week we gave out a report of the Surgeon General on conditions in a certain cantonment that was as fine a piece of muckraking as I ever read. Few papers took any large notice of it, for the very completeness of confession robbed the story of any sensational value such at attaches to an exposure. The Army and Navy, through this Division of News, has pledged to the people instant and honest announcement of all casualties, all accidents, all disasters. Bear this in mind, the air fills with rumors about the sinking of a transport, the loss of thousands of soldiers in France, the destruction of the fleet. Brand them as lies and publish the liar, for the Government does not suppress such news or seek to minimize it.

The committee is, in large measure, a clearing house for most of the suggestions and offers of service that pour in from all sides. Every idea is analyzed and reported upon, and not only is time saved for heavily burdened departments, but hundreds are given speedy and definite information.

A great information bureau is now being installed that will meet this need in an organized and comprehensive manner. Not only do we promise instant and accurate directions in all matters connected with Government, but we hope to gather complete records with regard to every activity of Government that will be of invaluable service to those who write or speak.

The Division of Civic and Educational Cooperation prepares and publishes all war literature that is issued in pamphlet form. It commands the services of any writer that it may choose to call, and at its beck stand over 3,000 of the leading historians of the country, every man in the service. These pamphlets, covering every phase of America's position, purposes, aims, are printed in many languages and millions of copies reach not only the people of America but go to every corner of the world, carrying our defense and our attack. Experts plan the most effective circulation schemes and experts direct the distribution in order that every printed bullet may reach its mark.

Another division has gathered together the leading novelists, essayists, and publicists of the land, and these men and women, without payment, toil faithfully week after week in the preparation of brilliant, comprehensive articles that go into the Saturday and Sunday papers of the United States. Our system of release gives successively to each paper in every community the privilege of exclusive publication, a plan worked out in conference with leading editors.

We are giving increasing attention to specialized appeals, and there is one department that pays particular attention to the rural press and to the plate-matter service. Another is concerned entirely with women's part in war work, ministering to the women's pages of the press, and there are still others who look after the labor press, the religious press, and the periodical press.

The foreign-language press is dealt with by a distinct division that has enlisted the services of over 200 volunteer translators. Reports are made on virtually every paper in the United States that is not printed in English, and we try to fight ignorance and untruth with a steady stream of articles selected with particular reference to the race or to the problem of bitterness.

Much misunderstanding has centered about the Official Bulletin. This is not a newspaper, nor was it ever intended to make it a newspaper. It is an official record of the business of the Government. I was opposed to its publication, and only the order of those in authority forced me to put the idea into effect. I was wrong, and they were right.

The Official Bulletin has justified itself a thousandfold. In every post office of the United States it is posted daily for the benefit of the public, it goes to every Army and Navy post, the expeditionary forces, to every governor, mayor, Member of Congress, library, college, and university, chamber of commerce, board of trade, daily paper, and magazine, and, in addition to this, despite a prohibitive subscription price, over $3,000 a month comes in from individuals.

There are other mediums of public appeal than through the printed word, and we are developing them to the fullest possible extent. The Division of Four Minute Men now commands the services of over 19,000 speakers, who appear regularly in the motion-picture houses, carrying messages from the Government to the people. I can not speak too enthusiastically in appreciation of those who have carried this novel idea to a brilliant success.

The Division of Speaking has coordinated the efforts of all Government agencies and of all the patriotic bodies, to the end that some order has been brought out of oratorical chaos. It is this division that arranges mass meetings or aids them, calls war conferences in the States, and sends picked individuals and groups on speaking tours that reach from coast to coast.

Motion pictures have been given a deservedly high place in our activities. We have a Division of Films that issues a weekly service to the State councils of defense, commissions of public safety, and the various patriotic organizations, a stirring pictorial record of our war progress. It is now planning to produce certain great patriotic feature films, officially expressive of America's aims, ideals, and activities. We have taken care not to destroy existing machinery, and through the patriotism of the news weeklies we have established a working arrangement that enables us virtually to command the services of this great organization that are seen by 600,000 people every week.

The division of pictures issues permits to the photographers of the country, passes upon the permissibility of photographs, and sends to the newspapers of the country a photograph service made up of pictures taken by the Signal Corps operators both in this country and on the firing line in France. Motion pictures taken by the Signal Corps in France are turned over by the committee to the Red Cross for its own distribution and its own profit.

An art division, of which Charles Dana Gibson is the chairman, has mobilized the artists of the United States for the production of posters, car cards, and every other form of pictorial appeal. Only recently, at our request, the advertising forces of the Nation mobilized for war cooperation, and I look to these experts for car-card material, placards, and effective leaflets to place in pay envelopes wherever men and women work.

A similar organization is being formed by the outdoor advertisers, and in a little while the billboards and signboards of the country will be placed at the Nation's service generously and systematically.

These activities that I have mentioned concern themselves entirely with the domestic situation, but beyond the United States are countries that are just as much a part of my job as any Commonwealth in the Union. It is our right and our necessity to fight for public opinion in Scandinavia, in Switzerland, in Holland, in Spain, South America, Central America, and Mexico, and we make this fight in print, in speech, and on the screen. The division of foreign-picture service works from early until late collecting films for exhibition beyond the seas, films that show our social, industrial, and war progress, each title carrying with it the message of America, the meaning of free institutions, our national aims and ideals. This division also collects and prepares the motion pictures for exhibition in the soldiers' houses that the Young Men's Christian Association maintains on the various firing lines, a gigantic task in itself. Each day we send out 1,000 words by wireless that is picked up by the Eiffel Tower, that goes from France to Russia and to all other parts of Europe, from Darien to Central and South America. When there is news of vast importance, like the President's message to Congress, for instance, the cables are commandeered, and we send it to every capital of the world for transmission to every community.

There is a feature service that ministers to the press of other countries, and it is also the case that we are establishing publicity bases in other lands, so that lies may be fought on their own ground.

The enemy countries themselves are invaded through the air. Bombardment planes, loaded with leaflets and pamphlets that tell the truth to a deluded people, go regularly over the firing lines and far into the land, both on the eastern and western fronts.

There is no activity of the committee that we are ashamed to reveal, no dollar that is sent on a furtive errand, but peculiarly is this true of our work in other lands. No paper is subsidized, no official is bought, no corruption is employed. From a thousand sources I am told of the wonder of German propaganda, but my original determinations have never altered. Always do I try to find out what the Germans are doing, and then I don't do it. Even if the very loftiness of our war aims did not command honesty at every point, I have the conviction that corrupt methods work their own destruction. German propaganda failed in this country, it failed in Roumania and in Italy, it has failed in South and Central America and in Mexico, not because millions were not spent, but because honest, decent people inevitably turn against dishonesty and indecency.

These divisions do not fully cover the activities of the Committee on Public Information. The broad field of its work can not be expressed in the terms of organization. By the logic of events and the necessities of the public requirements which called it into being, its functions have grown until it touches at times nearly every part of the great machinery which now coordinates the forces of the Republic for war purposes.

Public opinion is not controlled entirely by what is spoken, written, painted, or photographed, but is oftentimes dependent upon what is or is not done. Because of this we are as jealous of inefficiencies and neglects as any citizen, and not the least part of our duties is the discovery and remedy of conditions that make for discontent and bitterness. While we are fighting for democracy abroad, we must see to it that free institutions are not undermined at home, and as far as we are able the committee guards against the reactions of war.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use a portion of the brief time allotted me to inform the Members of the House that immediately after adjournment there will be exhibited in the assembly, or conference, room of the House Office Building a set of moving pictures presented by Mr. J. A. Defelder and Mr. Ed. Farlow, of Wyoming, of, among other things, a wolf and a coyote round-up. These pictures, illustrating as they do, among other things, certain very interesting operations in connection with the destruction of predatory wild animals, will, I believe, be interesting and instructive to the Members of the House. The pictures will be exhibited as soon as the House adjourns, and the exhibition will continue so that the Republican Members who are detained here for a short time by the conference can see them at the close of the conference.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was merely going to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it ought not to conflict with the conference.

Mr. GILLETT. It will not conflict, because they will be continued so that the Members can see them.

Mr. Chairman, I do not oppose at all the adoption of this bill, but I wish to make a few suggestions.

The main purpose of it, of course, as you know, is to continue to the President the use of $70,000,000 of the $100,000,000 which we gave him at the outbreak of the war. Now, that $100,000,000, as I supposed, and as I have no doubt the whole House supposed, was given as an emergency fund which the President could use anywhere, until the House was able to make its regular appropriations; and I suppose our general expectation was that as soon as we were able to make appropriations in the regular form, upon estimates duly submitted and after hearings, then the appropriation of this $100,000,000 would cease, and therefore it was only fixed until the 1st of January. Now comes this request that it shall be extended for another six months, although the House is in active session and is able to receive estimates and make specific appropriations in the regular manner. To request such an enormous, unlimited appropriation is certainly an innovation, but I shall vote for it because I wish—and I am sure this side as well as the other side wishes—to give the President without stint whatever he needs for the successful and earnest prosecution of this war.

But I wish to suggest, as I suggested in the Committee on Appropriations, that it seemed to me that before we extended this appropriation of $70,000,000 we should at least inquire for what purposes it was probably needed, and, more than that, that we should have given to us the items for which the $30,000,000 already expended has been used.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state what the particular emergency is, or was, that should necessitate the infliction upon us of the Official Bulletin and some of the other activities of the Bureau of Public Information?

Mr. GILLETT. I am going to allude to that a little later.

Now, there is one appropriation here which I recognize the House ought not to ask anything about, and that is the appropriation of $2,200,000 for the Secret Service, because as long as Germany uses, as she has, millions upon millions of money for bribing, in all portions of the world, men to stir up labor troubles, to destroy munitions, and foment discord and dissension as she has in Russia, in the United States, and to the south of us—as long as Germany is using money in that disreputable way it is necessary for us to have a secret service to ferret out her intrigues, and it would, of course, be impossible for that secret service to be efficient if it was public. And therefore I recognize that that must be entirely secret, and I do not ask any disclosure about it. I trust the President for all the money that is desired for the Secret Service. But when we come to the bureau which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] alludes to, I confess I think we ought, before appropriating further, to have had some details. I think we ought to have been told what salaries were paid and are being paid in that bureau. That bureau may be necessary. Germany, we all know, had a subsidized press, and a large part of her success was undoubtedly because she unified all the German people largely by the effect on public opinion of a subsidized press. It may be necessary in meeting her that we should have a subsidized press. It may be that our daily and weekly and monthly press are not alert enough or intelligent enough or subservient enough to make public all the information the administration wishes to impart or to give full scope to its literary abilities, but I think if that is true we ought to know what salaries are being paid, and we ought to know the details of the employment, and Congress ought to appropriate for it with all the knowledge and detail and authority that it does for other branches of the Government service. And therefore, as I say, I suggested that it was very proper, before we passed this appropriation bill, that we should ascertain what had been done in the way of salaries and in general expense of this Information Bureau, as it is called.

Congress a few years ago provided that no publicity expert should be employed unless he was specifically appropriated for by Congress, but I presume it is construed that by saying that the President can expend this appropriation at his discretion. No existing limitations of law apply to it, but I think that expression of the will of Congress ought to be given some consideration.

It seems to me there has been shown by the administration an unfortunate unwillingness to have its expenditures scrutinized. You will remember that the provision for a committee on expenditures, which was presented in the Senate by the Democratic leader there and which passed that branch of Congress, and which gave the committee no executive functions, but only assured to Congress some knowledge and track, as these enormous billions of appropriations went on, as to how they were being expended. The President himself objected to that being passed, and therefore, of course, it was killed in this House. But it seemed to me that was an extremely proper and desirable provision. Congress ought to be kept informed how these unprecedented sums are being spent without waiting a year or two for reports.

When our first liberty bonds were going to be sold we gave the Secretary of the Treasury first one-tenth of 1 per cent for expenses. We placed millions of dollars at his unlimited disposal for that purpose; and I remember also when the second issue of bonds was authorized—and he was asking us for a still greater percentage for expenses, some fifteen millions, I think—he was asked by the Committee on Ways and Means how he had expended the money in the first sale of bonds, and he said he would be glad to give a detailed report. But I noticed that he added later that the detailed report could not be ready before we voted on the amount he should have for the second sale of bonds. I looked in vain, when I read the other day the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and waded through the various tables therein, for a statement of those expenditures. I hoped I would find there some table of the expenditures that were made in selling the first issue of the liberty bonds, but so far as I can ascertain no report of those expenditures has yet been made.

Now, it seems to me that, willing as we are and eager as we are to grant to the administration all that is wanted, all that it can wisely use, we ought to be given some reciprocity of information. We ought to be told what is done with the money as we go along, and for that reason I should have liked the Committee on Appropriations to have had a hearing, as we always do, to find out how the money already expended has been expended. I think that during this war, with these vast expenditures, there is sure to be extravagance. There is not a Member of this House who has not had brought to his attention, I am sure, questions of waste and extravagance, and there are likely to be scandals, if there are not already, and the longer publicity is postponed the more pitiless it will be when it does come. Therefore I have thought, and I still think here, that before voting on this we should have been given the detailed expenditures that have already been made. The committee decided otherwise. I would not delay the passage of this bill, and I certainly shall vote for it. We want to give all the money that is needed. But I hope that the administration in the future will give us the details of expenditures with more freedom and accuracy of detail than we have yet received them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7572) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, namely:

EXECUTIVE.

The appropriation of $100,000,000 "for the national security and defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President," contained in the general deficiency appropriation act approved April 17, 1917, is continued and made available until June 30, 1918.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in the report of the committee recommending the appropriation just provided for in this paragraph it appears that the President has allotted to the food and fuel administrations $240,598.92. Congress has already provided very liberally, so far as we know, for the food and fuel administrations, and expenditures are undoubtedly being made on a large scale for their purposes. But the country is filled with reports of the dire distress of many of our people who are sorely in need of food and fuel, particularly coal, and there is much concern about what these administrations are accomplishing.

I do not at this time intend to go extensively into the subject of fuel, except to say that during the last three or four days several barges carrying coal from coal-delivering points to the people of New England and to the people of New York have not reached their destination because of the storms upon the high seas. They have gone to the bottom of the ocean, with cargo, crew, and all.

This is only one phase of the fuel question. There is a remedy for it, which Congress has thus far failed to provide, and which the Government thus far has failed to recognize as needful, to wit, another means of transportation than that of the rail. If we had our waterways and canals opened now between the points where the coal can be delivered to the points where coal is to be used, this emergency that I have just referred to might not have arisen.

But there is one peculiar condition with regard to the coal supply to which I feel it my duty now to call your immediate attention, and that is the fact that while the people of New York to-day are crying for fuel, and while the industries of New England, some of them, are being closed down because they can not secure coal, there is ample coal at coal-producing points. In the Delaware River now there are no less than 13 or 14 barges, each carrying from 1,000 to 3,000 tons of coal, that can not leave the river to proceed to the point of destination, to the point of relief of the people who need the coal, because the Government has commandeered the tugs that have been in use heretofore for delivering the coal to New York and to New England points. It is a condition to which I feel the attention of Congress should be called, and if through calling it to the attention of Congress it may reach the ear of the departments that are in control I shall be gratified.

It is strange, indeed, that while the reports are coming from New England points, while they are coming out from New York that people are freezing in their homes, and that mills are closing because they have not fuel, there is plenty of fuel which can not be delivered because the Government itself has taken away the propelling power needful for its delivery.

Now, it has been the practice for years to take these barges laden with coal around by sea and deliver them to points like New York and Boston; but that is not being done now, and those barges, laden to the guards, are standing idle, and the tugs that have been heretofore propelling them are standing idle, doing nothing but awaiting the orders of the departments that have commandeered them for the public service.

I think the people of this country should have some consideration in a matter of this kind, and I hope the administration which has charge of the food and fuel supply will take notice that that coal is now awaiting shipment, while the people who need it are suffering and some of the mills are closed down.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Can the gentleman explain the trouble in the bituminous coal district throughout Pennsylvania? Why is not the coal delivered now to our manufacturers?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because you have not the cars to carry it. The old engines are wheezing under the burdens placed upon them by the Government itself.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. What is your idea of the reason why they have not got the cars?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The cars are in use. But there is another means of transportation that could be used. I am calling attention to an instance where we have barges laden with coal that are not being utilized; the seagoing barges and tugs to propel them are also idle.

Mr. SNYDER. There are a great many inland canals, are there not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. If they were opened up and in operation now, the gentleman's industries would be working at greater speed.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is quite right.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7572) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. MAPES, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the cases of H. R. 5927, H. R. 8998, H. R. 11910, H. R. 16483, H. R. 18420, H. R. 19215, and H. R. 19216, all of the Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse reports having been made thereon.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] reported a resolution (H. Res. 191) for the appointment of clerks to committees this morning, I offered an amendment and the resolution was passed as amended, but the words "as designated" should be added to my amendment. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings with reference to that resolution be vacated and that my amendment be so amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings adopting the resolution about committee clerks this morning, so that he can have two words added which were omitted from the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend my amendment by adding the words "as designated."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN moves to amend the resolution by adding, at the end of the amendment, the words "as designated."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to, and, without objection, the resolution as amended will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ELECTIONS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the election of THETUS W. SIMS as chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the election of THETUS W. SIMS, of Tennessee, to the chairmanship of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Are there any other nominations? If not, the Chair will put the question.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now I move the election of JARED Y. SANDERS to be a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers a resolution placing JARED Y. SANDERS of Louisiana on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Are there any other nominations? If not, the Chair will put the question.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a statement made in Parliament by Sir Eric Geddes on the submarine question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting as a part of his remarks a statement made in the British House of Commons. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if this matter is related somewhat to his visit to the battle front?

Mr. HICKS. No; not at all. It is merely a statement made by the head of the British Admiralty giving information of extreme interest, which I know the Members of the House would like to read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PNEUMATIC-TUBE SERVICE.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate resolution 114 and place it on its passage. I will state for the information of the House that under the act of the last Congress the time for the extension of the pneumatic-tube service——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, can we not take this up to-morrow? We will have plenty of time. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] has been waiting all the afternoon to address the House, and he must leave the city to-night.

Mr. MOON. If it will be any accommodation to the gentleman, I will be very glad to do that. Mr. Speaker, I will call up the resolution to-morrow.

THE BATTLE OF THE MARNE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, toward the close of the extraordinary session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, a number of the Members of this body began to discuss the feasibility and practicability of a trip to the war zone of Europe. At the close of the session the plans were completed. Not that those who were taking the trip were wiser or more zealous or more patriotic than their colleagues, nor that they were seeking adventure, nor satisfying idle curiosity amid grim and ghastly surroundings, but because perhaps of a sort of interest more peculiarly centered, or rather the cry for first-hand information was a little louder, caused 10 of us in a body to agree upon the undertaking. Each of us thought we could spend the time there between the close of the extraordinary session and the convening of the regular more beneficially to ourselves and to our constituency than we could by returning to our respective homes.

Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER of New Jersey, Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR of Colorado, Hon. WILLIAM S. GOODWIN of Arkansas, Hon. DAN V. STEPHENS of Nebraska, Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON of Washington, Hon. FREDERICK C. HICKS of New York, Hon. C. C. DILL of Washington, Hon. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE of Colorado, Hon. PORTER H. DALE of Vermont, and myself constituted the party. We represented no one but ourselves and were painstaking at every stage of the journey to make it plain that we were simply Members of this body in our personal capacities and that we were no committee nor commission of any sort. Our position in this regard was and is thoroughly understood by all with whom we came in contact. Hon. Tom Stout, a former Member of this body from Montana; Hon. Ross L. Hammond, a distinguished citizen of Nebraska and proprietor of the Fremont Tribune of that State; Maj. H. W. Patton, one of the most distinguished newspaper men and writers of the Northwest, living at Hoquiam, Wash.; and Mr. John B. Ritch, a talented and versatile writer of Montana, joined us in New York. We sailed to the setting of the sun on October 15 and arrived off Liverpool in the passing of the twilight of the 23d, landing in the forenoon of the 24th.

Our little party was met with open arms and hearts. The hospitality of both the British and the French was unbounded, sincere, simple, and gracious. We met and were entertained by their leading men at London and at Paris. In Belgium, that heroic figure who will ever live in the hearts of all men who admire red blood—King Albert—asked of us the honor of a visit. We found him in the midst of the little remnant of his Kingdom—only 25 miles long and barely 7 in width—not broken, but standing square to the storms of war, every inch of his 6 feet 6 a king. This little peaceful community swallowed in the whirl of war, the people taken, carried away, but as a "high officer" said, "We will fight until the last man is gone and Belgium and the Belgians shall be no more." Grand, bright eyed, and grim, he stands with his little army battling against a mighty host. The thunder of his cannon forbade sleep the night we remained in his broken land, but the roar was mighty; answering and paying back in coin of their own those who had despoiled his people and ravaged his land. Our visit with him was almost pathetic.

Every assistance was rendered us in obtaining information garnered from their three years and upward of awful war. The warmth of our welcome, the readiness with which every inquiry was answered expressed to us an unreserved disposition to give us the benefit of every experience, expedient, and even experiment.

The hospitals were especially educational; every device known to surgery; every appliance known to science. In short, it appeared to us that the devising power of genius had reached its limit—all, all devoted to the salvaging of the human wrecks of war.

After four days in England we left for France early in the morning of the 30th of October, arriving at Paris on the 31st in the cold, gray gloom of the morning. Paris, like London, is drinking of the bitter cup of war. Soldiers of every kind, class, and rank. One had but to stretch his arm and it would touch a uniform of some nation of the allies. Paris, like London, spends her nights in darkness, here and there a shaded street light casting rays aslant upon the cosmopolitan scene. While in London we experienced the alarm of a German air raid. These predatory invasions excite great alarm to those out or upon the streets, but within doors things proceed with absolute unconcern. Paris is free, however, of air raids; her defense appears to be more complete, or it may be that characteristic French enterprise has taught its expensive lesson to the nocturnal prowler of the air.

No American should visit Paris without paying tribute to the memory of Lafayette. In the little obscure and walled-in burial tract, in the farthest corner, hard against the wall as if to hide from the public eye, long ere this forgotten and lost in the years had he made no fight for freedom, is the humble tomb of one of earth's earliest, noblest champions of liberty. Peace be unto his rest! Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER delivered a beautiful and eloquent tribute, after which we placed a beautiful floral wreath upon the modest tomb, le Marquis de Chambrun responding.

More hospitals were visited here, the American Army Red Cross Hospital even greater and more complete than the wonderful institutions of London.

The French Government now claimed us as its guests, and with six large military automobiles in charge of Col. Frank Parker, United States Army, we were off for the French front, stopping at Villars, Soissons, and Rheims, with Chalons sur Marne at the end of the day's run. The following day we arrived at Verdun—the spot where history must stop and square her shoulders to bear anew the burden of her tragic pages. Verdun, the rock of destiny; Verdun, the heroic, the glorious! Here amid these hills, these passes, on yonder eminence and beyond thundered and still thunder the guns against which the mightiest assaults of which mankind has record were rolled back again and again like waves beating on the very shore of time. The thought, more the sight, of this land of tragedy follows me. When the soldiers of France stood like a wall of granite with the watchword grating through every set jaw, "They shall not pass," here Germany paid the awful penalty of her vanity, and the glory of France remains her own. I can not speak of Verdun without my mind picturing a myriad of tragedies; history has been written there, and is being written there even to-day, which will remain long after the names of the guiding genius who shaped affairs are forgotten in the passing of years. Say "Verdun" to a French soldier and his heels come together with a thump, he squares his shoulders, stiffens his neck, and the jaw sets like hinges of steel. He feels that he has shown the world that French blood is the reddest of the earth. He knows better than we that Gravolette, Sedan, and Metz of the war of seventy were not only undeserved but stolen victories for the Prussian. [Applause.]

I stand with an uncovered head in the presence of the soldiers of France to all the living and to the memory of all her dead.

Let me say a thing right here, and give me your ears; I wish all America could hear it. It is this: It is the private soldier that is the idol of France. The Frenchman cares nothing for class or rank. Both are but incidental to armies. It is the private who must do the fighting; it is he who bears the suffering; it is he who wins the battles; it is he who does the dying. When the soldier knocks at the door of the peasant in the night time and is asked "Who is there?" he simply answers, "A soldier of France." The door is opened, the helmet taken, the fires kindled, and the chair placed for him; the housewife opens the doors of the larder and he knows he is welcome to the best. The private is not made to feel that he is the social or intellectual inferior of the officer. They practice the democracy of their institutions. How different in this particular is the boasted democracy of America! Over there the major, the corporal, the captain, the lieutenant, and the private sit at the same table and sip their wine together; I saw them. The plan of campaign is discussed; the sergeant, the corporal, and the private know the objective of a certain movement timed for to-morrow, just as well as the colonel. The understanding is mutual. The officer knows his men from close personal contact, not at the arm's length. He knows the weak man and can strengthen him; he knows the strong and can keep him strong. This is practicing the very basic idea of true democracy. This is why the private and the corporal stand beside their colonel and each measures every inch the soldier; this is why the soldier of France is the glory of its soil. The old argument that personal equality and daily association is destructive of discipline and therefore leads to inefficiency belongs to a past fallacy, for the world has not yet said the French is not an efficient army—not since the Battle of the Marne; not since the world knows the stories of Verdun. In my judgment a primary defect in our Military Establishment to-day is the presence of that social chasm between the commissioned officer on the one hand and the noncommissioned officer and private on the other. It must be filled; it must be bridged. It is the only remnant of an otherwise destroyed social caste; it is un-American to the core. One American is as good as another, especially when he is fighting for the liberty and freedom of the world. In Europe at an American Army headquarters I saw American soldiers—our fighting men, men we have sent across the sea to fight for our civilization—strong, husky, virile American soldiers, brushing and polishing the boots of American Army officers. Such a practice ought by every rule of decency and respect for the uniform be driven from the Army. [Applause.]

Its only result is lessening the morale of our troops, for it strikes at the very center of manly social equality, the basis of any army raised from the people of a democracy. The work of a body servant should never be permitted to be performed by a soldier wearing the uniform of our Army of the Republic. If I had the power, that practice would be stopped before sundown. The idea of a young, virile American soldier doing this body service for any man, whoever he be, is repulsive to every sense of American manhood.

An officer should be an associate, a teacher, a leader of his men. If he feels himself too good to be a companion, too indifferent or stupid to teach, and has not the born native quality of leadership, he is unfit to be an officer of any rank, and the quicker he is out of the Army the better for the service.

From the very outskirts of Paris, bending in a southern bow, generally along the watershed between the rivers Seine and Marne, eastward to Verdun, thence southeastwardly nearly to the Switzerland frontier are the battle fields or succession of fields collectively known as the battle field of the Marne.

These are beautiful parts of France—not more beautiful than others—perhaps not so beautiful as some, for all of France is beautiful. The fields of Marne, or the front between Paris and Verdun, now shows little trace of battle. The French peasant was in his fields, following an accepted but some extravagant figure of speech, before the smoke had passed away. His plow followed verily the salvaging corps of the army. All is now in cultivation, as only the French know how, a present beautiful landscape of green fields, pastures, and brooks. Here a ruined village, there and over yonder others. All was ruin after the battle. The ruins stand, as the man power of France is otherwise more profitably employed than to rebuild. Highways are restored, railways reconstructed, until now save the ruins of the village and the rumble of lorries and steam trains one would little guess that here was fought the deciding battle of civilization.

But on the Somme all is different. For a whole day we rode in that great battle field where the Briton crossed his sword with the German. The Somme takes rank as the greatest battle of them all, and next to the Marne, the greatest in results. That field now is just as the battle left it, save the work of the salvaging corps. Barbed-wire entanglements by the thousands of miles, row after row, woven from post to post like a wretched lace; trenches by miles of equal thousands; dugouts and bomb-proof caves burrowed in the chalk beds still intact with the steps leading down, still usable. These were the abiding places of the Germans where they stopped their retreat from the Marne and "dug themselves in." Here the British drove them out after the most intense and unmerciful bombardment ever known in warfare, and by wave upon wave of men charging and completing the havoc not even yet ended by the shells.

Shell craters and bomb pits scarred the country like pox marks, until it seems as though the ground could receive no more. Here and there a pit, one was 60 feet deep, where had stood a hill honeycombed with Germans, and blown into an actual cavity by thousands of tons of powder—the work of the industrious British sapper. On another eminence stands a high cross marking the spot where the South African expeditionary forces won their glorious victory. On the cross is inscribed the names of those who fell in the charges. This spot is known as the Butte of Warlencourt, and from its rising to a length of perhaps 50 feet commanded a view for miles around. It, therefore, was a spot of bitter fighting and was won and held only when the endurance of mankind—of the German—had reached and passed its limit. This spot is now inclosed in a crude fence with a sign posted that it is reserved to the French Government. Some day a monument will crown that bloody summit, erected to the valor of the Britons who came out of Africa. An unburied German was sleeping out his eternity in a shell crater near the fence beside his gun and twisted bayonet. Graves, graves! The soldier buried where he fell. The whole landscape dotted with crosses on each of which is recorded the name, company, regiment, date, and then the words "killed in action." As far as the eye could reach, these crosses—lonely sentinels—peeped up their melancholy tips above the weeds and bramble. Cities and villages within the range of the Somme, all are wrecks. Everything chaos, not a soul living in the dozens and dozens through which we passed, which before the war swarmed with a happy and contented people. Never was there more awful ruins. Houses half standing, shot to tatters; others leveled to the ground. No home, no people! God only knows their present abiding place. Many were carried off by the Germans. The old men and women only left behind. Plunder and destruction everywhere, and just as far as the eye could reach one unbroken stretch of unearthly desolation. Shell craters so close, so deep that it seems as though the earth was churned into foam; the second shell cavity filling the first, the third the second, and so on, until the fall of steel covered the landscape as thickly as the dew. How a human being endured this deluge seems a mystery.

The Battle of the Somme lasted a full month in one place or another along its 80 miles of front. At the end the field was won, and the flag of Britain waived in triumph. Is it any wonder that during that month, where every hour was a horror—for German shells were coming in the proportion of 2 to 3—that men were struck dumb, with motion permanently lost? The inferno of wild confusion and tumult was more than the human senses could withstand. The nerves of the body can endure no such excess, and men stood like wooden figures, with the muscles locked, unable to stir. We saw them in the Red Cross Military Hospital of London being taught how to walk. Long rows of men in that great human salvaging institution leaning, sitting, lying prone in bed, with another army of operators, with all kinds of appliances, trying to nurse a benumbed arm, leg, spine, or hand back to life and usefulness. The Somme set the German back from to 30 and in some places 40 miles. The French were in that battle, too, but the British are entitled to the honor of the victory. It was in this battle that the world-famous Cathedral at Rheims was shattered, but afterwards deliberately wrecked.

The line to-day is bare 2 miles away, and guns are pounding away with engine-beat regularity.

We visited the cathedral. The aged but steadfast Cardinal Lucon came to greet us and bid us welcome to his stately wreck. It is questionable whether it can ever be restored; great holes in the roof, walls in places shattered, while the tiled floor is piled high with débris. Little aisles cleared permits one to walk about, but part is roped off for fear of falling material. The pillar against which Joan of Arc stood when she crowned the King of France is undamaged, likewise the bronze equestrian statue standing near the entrance.

Bapaume, Combles, La Paines, Soissons, Fenura, Peronne, Albert, and a score of substantial cities all in ruins. The same story of desolation marks everywhere the course of the German retreat. God knows France has suffered, but she can bear it better when the German is being driven from her soil.

At Arras we heard the first music at the war front. A couple of Scotch detachments were countermarching, with two pipers at the head of each column—war-begrimed Scotties—but the Highlander had the same old step we have so often seen. He was still a Scot.

No bands, no flags, no jests amongst the soldiers. One can pass a moving column of thousands of men and not hear a sound save the thud, thud, thud of the heels as they strike the bed of the roadway. Miles of loaded lorries hurrying to the front and scurrying back, soldiers afoot, cavalry, artillery, ambulances dashing and screaming the right of way, all this and more gives little time for anything but war.

It is the German prisoners' job to keep the highways in repair. Thousands of them, big, listless, sullen fellows, shoveling, scraping, tamping, but from my observation not bursting with enthusiasm nor falling by exhaustion. If he was given his liberty with a basket of provisions, he would locate the front and strike out in the opposite direction. He has had enough of war.

We went into Amiens, a city of upwards of a hundred thousand, occupied by the Germans as they deployed down through France from Belgium on the way to Paris. Not a building destroyed, the civil government was not even disturbed, except a German military governor was superior. They expected to keep it; hence they saved it. But after the Marne they struck quicker for cover, and consequently that city with its cathedral, second only to that of Rheims, shows no traces of invasion—queer fortune of war.

While at the British front we were their guests at a beautiful chateau in the northeast of France, officially known as the American Visitors' Chateau. Here in its peaceful solitude—for the topography of the country seems to deaden the roar of distant guns—one's only glimpses of war are the flashes across the night sky.

At Vimy Ridge, where the Forty-fourth Canadians were the stars of the battle, we had a clear view of miles of first-line trenches. Little lines, looking for all the world like ribbons from our eminence, showed where the British and German first-line trenches were not a hundred yards apart. Big British batteries speaking from sheltered banks reminded us of Verdun, and, like Verdun, not a soldier was to be seen. The feeling is almost uncanny to look over a landscape and know a hundred thousand men are well within the range of vision, but still not a soul could be detected even with powerful glasses. Man can hide more securely than the wolf. Aeroplanes, circling like great hawks, were marking the German lines, and German guns were busy.

The British victory at Vimy placed the German trenches in the lower land, and, as a British officer said, "We will let the boche have the mud this winter."

In the region of Vimy is the mineral belt of northeastern France. Coal dumps, vast ones, could be seen down through the valley behind the German lines. Some, however, were gained by the British advance.

In Belgium, or rather what is left of it, we had our only opportunity to go into the first-line trenches. It was in the Dixmude sector. We remained all night at La Panne, on the Channel, where both the roar and the flash of the guns run throughout the night. It is worse about 5 in the morning. We caught only snatches of sleep, and at 4.30 were up and off for the trenches. We arrived at the entrance of the communicating trench at daylight, when bearers were bringing out the night's total of dead and wounded. We passed a dead soldier—just killed—being wheeled out, and our Belgian officer remarked, "Poor fellow, he will fight no more." The wounded were being carried to the field hospital aside the trench we were traveling. Big shells were screeching over our heads and small guns popping down the line. We were in the zone of actual war and in its midst. On we went down our trench, past the third and second line trenches, and, after interminable zigzagging, arrived at the front or first line, with the Germans 30 yards—90 feet—away. One could not help dodging as the shells passed over. One landed within a hundred feet and blew out a hole in the soft ground at least 15 feet in diameter and perhaps 10 deep. Shrapnel was bursting in the air far above; our helmets were the only protection from falling or flying fragments. The land was low and wet—mud everywhere. The "duck boards" in the trench bottom alone made it possible to pass along. While at the intersection it became apparent we were observed. Machine guns opened up from every angle, and snipers became busy from outlying points. Bullets were whistling close over our heads, which, by the way, were now down below—far below—the normal. It was simply common sense to follow the example of our Belgian officer and pay heed to his directions. A couple of Belgian sharpshooters prone on their bellies, half crawling and half floating, looking all the world like serpents, were making their way down a shallow ditch. It was a weird sight, these men in the soft mud making their way to a point of vantage where they could pick off a German sniper not so thoroughly blended with the earth. It became a bedlam; hotter and hotter came the fire, until it was foolhardy to remain longer; so we, still crouching, retraced our steps and finally zigzagged out of range. We had remained there quite long enough to realize that in the front-line trenches is no place for a nervous man. The wonder is that our party escaped, for we were not only in the direct range of rifle and machine-gun fire but easily within range of the trench mortars. We had seen and heard our fill of front-trench life, though I must say not a man of our party regretted our experience.

This is a grim and awful war. Our people, I am afraid, have not yet grasped a full conception of the task we are in. Our participation means that we shall pay the price in the same coin that France and England have been paying for upward of three years—the best of our blood, the bravest and truest of heart. [Applause.]

The morale of the French Army was personally one of the wonders of my journey. We all know that France is war worn, she is weary. What nation of 40,000,000 would not be, with two and a half millions of her virile manhood killed, hopeless cripples, or captured? But that is far from being in despair, as some would picture. We, or at least I, did not see a ragged, ill-nourished soldier in France. Every one, and we saw thousands and thousands, were well nourished, well clad, healthy, and, above all, determined. No other thought than victory enters into his mind. He knows he can kill a German man to man, he knows he is the better soldier; this is the basis of the wonderful morale. What I have said of the French I can repeat of the English. The morale there is splendid. Let me pay a tribute to the Canadian as "the wild man of the allies." We heard distinct personal praise of him, and with him the Australian, the New Zealander, and the Scotch. I can not overlook the Welsh and the Irish, they have so often brought home the palm of victory that such is the almost settled order of things. Then the British troops from "'ome"—the wheel forces of their army. Never known to fall back when the order is to advance.

Let me pay my profoundest respect to the American Red Cross. Our people know generally of its great work, both on and back of the battle front, but if they could see it as it daily goes on over there they would salute those bars of red wherever it may be floating next after the flag of our country and with the same respect. Then the Y. M. C. A.—the builder and helper of men—its activities are everywhere. Helping, encouraging, and adding efficiency to American arms. Its field is as broad as humanity, its scope pure and undefiled religion. Help it and you help all mankind. The Knights of Columbus will soon be in the field with an organization equally as beneficent.

It requires no sage to tell us this war will be fought out and ended on the western front between Switzerland and the North Sea. Any other view would do violence to every sense of necessary military location. It is self-evident. To the east is the very heart of Germany. To the west that of France, each parrying for a death thrust. It is unthinkable that the war will end elsewhere. At first there were two fronts, the east and the west. That of the east has now disappeared—swallowed up in intrigue—and no one thinks of Russia. The reason is all the stronger for the western front to be the grand final theater. The campaigns into Serbia, Roumania, and Italy are all secondary or of less importance. Every act, every move of Germany when analyzed displays the acceptance of this idea. The campaign into Serbia was so timed as to counterbalance the stern fateful German reverses on the western front, and it did, in a certain measure, act as a compensating factor. There is a psychology in war, and it is important. The campaign in Roumania the same. After defeat on the major front Germany launches into minor fronts, and so far has won, carrying out this same psychology. Taking defeat on the western front as a cause, the change to another or secondary front is the effect. When the western front crumbles the basis of these secondary fronts will be manifest. The campaign in Italy follows the same law, it is ever present. As a corrollary to the accepted fact that the western front is to be the deciding factor, these secondary campaigns are inaugurated also as undertakings to toll off or divert through apparent necessity large numbers of troops from the western front, thereby to weaken it. The campaign in Italy is partially on that order.

If Italy can establish and hold a line, wherever it may be, with no great strategic spot in German control, and hold the morale effectiveness of her armies, there could be no graver military mistake than for the allies to send vast troops into Italy with the purpose in view of a counter offensive and regaining the lost territory. Such a mistake might precipitate consequences too awful to relate. It would be the multiple of the ill-starred and blundering Dardanelles campaign early in the war and the equally unfortunate offense by the allies in Serbia one year ago. Every energy should be husbanded and expended on the western front.

While we have seen the correlation of cause and effect in the Dardanelles and Serbian campaigns, we can also trace the military basis for the German offense in Italy. It was twofold: First, from a military point of view, to meet and compensate the coming of America into the war; and, second, political—for political, psychological reasons.

We made inquiry at every point concerning atrocities inflicted upon the Belgians, especially upon the children, by the German soldiers.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. HICKS. I think the Members would all be interested in having the remains of Belgium pointed out, showing how small it is.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes. That little angle down through there [indicating on map] is the Kingdom of Belgium.

We were told of many apparently reliable instances where such atrocities were inflicted; but I for one, and I think the most of our party, received no substantial proof that Belgian children were mutilated as any part of a military system or that it generally was practiced under military direction or sanction.

As for atrocities inflicted upon women and girls, it is my belief that not the quarter nor the eighth has ever been told. When this war is over and the truth becomes known I am convinced that the number and character of unspeakable crimes inflicted upon the defenseless women of Belgium and France will astonish, even horrify, the world.

To our ambassadors, the Hon. Walter H. Page, at the court of St. James, and to the Hon. William G. Sharp, at Versailles, and to the Hon. Brand Whitlock, for Belgium, we are indebted for many courtesies and every assistance. We are all, I think, loud in our praise of these our energetic and able representatives to the countries we visited.

From events past and present, from the very history of the war, its strategy and comprehensive plans, the battles, and the present position at the front, the effectiveness of the German military establishment has passed its turning point. These must convince the understanding of any fair-minded man that the pendulum of fate is swinging on the arc adverse to the German cause. I shall not enter upon any discussion of the relative conditions of the financial, commercial, and industrial institutions of the contending forces upon which the effectiveness of the armies wholly depend.

The carefully planned and stupendous maneuver of the German Army into France; the crushing of the heroic little kingdom of the Belgians; the meeting of two civilizations on the field of the Marne; the hurling back of the mighty German armies by which our civilization was saved; the demonstration of the paradox that the less is more powerful than the greater and thereby that the science of military strategy is not the science of applied mathematics; all these are matters of history. Years full of disappointment and sorrow for the peoples east of the Rhine, full of glory and sadness for those to the west; years when the soil of Europe ran deep with her best of blood; when governments founded upon a conception of freedom and free institutions seemed to be passing over the summit with a strange and new order of things or civil chaos as the landscape of the future; all these have long filled the mind of mankind. He has drank deep of the cup of serious thought.

The great task now before our civilization, the duty of the world or those of us who believe in free institutions, is to fight out and win this war. It seems strange that in our age and generation the forms of government of mankind should have come to the parting of the ways. But thus they have, until now there are two pathways, one a return to the ancient military autocracy based upon a strange subtle philosophy, the other that course where free thought, speech, and action is the heritage of the future.

There never was a time in our history when every citizen should bend every energy to accomplish this latter glorious end. There never was a time when every thought should be so centralized. There never was a time when every official of our Government should go about his duties with eyes open and ears primed ready to see or hear things of value in support of the cause. In other words, it is the clear duty of every man, every woman, every child to contribute something more or less, according to capacity, to win this conflict that peace and freedom may not pass forever from the earth.

How long will this war continue? No one knows. What will be our part? My answer is: What would naturally be the part of a young and virile nation unlimited in man power, unmatched in resources? How will it end? My answer is: In victory and glory for the allies. [Applause.]

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Which army has the numerical supremacy on the western front?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. That is a question I can not answer, and I think no living human being can answer that question. We do not know what the German Army is. We do not know exactly what the numbers of the French and British are.

Mr. REAVIS. How many soldiers have we in France?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. That is something that no American is permitted to know that I have heard of.

Mr. REAVIS. Everybody else knows it, do they not?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I do not know how they know how many we have. They know where they are. I do not know how many we have in France.

Mr. REAVIS. Was your congressional party at American headquarters where you could see the American soldiers and talk with them?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Oh, yes.

Mr. REAVIS. What is the feeling and disposition of the American soldiers in France?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Very buoyant, determined, and in fine spirits, but quarreling with the mail service. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. How does the American soldier compare with the French and British soldier in appearance and fighting capacity?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. That is something that is a matter of personal judgment. You take a young man 20 years old, put him three years in the war, and he looks as though he was 30. It ages a man. I am partial to the American soldier. I think the American soldier is the greatest soldier in the world, and in this war France must look well to her honors. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman state the number of French soldiers actually on the firing line?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I can not. The French line has a basis of 10,000 men to the mile

Mr. COX. And how many miles are there on the front?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I can not say; the line is very irregular. Of course, they are not all active, but there are many of them in reserve.

Mr. COX. How many soldiers has England?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I do not know, but it is an immense army. I may say right here that both the French and British Governments only regretted that there were not 110 Members of Congress in the party instead of 10.

Mr. COX. One more question. I am trying to get some information—and this is one of the most interesting speeches I have ever heard—how much of the western line is held by France and how much by England?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I can not tell the gentleman exactly. That line is shifting; it shifts backward and forward. There is a small sector next to the channel, a few miles in extent, that is held by the French. Then below that is the Belgian. The presence of the small French sector next to the channel is quite a military curiosity. A British officer told me that that was going to be taken over by the Belgians. The Belgians act under the instructions of the British. But there is, as I say, a small French sector next to the channel which will be released and taken over by the Belgians. There are only a few of the Belgians, but they will fight until every one is dead, and the Belgians will be no more.

Mr. COX. Where is the division between the British territory and the French territory?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. At San Quentin. The French line is 325 miles long.

There are many things I would like to say, but one thing especially I want to say, and that is that France is very proud of her soldiers. A Frenchman believes that he has shown to the world that his blood is the reddest of the earth. He knows that in the war of 1870 Gravelotte, Sedan, and Metz were all stolen victories, and that he never had a chance. He knows that he is a good soldier, he knows that the world knows it, and all France is proud of her soldiers. But let me tell you one thing, and I want all to remember it, and I wish every American would remember it, and that is that it is the private soldier that is the ideal of France. [Applause.] It is not the officer. They treat an officer simply as an incident to an army. It is the private that is the ideal of France. He is the man that goes under the gun, he is the man that must do the charging, he is the man that must do the suffering, he is the man that goes over the top, and he is the man that must do the dying. If he goes anywhere in France and knocks at the door of a home, and they ask who is there, he says, "A soldier of France." The door is opened, and he knows that he is welcome to the best. The busy housewife opens the door to her larder, and he knows that he is welcome there. He does not say he is an officer of France. You will see the French soldier, the colonel, the captain, the corporal, the sergeant, and the private sitting side by side at the table. [Applause.]

You will see the colonel telling his captain what the plan is for to-morrow and the objective of the morrow's fighting. You will see him telling his lieutenant, his corporal, his sergeant, his private, until every man in the French Army knows exactly what the objective of the morrow is just as well as the colonel for each regiment. They practice the democracy of their institutions, the practical application of it, which is that one man is just as good as another; and I believe that if we could instill that spirit into the American Army we would go far toward increasing its efficiency. [Applause.] If the officer in the American Army is too proud to associate with his men or too stupid to teach them, or too indifferent, he is unfit to be an officer, and the quicker he is out of the service the better. I saw things in France that I do not like to talk of; but I saw fighting men that we sent over there, men sent by the United States, young, virile Americans, red blood in every one of them, whom we paid to go to France to fight the battles of civilization, some of them blacking the shoes of officers and burnishing them. That is destructive of the morale of any army, and more so, of course, of an army raised in a democracy like ours, where every man is supposed to be as good as his neighbor. We should instill some of these things into the American Army. It occurs to me that any officer who has a decent respect for the uniform of his army would not ask any soldier wearing the uniform of the Republic to become his body servant.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not a fact that the officers pay these men to do these things and that the men gladly do them?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes, it is; but he should not be permitted to pay them. If the officer wants a body servant, he should get him from some other source and he should not be a man wearing the uniform of the Army of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there a reserve of French citizens left in France from whom to recruit and replenish their army?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. The man power of France is pretty well exhausted. It naturally would be exhausted with a nation of 40,000,000 people that has lost two and a half million of her virile manhood, either in hopelessly wounded, injured, or dead. She is tired, she is weary, she is worn, but she is determined. I do not know how many there are in the next class coming out, but the proudest moment of a French boy's life is when he is old enough and strong enough to put on the uniform of a soldier of France and go to the front. That kind of morale will take an army any place.

Mr. QUIN. How many miles are the French or the English lines now from the Rhine?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I could not tell the gentleman how far, but it is a long way, and there is many a hard fight ahead before we reach there. It is my belief that before the German Army retires from the French or Belgian soil it will be crushed and beaten, and that from there on victory will be swift and great. I do not know how far it is from the Rhine, but the gentleman can look at the war front as it is to-day, Dixmude in Belgium; Rheims, 2 miles back of it, in France; the Verdun sector; and the French hold considerable of Alsace, a small sector. The Rhine is over there; it is a long way.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Could the gentleman give us any information as to the completeness of the equipment of the American Army?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. The American Army, and I understand it is not a military secret, is to be equipped with small arms similar to the British—the Enfield rifle. The field gun, field artillery, is to be the French 75, which, I understand, is to be made in France. It seems strange that the French 75 is the most efficient field gun ever constructed.

Mr. COX. What is the size of that in inches?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. It is 75 millimeters, or 2.95 inches, practically a 3-inch gun. Then there is the 105, the second gun in efficiency, which is a 4-inch gun.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to ask if the gentleman while there had opportunity to observe the condition of the civilian population of France, whether or not they suffer?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. England and France both are drinking from the cup of war. England is dark at night; London is, and so is Paris, except here and there a shaded street light will cast a slanting ray down on the cosmopolitan scene, where may be found every uniform of the allies. You have but to place out your hand to touch the uniform of some nation of the allies.

As to foodstuffs, we had no difficulty. There is a shortage of sugar in both England and France. Now, we have had a talk on the meat question and a discussion about steaks being cheaper in London and Paris than in America. Now, you do not want to go over to France and expect to get the kind of a steak there that you can get in America. The American steak, sirloin or tenderloin, would make three or four portions of the British or French steaks. The portion of the meat is small, but the price is about the same, and in some instances less, but you can not compare the steaks over there with the steaks here, because the American steak is so much larger. There is no shortage of foodstuffs that we could see. You could go into a restaurant and order your meal, except sugar. They have certain meatless days, I believe a sort of a rule like we have. They have a limitation in the better hotels as to the number and kinds of meat they will serve. You can order one kind of meat and no more. The population looks well fed and well nourished.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will yield, I was told last winter that the average home in France had no heat at all and they went without fires. Does the gentleman know anything about that this winter?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Coal is $50 a ton in Paris. Our very efficient ambassador in Paris, Mr. Sharp [applause]—and I want to pay a compliment right here to the American ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary in England, Dr. Page [applause]; to Mr. Sharp, a former Member of this body, in France; and to Mr. Brand Whitlock in Belgium. We met them all, splendid men and doing efficient service. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing as part of my statement a detailed statement of expenditures made by the Committee of Public Information, together with a statement showing the activities of that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to extend his remarks in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Under a special order of the House the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is entitled to 40 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, the first and greatest problem before Congress relates to the winning of the war. All of the Government's resources are pledged to that end. Anything that serves to weaken or waste our resources will postpone success. All expenditures for war purposes last session were authorized by practically unanimous votes in both branches of Congress, and unprecedented amounts requested by the administration were willingly given by Congress without quibbling or questioning. That record, if need be, will be written again and again, but during the present crisis waste or extravagance with public moneys imperils success and ought to be emphatically condemned at the outset. With this purpose in view, attention is called to existing legislative conditions which necessarily occasion large waste of public funds and the immediate compliance with the President's request and early adoption of a budget system is urged.

Fathers and mothers have been called upon throughout the land to give their sons to their country and to provide war energy both in men and money at sacrifices known only to themselves. Young soldiers have offered their lives for their country's cause and in addition have contributed millions of dollars from their meager allowances through the purchase of Liberty Bonds with which to win the war. Wheatless and meatless days, sacrifices and privations, will be common to the people of this country for a generation to come; rigid economy must mark the problem of individual and governmental existence; billions of dollars annually will be borne hereafter in direct taxes for the first time in our history. From the opulent magnate, whose income-tax contribution attracts wide attention, down to the mother who pays 50 per cent increased postage in order to write to her son in the trenches, all will contribute. Wasted public funds at this time add to the unprecedented debt burdens which must be met and directly affect the life of a nation and may determine the success or failure of the war in which we are now engaged. When all others are practicing economy throughout the country will Congress abolish useless committees and thereby prevent extravagance and waste?

DEMAND FOR STRICT ECONOMY.

Enormous public expenditures are accompanied by an era of inflation and fictitious easy times. Every selfish agency that ordinarily pulls at the public purse now takes hold with a firmer grip and pounds at the congressional committees' doors more fiercely than ever before. However distant the relationship may be, it comes to us in the name of "war necessity," "to win the war," and similar catch phrases. Like an improvident man who has suddenly negotiated an unexpected loan, there are those who forget that every dollar expended must be paid by long sacrifice and that the stream of gold now passing through the Treasury must be more carefully guarded than ever before. Unless Congress takes warning in time and shuts down the flood gates against everything except strict war expenses, unless we profit in a public way by the example of sacrifice afforded by mothers, fathers, soldier boys, and practically every household throughout the country, unless we practice strict economy with public funds, we will be denounced by those we misrepresent and be driven from our posts.

Temporarily Congress has given free hand to the administration for all expenditures for war purposes. Necessity for quick, active, emergency payments is urged by the administration to justify such course, although other warring nations have challenged this unlimited exercise of power. Whatever justification may be urged for such course over war expenditures, all ordinary expenses of Government must be subject to well-recognized legislative checks. We are assuming stupendous national obligations, far beyond the wildest dreams of financiers in the past, together with annual fixed interest burdens that will soon reach several times the ordinary expenses of Government during the prewar period. Such a revolution in public business affairs calls for efficiency and strict economy in legislation that can be reached now only by adopting legislative safeguards which have been repeatedly repudiated by Congress in the past.

CONGRESSIONAL WASTE AND EXTRAVAGANCE.

Administrative waste is not the only charge against the Federal Treasury, although always a matter of chief concern to the legislative branch. Extravagance occasioned by congressional courtesy and locality demands confront us on every hand, and before we can effectively guard against administrative neglect we must be immune from criticism by sweeping our own dooryard clean. To do this effectually a comprehensive budget system must be adopted. Our's is practically the only Government without a budget, and no other country is so wasteful and unbusinesslike as our own. Reasonable care in business dealings is insufficient when the relation of guardianship and control of trust funds is once imposed. Great care must then be exercised. In its position of trustee of public funds Congress has not exercised great care or even ordinary care in the handling of these funds.

The fault lies primarily with the loose, multiplicity of committees which makes Congress the legitimate prey of every lobby and private interest to-day. Before discussing the critical need of public economy, as evidenced by rapidly mounting appropriations that no man can fully comprehend, it is well at the outset to give a list of governments that place a budget check at the door of public appropriations and thereby have promoted economy in public expenditures. The general features of this system, common to substantially all of these countries, are the preparation of the budget estimates by the executive branch of the government; their revision and consolidation by some central organization in the executive government; the submission of the budget to the legislative branch by the executive upon the authority and responsibility of the executive; the consideration of the budget as a single and unified bill by the legislative branch; the influence of executive responsibility for the demands of the budget causing the legislature to make few changes; the execution of the budget by the executive; an independent audit of the executive accounts.

For a more detailed comparative statement on foreign budgetary procedure see Need for a National Budget; Appendixes, House Document No. 854, Sixty-second Congress, second session, 1912; and Report and Appendixes of the Select Committee on House of Commons (Procedure), 1915 (cd. 378).

The following countries have a budget system: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxemburg, Mexico, Montenegro, Netherlands, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Salvador, Serbia, Siam, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Union of South Africa, Uruguay, Venezuela.

The only great nation excepted from the foregoing list, a democracy that vainglioriously challenges the admiration of the world for its form of government, is the United States.

A budget system may not insure strict economy without careful public administration, but at its worst it is infinitely better than the loose-jointed, hit-and-miss lack of system with which Congress now invites public extravagance.

A BUDGET SYSTEM TO BE RECOMMENDED BY A COMMISSION.

Any substantial change must be brought about by joint action of both Houses of Congress, and through the adoption of rules and regulations that may be found practicable. To this end joint resolution No. 178 is offered, a copy of which is attached and in form is similar to Senate joint resolution 46, introduced by Senator KENYON last session. It provides for a commission made up from members of the administration and from both Houses of Congress, which commission is to make specific recommendations along the line advocated by both national political platforms. Other proposals have been made that are worthy of careful consideration, but this resolution suggests one course in order to secure united action at the outset.

Congress has a direct responsibility in creating national tax burdens that can not be evaded. Members will not refuse appropriations for carrying on the war, but when called upon to pay the bills the people will scrutinize all public expenditures. Every economy in public business that can be practiced and every safeguard that can be placed around the Federal Treasury is demanded. All questions of legislative prerogatives and legislative courtesy must give way before enormous and unprecedented burdens that are to be piled upon the backs of taxpayers. The political party that fails to grasp the full significance of this prophecy will be relegated to the background, because after the war is over, books balanced, and burdens distributed, the main question before the people, as ever in the past, will be, what account is rendered back to constituents by their Representatives? Death and taxes are certain and are serious questions to contemplate, but the average citizen does not give one-tenth of the time to preparing for the former which he devotes to his tax statements.

$100,000,000 ANNUAL WASTE IN 1910.

On February 21, 1910, in volume 45, No. 50, pages 2202 to 2203, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to use the librarian's reference, one of the ablest men in public life and legislative experience made the following statement in the United States Senate:

> If I were a business man and could be permitted to do it, I would undertake to run this Government for $300,000,000 a year less than it is now run for.

Criticizing our own loose congressional methods, he added that a saving of $100,000,000 a year could be readily effected. Senator Aldrich was hooted into silence by the slogan that "this is a rich country," "indirect taxes are not felt," and "what are we here for?" That cry was jocular seven years ago, back in 1910, when total Government expenditures were $660,000,000 and indirect taxes, including tariff and excise duties, paid all the tax burdens; but now, with diminished indirect taxes and direct taxes reaching ten times the total indirect burden of seven years ago, the cry is neither jocular nor safe to make. Proportionate savings could be realized in expenditures to-day by the same scrutiny proposed by Aldrich, which would possibly reach ten times the amount he declared could be saved; and these figures command respectful attention at the hands of Congress.

For example, efforts to save legislative and administrative waste were begun back in 1914 in two small functions of Government, the construction of public buildings and improvement of waterways. Omnibus bills carrying these items had become public scandals and flagrant waste was easy to demonstrate. I do not intend to discuss these measures at this time further than to say they are not the only extravagances charged against Congress. In an effort to demonstrate what could be saved to the Federal Treasury by ordinary principles of public economy on these two branches of expenditures, I quote briefly from remarks in debate on June 8 last, when these bills were being considered:

> While the river and harbor bill of 1914, appropriating $53,000,000, passed the House over vigorous opposition, that bill was defeated in the Senate and a substitute bill appropriating $20,000,000 was passed, a saving to taxpayers of $33,000,000 in that one bill. The bill that followed in 1915 appropriated nearly $40,000,000, and when opposed in the House you laughed again at the presumption. It was also defeated in the Senate and a $25,000,000 substitute was passed. * * * Over $47,000,000 was saved to taxpayers by the modifications secured in these two bills. * * * The next bill, of 1916, again passed the House with 133 votes against it and was put through the Senate with only 1 vote to spare. The river and harbor bill early in 1917 was again forced through the House with 132 votes against it, but that bill was buried in the Senate, together with a bill which passed the House at the same time for $38,000,000 for construction of public buildings. Over $100,000,000 has been saved to the Government and to taxpayers by the defeat of these four bills and no legitimate public interest has been injured.

The RECORD will disclose my own judgment on such bills.

Results speak for themselves, and all the wasteful legislation above mentioned first passed the House in omnibus bills recommended by special committees.

The remedy for waste must not come through personal controversies on the floor over specific items, but through a change in system, which has been repeatedly urged upon the House. Speaker CLARK, protesting against interruption of legitimate business, urged the House to seek some remedy, and, in view of the overwhelming war disaster which has come to the world with its enormous burdens, the time is ripe for a change in present wasteful methods of appropriating public funds.

PARTY PLATFORMS DEMAND A BUDGET SYSTEM.

A public demand that can not be ignored confronts the House at this time. The party in power has demanded a change and pledged every member of the majority party to that change when in its platform in St. Louis in 1916 it declared:

> We demand careful economy in all expenditures for the support of the Government, and to that end favor a return by the House of Representatives to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee chosen from its membership, in order that responsibility may be centered, expenditures standardized and made uniform, and waste and duplication in the public service avoided. We favor this as a practicable first step toward a budget system.

President Wilson now demands a fulfillment of that pledge.

That Democratic platform was written after public extravagance had been demonstrated repeatedly on this floor and before present huge war burdens were laid upon the taxpayers of the country. The convention pledged this Congress to adopt a single Appropriations Committee proposition as a step toward a national budget system.

Pursuant to that promise Mr. FITZGERALD, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, offered House resolution 157, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, which provides—

> That during the present emergency all appropriations shall originate in and be reported from a single committee, and all estimates for the support of the various governmental establishments shall be referred to said committee.

His resolution further provides that no other committee shall be permitted to avoid this provision by permitting amendment to bills reported. Mr. FITZGERALD'S resolution reads, "during the present emergency," but there was no restriction as to time suggested by the Democratic national convention. It demanded a single Appropriations Committee for all time. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. FITZGERALD, when discussing extravagance and his party's record in recent years, said to the House:

Whenever I think of the horrible mess that I shall be called upon to present to the country on behalf of the Democratic Party, I am tempted to quit my place. * * * If I placed my political fortunes above my sworn duty under the law, I would not attempt to carry out the promises of the Democratic platform, but I would place myself at the head of this band of Treasury looters upon every occasion.

With that indictment of legislative greed and pursuant to that threat Chairman FITZGERALD has resigned his seat in Congress, a distinct loss to the House and to the country. He was condemning a bad system and not the personal integrity of men.

This very afternoon the distinguished Speaker of this House [Mr. CLARK of Missouri] and ex-Speaker CANNON have united with Leaders KITCHIN and GILLETT, Democrats and Republicans, in paying high and deserved tribute to Mr. FITZGERALD, who has been fitly described as one of the very strongest men in the House. A great student of finance and public affairs second to none, Mr. FITZGERALD has this day declared:

I have repeatedly urged that all the appropriation bills be consolidated in one committee. When I had no thought of quitting this body I made the statement I would willingly retire as head of the Committee on Appropriations and from the committee to bring about this reform. * * * I am glad the President has made this recommendation. I believe it the most important reform that this House can adopt. * * *

No higher authority can be quoted than Mr. FITZGERALD, who to-day resigns from this body.

NUMEROUS COMMITTEES AND CHAIRMANSHIPS INVITE WASTE.

An indefensible legislative situation emphasizes the imperative need of a single committee and budget system at this time. Every committee that presents appropriation bills increases the opportunity for extravagance, because of its lack of responsibility. It promotes unnecessary expenditures in the legislative field; it assumes to cover and advances locality appropriations, and they were more in evidence during last session of Congress than during any previous session. Many expenditures have been made as "war measures," and nearly every locality appropriation masquerades under that alluring catch phrase. No attempt will be made to criticize war expenditures or to point out where millions of dollars are being directly or indirectly expended in locality appropriations, but an astounding legislative situation invites such results.

By a peculiar legislative custom every important committee and every one of these many appropriation committees has for its chairman a Representative from some Southern State, with controlling influence and legislative vision which can not ignore the fact that 90 per cent of Federal revenues are derived from the North, yet determination of appropriations and expenditures is controlled by the South.

Sectionalism is not raised by political preachments but is emphasized by legislative and administrative acts, and permanent economic reform will hold the majority party to account, not for present extravagances, as described by Mr. FITZGERALD, but for failure to keep party promises by enacting a national budget system.

MOSS-COVERED LEGISLATIVE METHODS.

In the expressive language of one of the ablest of the majority leaders of the House, 147 different arguments will be offered against all committee reforms, whether pledged by party platforms or a President's warning, because one appropriation committee would abolish some 147 or more appropriation committee jobs. May it not fairly be charged that Hawthorne's house with seven moss-covered gables has been reincarnated in the National Capitol twenty-one fold.

The remarkable spectacle is witnessed of a score of able democratic leaders whose voices were raised in enthusiastic praise of the President's ability and far-sighted judgment disclosed by the recent message, and these leaders yet maintain silence on the President's important recommendation for a single appropriation committee. Not one Member defends what the President terms the "wasteful and extravagant" system now in vogue, nor will one Member defend violation of specific party platform pledges in this respect, yet our friends across the aisle who recently voiced their approval of their leader's message now sit tight, with all of the various appropriation committee chairmanships and memberships corralled. The resignation of Chairman FITZGERALD of the Appropriations Committee and his refusal to accept further responsibility for "Treasury looting" should impress every Member of the House at this time with the necessity for quick action.

I will quote equally high Republican authority later on to show that quest of loaves and fishes is not confined to either side of the aisle. The fundamental weakness in the present system is economic, not political, and both parties have much to explain in past records that would have been obviated under a budget system.

A REPUBLICAN PLATFORM PLEDGE IN 1916.

If you do not now enact a budget system, my Democratic friends, the chance will come to the Republicans, who were pledged at Chicago in 1916 at their last national convention, in the following words:

The increasing cost of the National Government and the need for the greatest economy of its resources in order to meet the growing demands of the people for Government service, call for the severest condemnation of the wasteful appropriations of this Democratic administration, of its shameless raids on the Treasury, and of its opposition to and rejection of President Taft's oft-repeated proposals and earnest efforts to secure economy and efficiency through the establishment of a simple, businesslike budget system to which we pledge our support and which we hold to be necessary to effect any real reform in the administration of national finances.

Every Republican Member of this House is pledged to the enactment of a budget law and with every Democrat is in honor bound to vote for his party's pledge.

It would be presumptuous for me to attempt any thorough treatment of the financial waste occasioned by our present legislative machinery or to enter into details regarding a budget system for this country. Those who desire to study the budget system abroad and our own financial weakness because of short-sighted political considerations, may get light from familiar contributions, including Collins on "The National Budget System and American Finance," Lowrie on "The Budget," Ford on "The Cost of our National Government," Adams on "Public Debts," Bastable on "Public Finance" (English), Stourm on "The Budget" (French), and a dozen other instructive publications that have been written on the subject and which the average legislator can only hastily digest.

In a clear, comprehensive work on the budget system, Collins says:

Turning to Congress we face a situation without parallel in the world. Here we can not speak of a budget, but of separate and independent bills drawing on the Treasury. These bills are prepared by about 14 independent committees of the House and 15 of the Senate—29 separate committees, each working independently of each other and of the executive branch of the Government. Ten of these House committees and 8 Senate committees report out all of the bills carrying appropriations, but the other 11 (4 in the House and 7 in the Senate) report out measures for pensions, public buildings, and other things carrying demands on the Treasury, which are met by bills from one of the other committees. * * * In the United States—but nowhere else—the legislative branch of the Government actually prepares in detail every financial measure introduced.

After pointing out the illogical, haphazard methods controlling both Houses, he concludes on this branch of the subject:

The impossibility of a legislative financial policy is further seen in the fact that no one knows exactly what items of an appropriation act will finally carry until after it has passed both Houses and has been signed by the President. * * * It is therefore quite clear that the preparation of bills drawing money out of the Treasury and the preparation of bills providing revenue to meet the expenditures are carried on without any financial policy at all, either executive or legislative.

Judged by ordinary business standards he might have added that such policy would bankrupt any private business in one week.

Ford, on "The cost of our National Government," describing another ailment evidenced in public discussions as to responsibility, says:

Congress habitually disclaims responsibility for the results of the methods it employs. Responsibility is shifted from the House to the Senate or from Congress to the Executive or even to the mass of the people. * * *

While Congress is fond of viewing with alarm the increase in the cost of Government, it keeps augmenting it by continual efforts to extend congressional patronage by means of appropriations.

INSTANCES OF WASTE OF PUBLIC MONEY.

In Ford's work he takes up river and harbor, public building, navy yards, and other appropriations and quotes officials in opposition to public building raids on the Treasury and apologetic offerings for other local appropriations. On page 134, he quotes Postmaster General Meyer, who in 1909 said:

At the last session of Congress more than $20,000,000 were appropriated for the construction of public buildings for the exclusive use of post offices in the smaller cities and towns where the department had made no recommendation for new buildings.

Mr. Meyer further showed conclusively that increased maintenance will be a great continuing waste of money, and yet Congress put through that job without any recorded protest.

In this same connection a Georgia Senator said in debate:

I heard evidence the other day that demonstrated to my mind that we paid $50,000 for the construction of a building in a town where the rent of the building theretofore used was $250 per year and after the new building was constructed the services of a janitor cost $600 a year.

This criticism, it will be noted, does not name the town. Senatorial courtesy forbids any pointed reference or drastic action, but a hundred similar items were pointed out in the last public-buildings bill during the debate in the House when, on December 7, 1916, one of the worst public-building bills ever offered in Congress was analyzed, a twin sister of a vicious bill carrying $40,000,000 which had been previously passed under suspension of rules in 20 minutes. Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo's report was then presented, wherein he said:

In the past two decades Congress has authorized and appropriated approximately $180,000,000 for public buildings and the major part of this great sum has been expended on costly structures in small localities where neither the Government business nor the convenience of the people justified their construction.

Here is a statement from a high administrative official declaring that approximately $100,000,000 had been wasted by Congress on this single item. Last session the public-buildings bill so vigorously condemned by both the Treasury Department and Postmaster General and threatened with a presidential veto was forced through the House triumphantly by a two-thirds vote before it was buried in the Senate. The river and harbor bill was put through under the guise of a war measure although 7 members of the House committee and 152 votes in the House, counting pairs, registered a protest against it.

Referring again to the remarkable demonstration this afternoon for Mr. FITZGERALD, I quote from the words of Leader KITCHIN, uttered this day by one who weighs his words:

I sometimes fear that too many of our colleagues set up as the true measure of service here the amount of money which they can filch out of the Treasury into their districts and States for creeks or rivers or public buildings. FITZGERALD'S idea and effort has been to keep the money in the Treasury and not take it out except for the country's needs.

No higher tribute of public service need be uttered than this brief word of praise from one great man of another.

We can not well forget the trite remark of a present Member of the United States Senate, who said of a river and harbor bill in the past, "The whole scheme of river improvement is a humbug and steal; but if you are going to steal, let us divide it out and not go on complaining." The bills contain good and bad items held together by the present system. I have quoted so voluminously from expert criticisms on such bills in the past that I forego the disposition to do so now; but permit me to give one cogent reason why river and harbor bills have become notorious, a situation which will disappear with the adoption of a budget system.

LOBBIES THAT WOULD BE PUT OUT OF BUSINESS.

Of over $900,000,000 appropriated for rivers and harbors by the Government in the past, hundreds of millions have been wasted on useless waterways, insignificant creeks, private land-reclamation schemes, water powers, and other projects that had little or no relation to commerce. Estimates will differ as to the total waste, but if needed improvements had been carried on economically and on strictly commercial propositions over one-half of the total amount appropriated might have been saved without injuring any real interests of navigation. This should be kept in mind, in addition to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that over one-half of the $180,000,000 appropriated for public buildings could well have been saved in the past with advantage to the Government, apart from everlasting continuing appropriations for maintenance.

As a notorious example of lobby interference, once strongly condemned by President Wilson, I call attention to one of the most scandalous features of this annual waterway bill, brought about by a river and harbor lobby which calls itself a "congress" and regularly meets in Washington at the opening of every Congress. That lobby maintains quarters in this city the year around. It seeks contributions from all those who desire local improvements, and from dredgers, contractors, from water-power and land-reclamation promoters, and, of course, from many reputable people who are attracted by its promises. I have offered in the RECORD in the past original documents showing that 50 per cent of some of its subscriptions were paid to collectors, which fairly indicates its general character. In a recent annual report this lobby set forth to its members just how Congress could be compelled to distribute pork, depending upon proportionate contributions to the lobby. As it has become a public scandal, fastening on Congress the opprobrium of being the lobby's tool, I append a statement for examination by those interested in knowing the best means of getting locality appopriations. It was published in the 1911 report of the lobby association.

	Amounts subscribed to the support of National Rivers and Harbors Congress, by States, 1906-1911, inclusive.	Amount of appropriations received by States in rivers and harbors bills, 1907-1911, inclusive.
Pennsylvania (east)	$4,295	$4,837,745
Connecticut	2,115	2,318,000
Massachusetts	2,850	1,451,733
Maryland	1,755	2,778,265
New Jersey	2,735	3,484,895
North Carolina	2,538	2,259,614
South Carolina	1,137	1,237,230
Virginia	4,306	4,382,451
Georgia	8,281	4,102,889
Florida	1,620	5,188,670
District of Columbia	1,530	1,243,000
Alabama	6,090	6,952,000
Louisiana	9,505	3,820,202
Texas	8,825	9,193,309
Mississippi River		21,842,775

Mississippi River (1914), $10,500,000, or nearly one-half of the six years' total.

Lay members learn that by the investment of $1 in the "congress" $1,000 will be forthcoming from the Federal Congress. "Capt." Ellison, official secretary of the "congress" lobby, is quoted by the same official organ to have evoked applause with the sentiment—

We send Congressmen here to legislate for the Nation theoretically, but actually to get all he can for us; and if he does not get our share and then some, we do our best to replace him.

This lobby, numbering hundreds of members, declares in its official report that a Congressman's usefulness is measured by the Treasury loot he brings home. Scores of lobbies that seek specific legislation by direct pressure and back-fires on Congressmen, will be put out of business by the adoption of a budget system.

GOVERNMENT BY COMMITTEES PRODUCES IRRESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT.

Ex-Speaker Reed, in an article contributed to the magazines in 1897, said:

It is true we have at present irresponsible government, so divided that nobody can tell who is to blame. Government by committees and of two Houses entirely independent of each other produces some fearful and wonderful results.

That was the opinion of an ex-Speaker of this House 20 years ago, before conditions had reached their present proportions and notoriety.

The power of the Senate to increase appropriations impressed Mr. Randolph, of Virginia, during the Constitutional Convention, who said:

The Senate will be more likely to be corrupt than the House of Representatives and should, therefore, have the less to do with money matters.

And yet the Senate defeated the river and harbor bills and public-buildings bill, to which reference was made.

Again Mr. Ford says, page 34:

The true seat of constitutional defect is not in the Senate but in the House. The supremacy of the Senate, now so conspicuous in politics, is a result of the weakness and incompetence of the House. * * * If it is true, as has been frequently alleged in the House, that the Senate pads appropriation bills at its own will and pleasure, practicing what Mr. CANNON describes as blackmail, the charge implies confession of failure on the part of the House to uphold its constitutional authority. It follows that the true way to reform the Senate is to reform the House.

We can not escape our own legislative responsibility by trying to unload extravagance and waste on to the other fellow's shoulders. Any reform must begin at home, and a first step toward that reform in conformity with the demands and pledges of two great political parties is a national budget system.

I have quoted Chairman FITZGERALD on present waste, let me quote now from his Republican predecessor, James A. Tawney, ex-chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, who in 1909 gave a public statement on this general subject wherein he says:

The difficulty in practice which the Committee on Appropriations has in keeping appropriations within the estimated revenues arises from the fact that when the several committees which have jurisdiction over the appropriations for a particular department * * * appropriate for expenditures out in the districts and States represented by Members of the House and Senate, the departments for which the appropriations are made can always rely upon the Representatives and Senators in whose districts and States these appropriations are to be expended to support almost any demand they make.

In plain English, both Senators and Representatives in order to get their share of State or district "pork" are charged by the former chairman of the Appropriations Committee with a willingness to support "almost any demand," providing they get their share in the log-rolling game. Mr. Tawney is in harmony with Mr. FITZGERALD, who condemns "Treasury looters."

Tawney, ex-Speaker Reed, ex-President Taft, and other Republican authorities condemn the present system.

With ex-President Taft declaring for a budget and President Wilson advocating a budget, and with Mr. FITZGERALD refusing to head a band of Treasury looters, and with Senator MARTIN, chairman of the Senate committee, recently declaring it is appalling to see the freedom with which money is being appropriated by Congress, and with both great political parties in convention demanding public economy and a budget system, the mountain labors hard to bring forth a feeble mouse resolution which provides that "during the present emergency" all appropriations shall be handled through one committee.

HOW THE COMMITTEES WORK.

Hundreds of cases can be recalled where failure to secure an appropriation by one committee will cause such proposals to go to another, and when all fail to grant relief, Senators then throw out the political life preserver to save the claim. One case is typical of many.

When the water-power interests secured the Chief of Army Engineers to recommend $18,700,000 for a 150-foot dam for the Alabama Power Co. at Muscle Shoals for navigation, the infamous proposal was exposed and defeated on the floor of the House in 1915, although unanimously reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee and actively supported by the then House Democratic leader and a powerful lobby. After this unprecedented defeat of an enormous private water-power grab which the Government was about to finance, and against a committee report, the same item bobbed up in the military bill on March 17, 1916, and will be found exposed in the RECORD of that day, excepting that the amount had then grown to $24,000,000 wherewith to bolster up the fortunes of the same Alabama Power Co., this time for the purpose of manufacturing nitrates for "war purposes," with the same powerful lobby on hand to urge such action. Incidentally a $100,000,000 bond issue depended upon the Government's action. I am making this statement from personal knowledge of and participation in the matter, as shown by the RECORD.

The measure came before the House with the unanimous indorsement of the Military Committee, and appeared as section 82 of the bill. Again it was exposed on the floor of the House and, after a vigorous fight, was stricken from the military bill. Thereafter it was inserted by the Senate as a fertilizing proposition in the Agricultural bill, and it is now reported that the Chief of Engineers has decided upon the project which was repudiated on two separate occasions by the House, indicating the impotency of Congress, compared to a man who annually determines the distribution of scores of millions of dollars appropriated by Congress. It is impossible to trace up vicious items among the different committees, excepting where they are large enough to bulge out in the bill, and for that reason it will be some improvement economically to have only one House Appropriations Committee.

EXPENSIVE COMMITTEE COURTESY.

Under the present loose system, however, this check would be of little actual value, providing the Appropriations Committee carries out the wishes of other committees as a matter of courtesy. Evidence of this fact occurs when a former distinguished chairman found no time to protest against three river-and-harbor bills and one public-buildings bill or to vote against the former, notwithstanding they were all fought vigorously in the House and finally defeated in the Senate, with a saving of over $100,000,000, as before stated. A more striking illustration of hopeless extravagance is found in the notorious "flood-control" bill, which, according to Army engineers, is expected to reclaim 20,000,000 acres of private lands along the lower Mississippi, at an ultimate cost to the Government of $225,000,000. The bill authorizing $45,000,000, at present recommended by the Flood Committee, was approved by the Appropriations Committee and an initial appropriation placed in the sundry civil bill to carry on a project that will be paid for by a war-tax burdened people during many years to come. One of the Senate Democratic leaders, a recognized authority on the subject, in debate declared the principal purpose of this bill was to reclaim large areas of swamp lands for private parties, and denounced it as part of the "spoils system," and yet it was adopted by the Appropriations Committee, which is proposed as a complete substitute for the budget system.

A single Appropriations Committee will be a step toward economy and toward a budget, as stated in the Democratic platform; but why make such a halting step? Why not take a long step and place this Government on a plane with the best legislative methods of other countries?

IMPERATIVE NEED OF BUDGET SYSTEM IMMEDIATELY.

Mr. Speaker, whatever differences of opinion may have existed prior to the declaration of war with Germany, they have all been buried with that decision made by Congress. The administration has been given practically unanimous support by all parties and all men in Congress, and every request for money and men have been granted. A striking example of patriotic support was evidenced in the unanimous vote declaring a state of war exists with Austria.

To win the war will require every resource, every economy, and united efforts from those who fight in the trench or on the battle field, from those who are compelled to economize at home, and in a greater degree from those who handle public finances.

I have briefly discussed a wasteful political system of handling appropriations that is fastened on Congress with leech-like hold. Authorities have been quoted, including Republican and Democratic Executives and party platforms, to show the exact situation; but in further support of this demand for a budget system a few statistics are offered that will soon be studied by taxpayers throughout the country. The President has swung the red lantern of danger so all may know a shifting of administrative responsibility is now declared on waste and extravagance over to the shoulders of Congress. We will be compelled to assume our full share of that responsibility. What is its measure?

In the tables offered the following facts are disclosed. Our national obligations of slightly more than $1,000,000,000 in 1916 will have increased over fiftyfold, or to $50,000,000,000, before a minimum estimate by Gen. Wood and other experts of three years of war is concluded. Our per capita burden will have increased fifty hundred per cent in three years and in actual experience the per capita burden will be far greater to 95 per cent of our people who are least able to pay the tax. The tables disclose that according to estimates a war lasting until 1920 will increase the world's indebtedness to approximately $250,000,000,000, apart from destructive losses of property, and that the economic loss of world man power by death and disability alone will reach nearly $100,000,000,000 more. This impoverishment that faces the world at large discloses a situation which immediately affects our ability to meet our own national and individual obligations. In the presence of these figures which presage the destruction of parties, change of governments, and repudiation of obligations by different countries now at war, what defense can be offered to an immediate demand for enactment of party platform promises in an effort to curtail the enormous waste and extravagance which now accompanies congressional appropriations.

I will not presume to offer any contribution at this time to the involved subject of national finances or to discuss any complex budget system, but will confine my remarks to well recognized public financial conditions which the world is called upon to meet, and to our own heavy share of the burden already beyond comprehension. Tables and comparisons are submitted evidencing the enormous taxes which will confront us at the end of the war and which call for public economy in advance.

Let us understand the extent of growing public expenditures and enormous financial burdens to be assumed at the close of the war. Over 20 years ago Bastable, the English financial authority, wrote:

> War and preparation for war are by far the heaviest charges on the resources of modern States. An enormous sacrifice of labor, power, and of commodities is inevitably caused by its persistence as a usage among modern nations. War has been the principal cause of the great state indebtedness so general in Europe and of the severe pressure of taxation.

If a severe pressure of taxation was universal 20 years ago, what will follow in the train of the present war? The growth of war expenditures will appear by comparing the four years' Civil War burden to our authorizations for one year of the present war and other tables here submitted.

Cost of American wars.

1812–1815, second war with Great Britain	$119,624,000
1846–1849, War with Mexico	173,298,000
1861–1865, Civil War (North)	4,015,019,000
1897–1900, Spanish-American War	2,101,926,000
1917–1918, one year's war appropriations and authorizations	10,640,000,000
1917–1919, estimated appropriations (2 years, all purposes)	50,000,000,000

The above statement represents the cost to our Government. An estimated cost to all the warring nations in other great wars of recent years discloses an equally enormous increase in the pending conflict over all others combined.

Cost of foreign wars.

Napoleonic wars, 1793–1815, 22 years	$6,250,000,000
Crimean War, 1853–1856, 4 years	1,700,000,000
Franco-Prussian War, 1870–1871, 2 years	3,500,000,000
South African War, 1900–1902, 3 years	1,250,000,000
Russo-Japanese War, 1904–1905, 2 years	2,500,000,000
Present great war, 1914–1917, 3 years	89,721,000,000

A few other statistics are well to keep in mind when considering the financial test that confronts the civilized world.

Cost of present European war[1] to August 1, 1917, and national wealth.[2]

	Cost.	Wealth.
Great Britain	$26,705,000,000	$85,000,000,000
France	16,530,000,000	50,000,000,000
Russia	14,250,000,000	40,000,000,000
Italy	5,050,000,000	20,000,000,000
United States	1,629,000,000	[3]187,731,000,000
Other allies	3,250,000,000
	67,414,000,000
Less loans of	7,992,500,000
Net total	59,421,500,000
Germany	19,750,000,000	80,000,000,000
Austria-Hungary	9,700,000,000	25,000,000,000
Bulgaria and Turkey	1,450,000,000	6,000,000,000
	30,900,000,000
Less loans of	600,000,000
Net total	30,300,000,000
	59,421,500,000
Total cost to Aug. 1, 1917	89,721,500,000

[1] From Official Bulletin, Oct. 9, 1917.
[2] The national wealth statistics are from New York Times Current History, November, 1915.
[3] United States wealth from Statistical Abstract, 1915.

One step further. The total debt burden of several of the warring nations before the war, according to the 1917 World Almanac, was as follows:

Debt burdens, 1914.

Great Britain	$5,673,374,000
France	6,347,540,000
Russia	4,536,939,000
Italy	2,921,153,000
United States	1,090,148,000
Germany	5,027,134,000
Austria and Hungary	3,897,894,000
Bulgaria and Turkey	1,870,000,000
Total prewar indebtedness	31,364,182,000

It is impossible to bring a definite debt report down to date, but one Government is typical of all, and in a statement made October 30, 1917, Bonar Law, chancellor of the exchequer, said that England had negotiated $28,460,000,000 in loans since the war began, and on September 29, 1917, their total national debt was between $24,500,000,000 and $25,000,000,000, less about $6,000,000,000 in loans and advances. The chancellor further said that the German Reichstag had passed votes of credit to date amounting to $23,500,000,000, exclusive of loans. To the sum total of ninety billions in round numbers expended during the present war up to August 1, 1917, may now be added in round numbers $20,000,000,000 appropriated by the United States for 1918, and presumably $30,000,000,000 average annual cost to the European powers named, with total expenditures of approximately $140,000,000,000 by June 30, 1918, over and above $31,000,000,000 in existing debts prior to the war, or a total of $171,000,000,000 to June 30, 1918. The present indebtedness of warring countries presumably is four or five times what it was before the war, as indicated by the statement of the English chancellor.

Providing the war continues for three years longer and approximately eighty to one hundred billion more of world indebtedness is piled up in 1919 and 1920, making a total of possibly two hundred and fifty billion or over in debt burdens, apart from regular tax levies, the full significance of Bastable's statement made years ago in times of peace will be comprehended.

OUR OWN PART OF THE WORLD'S WAR DEBT.

During that same three-year period our own national-debt burden may reasonably grow to fifty or sixty billion dollars, in round numbers, in addition to regular tax levies, or fifty times our public-debt burdens at the beginning of this war, while a Government war-debt burden of $10 per capita will have grown to $500 per capita liability apart from regular tax burdens caused by the war. Assuming from the experience of European nations that this may eventually carry a 5 per cent rate amounting to $2,500,000,000 in annual interest charges for this country alone, together with a sinking-fund charge added to regular tax levies for maintenance of Government, then an annual Federal per capita charge apart from all other burdens will become a Sinbad load of heavy proportions to every taxpayer. We reduced a nationl debt of approximately $3,000,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 in half a century. At the same rate of reduction a $50,000,000,000 debt, or possibly far more, depending on the length of the war, will be with us in generous proportions during several centuries.

Confirmation of the above estimate of future governmental expenditures and bond issues is found in a statement of administrative experts given to the press on November 1, wherein estimates for all purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, are placed at $21,000,000,000 and estimates for 1919 at $29,000,000,000, making a total of $50,000,000,000 for two years. Of this amount $10,000,000,000 is expected to be raised by ordinary revenues, including war taxes during the two years, and bond issues for the same period will aggregate $40,000,000,000. Of the latter amount it is further estimated that $15,000,000,000 will be loaned to the allies, but the United States will be required to raise the money, and it is no secret that a portion, possibly the larger part of these loans, may be canceled because of impoverished countries to which loaned. It must be understood, further, that a $40,000,000,000 bond issue for two years will grow to indefinite proportions with a long war.

That such estimates of indebtedness are conservative appears from the following tables of total indebtedness and per capita debt of several warring nations, reported to August 1, 1917, showing a comparative increase in three years of 400 per cent in total indebtedness and in per capita debt within that period:

Debt of—	Aug. 1, 1917.	Aug. 1, 1914.
United States	$3,000,000,000	$1,000,000,000
Great Britain	23,000,000,000	3,500,000,000
France	21,200,000,000	6,500,000,000
Russia	16,200,000,000	4,600,000,000
Italy	7,000,000,000	2,800,000,000
Entente nations	70,400,000,000	18,400,000,000
Germany, Empire and States	$24,200,000,000	$5,200,000,000
Austria-Hungary	12,700,000,000	3,700,000,000
Teutonic nations	36,900,000,000	8,900,000,000
Grand total	107,300,000,000	27,300,000,000

The foregoing statement is from a pamphlet issued by the Mechanics and Metals National Bank, of New York City.

What the indicated indebtedness of the nations now at war means to the average man may be faintly perceived by reducing totals to a per capita basis:

Per capita debt of—	Aug. 1, 1917.	Aug. 1, 1914.
United States	$28.80	$9.70
Great Britain	487.20	74.50
France	530.00	162.50
Russia	92.50	26.50
Italy	194.50	77.75
Entente allies	174.60	45.80
Germany	355.90	76.45
Austria-Hungary	239.60	70.75
Teutonic allies	305.60	73.50
Total average	205.00	52.20

It will be seen that Great Britain's debt, which in 1914 was equal to $74 for each inhabitant, was on August 1, 1917, six times greater than three years before. For France the per capita debt had been for many years the largest among civilized nations. That debt was $162 in the middle of 1914. In the space of three years it advanced to $530. The increase in the per capita debt of Germany was from $76 to $356 during three years of the present struggle.

As has been stated, our own Federal debt by June 30, 1920, is estimated to reach $500 per capita, and that rate will be largely increased by State and municipal debts.

Too much reliance can not be placed on per capita debt statements in ascertaining actual obligations carried by individual taxpayers, for the reason that estimates are frequently offered showing that two-thirds of the wealth of the United States is owned by only about 2 per cent of the people, whereas it is a well-known principle that tax burdens eventually fall back in far greater proportion upon the shoulders of the remaining 98 per cent, who are least able to pay.

Another important element mentioned by Bastable, the English authority, must not be overlooked when to the debt burdens of warring countries we add the destruction of billions of dollars of property; in enormous loss of labor and temporary loss of productive power of upwards of 30,000,000 men under arms; in permanent loss by death of several million selected men above included and permanent disablement of an equal number, who will become a future charge upon their governments. All these factors enter into the war burdens every country must in part share and directly affect the future ability to recover from such burdens.

THE HUMAN LOSS HAS A FIXED FINANCIAL VALUE.

The number of men engaged in hostilities shows how vast is the war and from what a large number the casualties have come. Those called to the colors of the various nations have been roughly estimated as follows, according to the same pamphlet, issued by the Merchants and Metals National Bank, based on available reports:

	Army and Navy.
United States	1,500,000
British Empire	7,500,000
France	6,000,000
Russia	14,000,000
Italy	2,500,000
Belgium, Serbia, and Portugal	1,000,000
Entente allies	32,500,000
Germany	10,500,000
Austria-Hungary	7,000,000
Bulgaria	500,000
Turkey	2,000,000
Teutonic allies	20,000,000
Total, all	52,500,000

The man value of this vast body of men taken from economic pursuits reaches many billions of dollars annually.

Of this 52,500,000, representing able-bodied and skillful workmen, nearly one-fourth have been killed or permanently injured since the outbreak of the war. In determining the man-value loss referred to by Bastable, we find losses by death on August 1, 1917, reached about 7,000,000 men, and permanently disabled numbered 5,000,000 more, or a total of 12,000,000 men, according to the best obtainable authority, the War Study Society, of Copenhagen. Detailed statements are omitted but are easily accessible. What the harvest will be by 1920, after six years of war, is beyond intelligent estimate, but our share of the losses must now be added to these estimates.

Military experts say the European powers can annually contribute from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 men to fill their depleted ranks, but this does not affect the wastage referred to by Bastable, which is permanent. In determining the economic value of man, familiar rules, recommended by Adam Smith, Dr. Farr, of London, and other authorities, provide that probable future earnings, minus expense of maintenance, education, and so forth, is the present value. Without distinguishing between those killed outright and those permanently disabled, it is estimated by the experience tables that a man of 25 years of age, earning $1 a day, with an average expectancy of 37.98 years, would be worth $6.132. Assuming the average age at this figure and the average net earning capacity at $600 annually, both probably conservative estimates, the economic value of 12,000,000 men killed or permanently disabled reaches over $70,000,000,000 estimated value man wastage in three years down to August 1, 1917. The effect of world conditions is apparent when to approximately $250,000,000,000 or more estimated debt of warring European nations by 1920, as heretofore shown, is to be added possibly $100,000,000,000 more in estimated European man-value wastage before three years shall have elapsed. Death losses would occur in times of peace, and other factors may modify these estimates, but my purpose at this time is only to present a general survey of world-wide conditions occasioned by war which call for strict public economies on the part of Congress at this time.

At the beginning of this session President Wilson declared our present and immediate task is to win the war. In this resolve he will be supported by Congress, whether the result be gained in 3 years—the basis of estimates—or longer.

Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood recently declared that "any person who says this will be a short war is not a true friend of the American people." "We are preparing for four years' war, and we may have four years of conflict after that," he is further quoted as saying.

Supporting Gen. Wood's prediction, military men who closely follow the progress of the war have stated that it is not likely to end in three years, and that our own contribution will be from 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 men before its conclusion. Such estimates are not officially given, but other opinions of the war's probable length are of value in this connection.

The greatest preceding war—our own Civil War—is a guide in determining such probabilities, based on its long continuance after the decisive battle of Gettysburg and fall of Vicksburg. No Gettysburg has yet been fought in this war. Accepting the minimum estimate of three years of war, the foregoing estimates of world-war waste and economic losses to our own country have been conservatively stated. If the war lasts eight years more, as suggested by Gen. Wood, the estimates will have to be greatly increased.

In the summary of our own national obligations only those were considered with which Congress is most intimately connected; but the individual taxpayer, who is paying the bills, is also maintaining city, town, county, State, and other municipal indebtedness of the country that reach many billions of dollars. Two items are shown in $345,942,305 of total State indebtedness in 1913 and $3,305,260,000 of municipal indebtedness in 1915, according to the United States Bureau of Census. In this connection it is a startling commentary on our city governments to learn that last year alone 149 cities of over 30,000 population increased their debt liability $86,013,326 in a single year, and that the net local indebtedness reaches $76.64 per capita.

OTHER TAX BURDENS TO BE FACED.

Other actual tax burdens carried by the citizen are indirectly related through freight charges to many billions of dollars in railway bonds and similar securities, but all these sink into insignificance compared to taxes levied by the butcher, the baker, and candlestick maker, who have united, with hundreds of other tax gatherers, including beef barons and coal operators, in doubling living expenses within the last five years for tens of millions of helpless taxpayers. How long this may continue to increase no man ventures to predict. A few profiteers have reaped enormous gains, and monopoly that defies the Sherman antitrust law takes extortious toll while the vast majority of those who pay have not received a moiety of the increased cost of living which is now exacted from them.

I have tried briefly to place before you, without exaggeration, a situation that confronts us as lawmakers. No sermon on the imperative necessity of strict public economy could be more impressive than a brief review of cold statistics, which carry their own unanswerable argument. And it is because of this critical time in the Nation's history, when governments are changing form and the toll of life and property is beyond human comprehension, that this lawmaking body should meet the problem without evasion or legislative quibbling.

Many efforts and some actual steps have been taken toward the adoption of a national budget in this country, and House Document No. 854, Sixty-second Congress, second session, presents the message of President Taft on the subject, and an exhaustive report covering over 500 pages submitted by the Commission on Economy and Efficiency on the subject of the need for a national budget.

Again, in Senate Document No. 1113, Sixty-second Congress, third session, is a proposed budget submitted by President Taft, and accompanying data covering over 400 pages devoted to the same general subject.

GENERAL PROVISIONS OF EFFECTIVE BUDGET SYSTEMS.

As previously stated, it is no part of this discussion to enter into the intricacies of a budget system, but rather to call attention to the urgent need of some method of curtailing present waste, similar to that adopted in other countries where the budget performs the duty. Of approximately 50 different countries that have adopted the budget, the English system was the pioneer, and others have been patterned after it. The English budget system provides that the House of Commons receives the budget of proposed expenditures from the ministry, or cabinet. The treasury issues a notice to the different departments, requesting them to furnish, on or before December 1, estimates of financial needs for the ensuing year. No estimate or alteration of an estimate can be received after January 13, and the only protection for a department that fails to send in estimates is by inclusion of an amount arbitrarily recommended by the treasury. Departments are required to quote the authority for any variations from preceding estimates regarding persons employed, salaries, and so forth. The estimates are checked up by the treasury authorities, and a noted departure occurs at this point from our own loose practice in that it is the duty of the treasury to see that the items are economical and sufficient. All the departments report to the treasury.

When the budget is presented to the House it is accompanied by a speech from the chancellor of the exchequer, explaining in detail the different needs of government. The bill is taken up in general debate, and then the bill is discussed in detail.

A statement of the parliamentary procedure is set forth by Higgs in The Financial System of the United Kingdom, pages 25 to 36.

The first broad departure from our own system, apart from the parliamentary procedure, is that wherein the English treasury arbitrarily passes upon the departmental items before presentation.

Second. Estimates received by the House of Commons are considered by one committee, whereas here the Speaker distributes unrestricted departmental requests to 10 or more separate committees, some of which, in turn, take up the examination by subcommittees.

Third. The House of Commons limits the rights of members to reduce items, whereas here the right to increase is a God-given privilege exercised by Senators and Representatives.

Fourth. The bill becomes law whether or not accepted by the Lords in England, providing the speaker determines it is a money bill. With our practice the several appropriation bills become law only after the Senate has added generous amendments.

Fifth. In England an audit or thorough investigation is made of expenditures by the comptroller or auditor general, who is an officer responsible to the House of Commons rather than an official of the Treasury Department, as in this country. This audit or check by the legislative body is declared to be of great value in limiting wasteful estimates and expenditures.

Appropriating from the consolidated fund, providing for deficiencies, and other differing practices found in the English system are worthy of study, although under our form of government it is probable certain methods would require modification. That is the purpose of the resolution hereto attached, which proposes a joint congressional commission to study and report to Congress a practicable system for this country.

SOME GOOD THINGS A BUDGET SYSTEM WILL DO.

First. It will require annual submission of carefully prepared estimates by the different departments of all proposed expenditures to a central agency (in England the treasury), there to be reviewed, pruned, and approved before submission to Congress for consideration. Congress will then intelligently determine what should be allowed for the support of government. This substitutes Executive responsibility in preparation for the present system, wherein a score of unrelated committees in the House and Senate prepare, add to, and pile up appropriations, including frequent increases on the floor and in conference, with absence of any fixed official responsibility, administrative or legislative.

Second. It will abolish direct pressure now exerted upon Representatives and Senators in Washington by irrigation, reclamation, water power, river and harbor, highway, public building, and many other lobbies organized to secure from Congress grants for countless local or private interests, and it will adopt a system of expense checks that has the legislative sanction of practically every other Government in the world.

Third. It will tend toward wise and disinterested consideration of appropriation bills, increased efficiency, curtailment of legislative logrolling, public waste, and extravagance and will materially shorten sessions of Congress.

WILL CONGRESS MEET ITS PUBLIC RESPONSIBILITY?

Every Member, with a single exception, supported the President's request when the Foreign Relations Committee brought in its resolution a few days ago. Another request contained in his message remains unfulfilled—a return to a single appropriation committee. Need for private and public economy, if the war is to be won, is imperative in view of the colossal and growing tax burdens the people of this country are now called upon to meet. These burdens will become heavier to bear because of war waste and loss of productive man power; heavier also because the increase of 100 per cent in living expenses is not likely to fall. Practically every Government on earth—some fifty in number—have adopted some form of public budget in order to promote efficiency, economy, and responsibility. Our own Government alone invites wholesale extravagance by refusing to adopt any intelligent legislative financial policy. Until the budget system can be adopted, a single appropriation committee as pledged by the Democratic national platform and urged by the President is of vital need. During this hour of national peril will our Democratic friends repudiate their party pledge and disregard their leader's request, or will they in fact as well as words join hands with this side of the aisle and unitedly "stand by the President"? [Applause.]

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 178) creating a commission to report a plan for the adoption of a national budget system.

Whereas in times of peace the expenditures of the Government were increasing yearly at a rapid rate; and

Whereas our entry into the world war will enlarge these expenditures to enormous proportions; and

Whereas the increased taxation to support the Government will place new burdens upon the shoulders of every citizen of the United States; and

Whereas this vast sum of money should be spent with the utmost efficiency and economy, and under modern methods of control; and

Whereas the estimates for the expenditures of the Government come to Congress without revision or scrutiny by any centralized agency of the Executive Government and are not treated by Congress as a part of its legislative program; and

Whereas under our present methods of legislative procedure the responsibility for the expenditures of the Government is scattered amongst a number of standing committees in the two Houses of Congress, which work independently of each other, and of the Executive Government in providing funds; and

Whereas it is possible for private Members on the floors of the two Houses to offer amendments at will increasing the items of expenditure provided in the respective appropriation bills beyond the amounts requested by the Executive; and

Whereas under this procedure the evil practices known as "logrolling" and "pork-barrel" methods have grown up and flourished; and

Whereas under this system there is no possibility of a governmental business program, or of a financial policy, or of a coordination of expenditures with revenues; and

Whereas it is the consensus of opinion among men of business, publicists, and students of public finance that the adoption of the national budget system would put the finances of the Government upon a sound, efficient, and economical basis by making possible a business program prepared upon the responsibility of the Executive and presented by him to Congress, to be enacted into law; and

Whereas the chief political parties of the country in their platforms in 1916 pledged themselves to carry out budgetary reforms for the Federal Government; and

Whereas it is the experience of practically all foreign governments that the national budget system is the only efficient method of dealing with the expenditures and revenues; and

Whereas to plan such a system for this Government requires careful study: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a joint commission to report out a plan for adoption of a national budget system is hereby established. Its membership shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury and two other officials of the Executive Government, to be appointed by the President; three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the House and Senate, respectively.

SEC. 2. That no compensation shall be paid to any member of said commission.

SEC. 3. That said commission is hereby empowered and directed to report at the opening of the next session of Congress a plan for the adoption of a national budget system for the Government of the United States, and showing therein what changes, amendments, or adjustments the adoption of said budget system would cause in the rules of the Senate and the House in the laws now in operation relative to revenues and expenditures, in the organization of the Treasury Department, in the forms and methods of preparation of the departmental estimates, in the method of presenting said estimates to the Congress, in the methods of accounting and audit, and such other and further information as said commission may see fit to lay before the Congress.

SEC. 4. That said commission is authorized to employ such experts and such clerical assistance as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 6. That said commission shall expire on the 31st day of December, 1917.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman withhold that a minute in order that I may ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. About what?

Mr. DYER. I desire to incorporate a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what the subject is.

Mr. DYER. It is on the subject of segregation in municipalities—the Louisville, Ky., case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 7572. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7572. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 7572. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 15, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Oswego Harbor, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 570); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. Letter from the chairman of National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, transmitting draft of provision recommended for insertion in the urgent deficiency bill (H. Doc. No. 571); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. Letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting reports from the bureaus of Second, Third, and Fourth Assistant Postmasters General showing the number of employees of their services who receive the benefits of increased compensation as provided by law (H. Doc. No. 572); to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

4. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed statement of the refunds of customs duties, etc., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 573); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CARLIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 211), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2489) to create two additional associate justices of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 216), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HELVERING: A bill (H. R. 7690) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 7691) to increase the salary of the clerk of the district attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 7692) making provision for the admission to the tuberculosis hospitals of the United States of any soldiers of the present war discharged on account of disability and found within 90 days thereafter to have contracted pulmonary tuberculosis; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 7693) to postpone the going into effect of certain sections of Title XI, postal rates, of the war-revenue act of October 3, 1917, and providing for a commission to investigate the cost of transporting and handling second-class mail matter; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 7694) providing for a certain percentage of cancellation of stamps, and making an allowance for rents, fuel, and lights, etc., to fourth-class postmasters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. MONTAGUE: A bill (H. R. 7695) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. AUSTIN: A bill (H. R. 7696) to create a volunteer militia for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 7697) to authorize the calling into the service of the United States the militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 190) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Francis Asbury; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALMON: A bill (H. R. 7698) for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 7699) granting a pension to Louisa C. Kinney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7700) granting a pension to William H. Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7701) granting a pension to Orlando R. Edwards; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. AUSTIN: A bill (H. R. 7702) granting an increase of pension to James C. Claxton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLAYPOOL: A bill (H. R. 7703) granting a pension to Daniel White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 7704) granting a pension to William Weddington; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CROSSER: A bill (H. R. 7705) for the relief of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DICKINSON: A bill (H. R. 7706) granting an increase of pension to Hezekiah S. Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOREMUS: A bill (H. R. 7707) granting a pension to Michael Lacey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 7708) granting a pension to Winifred M. Dill; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 7709) granting a pension to Sarah D. Bowman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEATON: A bill (H. R. 7710) granting an increase of pension to Hugh Stevenson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 7711) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin P. Baldwin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7712) granting an increase of pension to Robert Kepner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7713) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin G. Young; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7714) granting an increase of pension to John C. James; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IGOE: A bill H. R. 7715) for the relief of Mary Neaf; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 7716) granting a pension to Osa A. Powell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7717) granting a pension to William H. Hill; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEY of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 7718) granting an increase of pension to Mister W. Wickham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 7719) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Pratt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 7720) for the relief of the heirs of Ann Gregory, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LITTLE: A bill (H. R. 7721) granting an increase of pension to Robert S. Parker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCLINTIC: A bill (H. R. 7722) for the relief of Townley H. Bellomy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7723) granting a pension to Charles L. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKENZIE: A bill (H. R. 7724) granting an increase of pension to John A. Benninger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIORDAN: A bill (H. R. 7725) granting a pension to Mrs. David Anderson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 7726) granting a pension to Nancy L. Bonnett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7727) granting an increase of pension to James Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 7728) granting a pension to Thomas J. Kelly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TEMPLE: A bill (H. R. 7729) granting an increase of pension to James Mackall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WALKER: A bill (H. R. 7730) for the relief of the heirs of Solomon Cohen; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Washington Chamber of Commerce, relative to increase in pay of Government employees; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also (by request), memorial of members of church of Kidder, Mo., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of National Federation of Postal Employees, favoring increase in pay of postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. CARY: Petitions of F. T. Zentner, cashier of the National Bank; Henry Groth, cashier of the German-American Bank; and Edwin Schuette, cashier of Manitowoc Savings Bank, all of Manitowoc, in the State of Wisconsin, protesting against prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of F. S. Morris, treasurer of the Vollrath Co., of Sheboygan, Wis., requesting the exclusion of beer and light wines; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Milwaukee Western Malt Co. and Stuart Hyde, secretary and treasurer Charles A. Krause Milling Co., both protesting against prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of F. J. Schmidt, general manager E. C. Kropp Co.; William J. Gleeson, president, and A. A. Raisler, secretary, State Retail Liquor Dealers' Protective Association; A. Sibilsky, secretary Milwaukee Waiters' Alliance, Local No. 59; Adam Muth; J. Kuehn, secretary B. Hoffman Manufacturing Co.; O. C. Mason; William P. Hug, president Hug & Frey Insurance Co.; Walter Schroeder, of the Chris Schroeder & Sons Co., general insurance; the C. W. Fischer Furniture Co.; the John Schroeder Lumber Co.; Baumbach, Reichel Co.; and E. G. Hundt, all of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against passage of prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letter from Walter Kempster, of Milwaukee, Wis., urging passage of the bill creating the volunteer officers' retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, telegram from Hon. George H. Russell, of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the passage of the national prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegram from Frank J. Weber, of Milwaukee, Wis., secretary of the Federated Trades Council, consisting of over 30,000 organized workers, protesting against passage of national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegram from Jack Y. Feldman, chairman legislative committee No. 3, Milwaukee Affiliated National Federation of Federal Employees of Milwaukee, Wis., urging passage of Keating bill to increase salaries of Federal employees; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, telegram from Rev. Charles B. Moulinier, of Marquette University, Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against legislation which forbids the use of beer and light wines; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegram from Edwin F. Korvening, president Wisconsin Association of Wholesale Liquor Dealers, of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegram signed by L. B. Riley, president; Thomas Shannon, secretary; and H. H. Meirer, treasurer, representing Milwaukee Association of Railway and Steamboat Clerks, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegrams from Guy F. Gregg, H. L. Hadfield, Blatz Hasten & Co., Fred C. Minard, Wisconsin Barrel & Cooperage Co., John Pritzlaff Hardware Co., Manitowoc Malting Co., August Rebhan, Howard D. Plimpton, Runkel & Dadmun, Milwaukee Western Malt Co., Carl A. Zinn, Otto E. Schulz, Henry Balzer, president Lakeside Distilling Co., the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., and Louis F. Jermain, all of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the passage of the national prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions from Thomas J. Mahon, counsel for the Wisconsin Association of Wholesale Liquor Dealers, of Milwaukee, Wis., and J. P. Schmidt, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Joseph Rebholz, of Milwaukee, Wis., and Harry A. Gwin, of Washington, D. C., protesting against prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of Board of Aldermen of St. Louis, Mo., urging a speedy passage of House bill 6537; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ESCH: Papers in support of House bill 7423, granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Mueller; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, papers in support of House bill 7425, granting an increase of pension to Absalom Erickson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers in support of House bill 7424, granting a pension to Henry C. Clauson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, papers in support of House bill 7426, granting an increase of pension to John R. Ogden; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, memorial of American Federation of Labor, favoring increase in pay of postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Resolutions of Parkway Club, of Borough Park Heights Civic Association, and the New Utrecht Democratic Club, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill 17806; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of the Borough of Brooklyn, city of New York, N. Y., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of American Federation of Labor, favoring increase in pay of post-office clerks and city letter carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. FOSS: Petition of 100 women of the churches of Evanston, Ill., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FOSTER: Resolution of Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 102, Salem, Ill., urging favorable consideration of increase of pension for soldiers of the Civil War; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FREAR: Petition of Otto A. Olson, Star Prairie, Wis., favoring an allowance for clerk hire, etc., for fourth-class postmasters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Alfred E. Coons and Alton Beggs, rural carriers of Wisconsin, urging the passage of H. R. 7219; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of T. W. Critchette and Andrew J. McQuiston, favoring bill to increase pensions of maimed soldiers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of American Bottle Co., opposing the proposed prohibitory amendment; also petition of the Litchfield Manufacturing Co., of Waterloo, Iowa, favoring the proposed prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAMLIN: Papers to accompany H. R. 2060, a bill to pension Lewis J. Moon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HERSEY: Resolution of committee of public safety and defense, of Waterville and Winslow, Me., urging legislation to put down pro-German activity and other forms of disloyalty; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of A. Hoen & Co., Baltimore, Md., and memorials by the Baltimore Federation of Labor (representing 40,000 workmen) and the executive board of the Maryland State-District of Columbia Federation of Labor (representing 100,000 workmen), protesting against the prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a memorial of the Harvard Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Baltimore, Md., urging a favorable vote on the prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LUFKIN: Petitions of the Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 108, Georgetown, Mass., and Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 82, Marblehead, Mass., favoring an increase of pensions allowed veterans of the Civil War; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORES of Indiana: Petition of A. C. Ayres and 84 men and 391 women from various parts of Indiana, praying for a woman suffrage amendment to the United States Constitution; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of Miss Belle Stevens, Igo, Cal., urging legislation increasing the compensation of postmasters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of citizens of Los Angeles, asking adoption of national prohibition constitutional amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of First Congregational Church of Glendale, Cal., asking for adoption of joint resolution for constitutional amendment prohibiting manufacture, sale, transportation, and importation of intoxicating liquors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SNELL: Petition of voters of Keeseville, N. Y., favoring the submission of the national prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Peru, N. Y., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SNYDER: Resolution of the Utica, N. Y., home-defense committee, favoring the enactment of more stringent legislation against certain persons, organizations, etc., in this country; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of members of the Red River Valley (Minn.) Medical Society, favoring bill to increase the rank of medical officers in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Federal Employees' Union of White Earth Indian Agency, Minn., favoring increase in pay of Federal employees; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lawrence County, Pa., favoring national prohibition amendment to the Constitution and protesting against use of grains in manufacture of all intoxicants as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Women's Missionary Society of New Bedford United Presbyterian Church, New Bedford, Pa., favoring national prohibition amendment to the Constitution and prohibition of all grains for the manufacture of intoxicants; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution adopted at mass meeting of citizens of New Bedford, Pa., favoring prohibition amendment to the Constitution and protesting against manufacture and sale of wine and beer for the period of the war as a food conservation measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of members of Second United Presbyterian Church of New Castle, Pa., in favor of prohibition amendment to the Constitution and a law to prohibit the use of grains in the manufacturing of intoxicants during the period of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution adopted on November 17, 1917, by Upper Buffalo Presbytery, representing a congregation of 182 people, favoring an antipolygamy amendment to the United States Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WINSLOW: Petition of inmates of Summer Street Jail, Worcester, Mass., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WOODYARD: Petition of members of the Seventh Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Huntington, W. Va., urging the national prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 15, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, incline our hearts to Thee, that amid the terrible ordeal through which we are passing, the clash of arms, the destruction of life and limb, the untold misery which follows in its wake, our faith in Thee may not be impaired nor our confidence in the overruling of Thy Providence may not be diminished.

It is written, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain cometh down, and the snow, from heaven and returneth not hither, but watereth the earth and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I send it."

Thus we are assured that Thy will is supreme, though men may depart from the paths of righteousness. In the dispensation of Thy Providence Thy purposes and plans shall not be thwarted. Thus continue our faith and confidence in Thee.

> In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
> With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me;
> As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free
> While God is marching on.

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resignations from committees, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECEMBER 15, 1917.

Mr. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation from the Committee on Rules, the same to take effect immediately.

WILL R. WOOD.

—

DECEMBER 15, 1917.

Mr. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, the same to take effect immediately.

WILL R. WOOD.

—

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 14, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hand you herewith my resignation as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Yours, very truly,

ALLEN T. TREADWAY.

—

DECEMBER 15, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I respectfully tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

W. C. HAWLEY.

—

DECEMBER 15, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Yours, very truly,

RICHARD P. FREEMAN.

—

DECEMBER 15, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, and respectfully request that same be accepted, effective immediately.

Sincerely, yours,

W. A. RODENBERG.

—

DECEMBER 15, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, to take effect immediately.

Yours, very truly,

FREDERICK K. LEHLBACH.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these resignations will be accepted.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1419. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 1419. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HOUR OF MEETING—11 O'CLOCK ON MONDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock next Monday morning. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman inform the House as to what the plan will be for a vote on the consideration of the prohibition amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. After I get unanimous consent to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday, I am going to make another request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VOTE ON THE PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, since a great many Members live so far away from Washington it will take two or three days, and maybe longer, to get home, and they wish to leave, some of them, on the 6 o'clock western train and some on the 8 and 9 o'clock trains, and there are some Members who live in the New England States who would like to come down and be present and leave on the 7 o'clock train in the evening, I believe——

The SPEAKER. On what day?

Mr. KITCHIN. On Monday. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the prohibition constitutional amendment be taken at 5.30, or not later than 5.30, o'clock Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the vote on the prohibition amendment be taken not later than 5.30 on Monday.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think it would be better to fix it definitely at 5.30? I noticed once before, when we were expected to vote at 5 o'clock——

Mr. KITCHIN. I meant we would begin to vote on all amendments on the bill at 5.30.

Mr. LITTLE. You said "or sooner."

Mr. KITCHIN. I said if we get through.

Mr. LITTLE. I noticed the other day that when we were expected to vote at 5 o'clock, and did vote at 4 o'clock, quite a number were not here. If we should fix it definitely at 5.30 we could all be here.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I amend my request by making it at 5 o'clock; that we begin to vote under general debate and five-minute debate at 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that any sort of debate, general debate or five-minute debate, shall close at 5 o'clock next Monday, and that the voting on the submission of this amendment and all amendments thereto shall begin at 5 o'clock.

Mr. WEBB. That includes the debate on all amendments?

The SPEAKER. Of course; it cleans up the debate entirely. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLERKS TO CERTAIN COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I submit a resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 192 (H. Rept. 223).

Resolved, That clerks to committees of the House during the session provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, be, and they are hereby, assigned for the present session of Congress to the following committees, to wit: Committee on Education, Committee on Railways and Canals, Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, Committee on Invalid Pensions (assistant clerk), Committee on the Judiciary (additional assistant clerk), Committee on Enrolled Bills (assistant clerk), Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I submit another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 190 (H. Rept. 220).

Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be allowed an assistant clerk, at the rate of $6 per diem, during the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MADDEN. I rise to oppose the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] has charge of the time.

Mr. PARK. The gentleman can have five minutes if he wants it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think that for the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries one clerk is all that should be allowed. There is no justification for appointing an additional clerk for that committee. The business of the committee is not very onerous; not very voluminous; and if one clerk can not do the work of that committee the clerk is not qualified.

Of course, this side of the House is not responsible for the extravagant expenditures that will be made as the result of the resolutions which have been reported. If the gentlemen on the other side of the House who are chairmen of these committees are willing to state on their honor that clerks are needed for committees that have no business, we really ought not to complain much.

Mr. PARK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. PARK. I wish to state that the chairmen of these committees did state that these clerks were necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. I realize that. Under that statement I do not know what the chairman of the Committee on Accounts could do except report in favor of the clerks that have been asked for by the chairmen of these committees; but it does seem to me that when clerks are named for committees that never meet and committees that ought not to have clerks, it is a species of extravagance that ought not to be indulged in. There ought not to be any appointments made simply for the purpose of giving somebody a job, and that is all this amounts to. I protest against it. Of course, my protest will not amount to anything. I realize that the resolution will be passed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman know anything about the work of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. MADDEN. I know enough about the work of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries to know that it does not need an extra clerk.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman does not know enough about it, or he would not express his opinion in that arbitrary way.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has no right to scold me for expressing my opinion.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman ought not to express an opinion unless he has information on the subject.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not recognize the gentleman's right to read me a curtain lecture when I express my opinion about the injustice of these expenditures. I propose to express my opinion, and the more he reads me a curtain lecture the more strongly my opinion will be expressed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for five minutes more, if I may have it.

Mr. PARK. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia yields to the gentleman from Illinois five minutes more.

Mr. MADDEN. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries never has had an extra clerk and never had anything for an extra clerk to do. The committees for which clerks were authorized a few moments ago never had need for any clerks. They never meet. They have no business. They are ornaments, created to give some Member of Congress the title of chairman. Not one of these committees has had a meeting for I do not know how long, and when they do meet they do not meet to transact business. They have no business. Otherwise they probably are all right. [Laughter.] Why should we indulge in the expenditure of the public money just to accommodate the chairman of some committee that has no business, so that he may be able to appoint one of his constituents to a job, not to a place where employment is to be found, but to a job where he has an opportunity to sign the pay roll once a month? I do not think it ought to be done. I submit that the House ought not to do it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What do these clerks get per day?

Mr. MADDEN. Six dollars per day, 30 days a month, if it happens to be a month of 30 days, and 31 days a month, if it is a month of 31 days; and if by any chance the committee has a meeting and there is any business done, then they come in with a bill for extra pay for the clerk because he has done something. [Laughter.] That is true. Nobody will deny it. Every gentleman who has served here in the House long enough to know what the practice is will have to admit it. I remember one chairman of a committee in the last Congress came in here with a bill for $500, I think it was, for extra compensation for a clerk to one of these committees. I think he had worked about 15 minutes at something during his occupancy of the office of clerk, and because he had exercised himself in the interest of the public for a short time extra compensation was requested for his services. Of course he was not expected to perform any service for the regular compensation. That was a gratuity; but if by any chance on earth he was ever called upon to do any work, why then the compensation which was given to him as a gratuity by action of the House was considered inadequate. I hear somebody say that it was given to him in the nature of a retainer, in order to keep him at the service of the committee, so that he would be on call. I have known clerks appointed to these committees who never came to their committee rooms in all the time that they occupied the position. Many of them never came to the city of Washington. I have known a case where the chairman of a committee drew the compensation of the clerk. Whether he divided it with the clerk or not I do not know, but I have some doubt about it; and I want, with all the vigor that I possess, to go on record as protesting earnestly, sincerely, and unequivocally against the rottenness of this practice of appointing clerks to positions where there are no duties to perform. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me five minutes?

Mr. PARK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] five minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois intends his remarks to apply to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, they are based on a total lack of information. There are few committees of this House more active than the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. There are few committees in this House that consider more bills. There are few committees in the House that have more hearings or meet oftener each week. Our regular meeting day is on Thursday. We often have meetings on other days. We report out, and the Congress passes, more bills of a general character than most of the committees of this House. Every member of that committee will bear testimony to that fact. Myself and Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, who was chairman of the committee when I first became a member of it and who is now the ranking minority member of the committee, appeared before the Committee on Accounts and gave all the information upon which this resolution is based.

If there is any suggestion that this additional clerk is simply to make a place for some constituent of mine, it is absolutely untrue. We have needed an additional clerk for some years past. I had a clerk to that committee who worked more hours than any other clerk in Congress, I believe. He has gone from me now, and if the House intends that the work shall be efficiently done, if it is intended to provide the committee with an efficient organization, we are entitled to a session clerk. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I will venture to say that my committee does twice as much work as that committee, and I do not disparage the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is not a question of mere clerical work alone, but an organization should be efficient, so that the clerkship may be of service to the members of the committee in many other ways.

There may be committees in the House that do not need additional clerks, but that criticism does not apply to this committee, as I think the testimony before the Committee on Accounts will show. This committee is one of the most efficient committees of the House. We have reported out much legislation of a comprehensive nature. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is the ranking minority member, and he appeared before the Committee on Accounts with me, and we made a sufficient showing to warrant that committee in reporting this resolution.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is probably unnecessary, as far as the passage of this resolution is concerned, for me to repeat what I had to say yesterday. The committee that had charge of this resolution gave to this matter about 40 minutes of consideration, and in that consideration we weighed the facts as this House can not pretend to weigh the facts. We heard the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking member of the committee, and we felt that we were obliged to take the statement of facts they made on this subject.

So far as I am concerned, I think this House should follow the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Accounts without too much consideration, for the reason that the House is incapable within the time it is willing to take of giving to each of these separate questions, involving the expenditure of public money, the consideration that it should have. My attitude on the committee is that when we report a matter of this kind to the House the House, if it would act wisely, should follow our recommendation. The House yesterday saw fit not to follow the recommendation of the committee, but provided a clerkship for a committee where there were no facts to justify the expenditure of any money, taking the position that because some committees are given clerks others should have them also, regardless of the facts. In that matter yesterday and in this matter to-day I feel that the House should follow the action of the committee that has considered the matter, because it can not know and weigh the facts itself. I think this resolution should pass.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am the senior member in service on the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, having been a member ever since I entered the House 19 years ago. I want to say that during the last two years that committee has done more work than it did in the five previous years. The members of the committee are faithful in attendance, and it takes about all of our time. I serve upon no other committee in the House. I retired from another committee of which I was a member because this committee took all of my time, and I could not give attention to both committees. I appeared before the committee and approved of this application made by the chairman of the committee, and I think the request should be granted for an additional clerk. It is almost impossible to find a man of the ability of the former clerk of the committee, who had a better assignment elsewhere and gave up the position of clerk of this committee. I doubt whether we shall be able to complete the business with one clerk, he practically being a new man to the business which engages the attention of the committee. We have had a number of changes in the membership of the committee, and the clerk has a great deal of work to do and the committee itself has a great deal of work to do. It seems to me that no one having acquaintance with the facts can have any objection to granting the request. I hope that the Members of this body will consent unanimously to granting the request embodied in the pending resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 180 for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 180 (H. Rept. 224).

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be allowed an assistant clerk, at the rate of $100 per month, during the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, beginning the 3d day of December, 1917, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PARK. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin five minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. This is a proposition for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Rules. I am frank to say that in my opinion it may become necessary, but it is extremely improbable that it will become necessary unless the Committee on Rules should be called upon to enter into some investigation such as we had last year. The membership must recognize that in the nearly equal political division of the House there can not be many contests as far as the rules are concerned, but in all probability during this entire session there will be very few rules from the Committee on Rules, and such as there are will probably be unanimously, or nearly so, reported from that committee. Now, when we are asking the poorest people in the land to buy liberty bonds, to put up $50, to take it from their hard-earned earnings, it seems to me that the House ought to set some example with reference to economy.

This resolution can well be deferred until it is determined whether or not the Committee on Rules will have any work that makes it necessary to have an assistant clerk. No one will say that with the present duties imposed on the Committee on Rules, or that with anything that is pending before the committee, there is the slightest necessity for an assistant clerk, and if an assistant clerk is appointed he will have a sinecure, and absolutely nothing to do.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, if he happens to be present. He does not seem to be here; but I wish to state that the chairman of the Committee on Rules appeared before our committee and made such statements as caused us to believe the assistant clerk was necessary. We therefore recommended it without a dissenting vote.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think it is any reflection upon the chairman of a committee that he asks for an assistant clerk when he sees other committees getting assistant clerks irrespective of the need of such clerks, as was stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] yesterday with reference to his committee. He said he would be glad to get along without a clerk if other committees situated as was his would do the same; but it must be recognized that there is a piece of patronage for the chairman of the committee, and he has that in mind, and if other committees are to have these sinecures, very naturally he wants it for himself also. But I do think the Committee on Accounts should go into the question of what work a committee is called on to perform, and not merely take the bald statement of the chairman that he wants a clerk or an assistant.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. PARK. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry for the apparent necessity that compels me again to speak about a matter of this kind. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is absolutely in error, I think, with reference to the method that is being followed now by this Committee on Accounts. Our committee does not take the word of the chairman as to his need for anything whatever, but we do take the facts that he states, governing the situation. The chairman of the Committee on Rules with great detail was heard, I dare say, for half an hour, and he described the particular work that the clerk has to do and stated it as his opinion that the clerk now assigned to the committee absolutely could not do the work effectively now or at any other time without the assistance of this assistant clerk in the work he has to do. We were not influenced by any desire of the chairman of the committee, but by the statement of the facts that he made. It happens at this time that the responsibility in the Committee on Rules is on that chairman and not on the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], where I perhaps would much prefer to have it be, but the responsibility is upon the present chairman, and he stated the facts concerning the work under his control.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the House is entitled to have those facts so that the House can form some judgment as to whether the facts justify this.

Mr. SANFORD. The facts were all brought out in the testimony and the testimony is in the committee room. We have not gone to the expense of having the hearings printed, but if the House wants the facts from the proper source, the House would have to hear them from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman knows them. Can not the gentleman state to the House the facts that influenced his judgment?

Mr. SANFORD. I can state them to the House if I desired to do so, but I prefer to take the position that this House should follow the judgment of this committee. I take this position because I know from experience that I have had already with the House, that the House will not listen to the facts in reference to each one of these clerkships, and I will not make a particular exception with reference to this case, because it would be perfectly futile to examine this one case. I tried to get the House yesterday to examine one case, only to find in the end that the House said in effect that our system is such that if one man gets a clerk all the rest must have one. I will not take that position. I take the position that with reference to each case it is a question of proof.

Yesterday I found the House was disposed to say, "You have given it to so many committees, give it to another." I will not take that position with reference to the expenditure of public money, nor will I attempt to come here and state all the reasons with reference to all of the 20 or 30 clerkships in question when I know that the House will not listen to or consider the particular reasons if they are brought forth.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is unwilling to state the facts to the House. May I ask him this? Was the gentleman impressed that the business now pending before the Committee on Rules was of such character that an assistant clerk was necessary?

Mr. SANFORD. I was impressed from the testimony of the chairman of the Committee on Rules with the facts that he stated to be true, and I said that if those facts did exist it was proper, so long as the system of doing legislative business that now prevails in the House continues to prevail to allow this clerk.

Mr. LENROOT. I am sorry the gentleman could not answer the question.

Mr. SANFORD. It is my opinion from what I have learned already that the clerical work of the House could be done with about 10 per cent of the disbursement that is now made for that work, but it would be inconsistent with the system that now prevails to deny to this important committee the help the chairman says is absolutely necessary.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman refers to the present system. What is the present system; providing places and clerkships whether they are absolutely needed or not?

Mr. SANFORD. The present system provides, as I recall it, for an expenditure of a half million dollars for clerical help in the House, and it is my idea that a large proportion of it is unnecessary.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Did it develop in the hearings before the committee that there was an unusual amount of business before the Committee on Rules at this time? That is, that the committee had before it, and was likely to have before it in the immediate future, more business than it has had before it in the past?

Mr. SANFORD. I think there was no unusual condition claimed to exist, but, as I recall this particular committee, the testimony was that the character of work is such that there is need for collaboration between two men.

Mr. MONDELL. But that has been the situation always in the work of that committee, has it not?

Mr. SANFORD. I understand so.

Mr. MONDELL. So that it is the gentleman's opinion, as I understand it, that there is no more necessity for an additional clerk now than there has been at any time in the past?

Mr. SANFORD. I do not know anything about the past. I take the statement of facts that the chairman gives me without respect to the past.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understood him, the gentleman has no information that there is an unusual amount of business before the committee?

Mr. SANFORD. I think there is not.

Mr. MONDELL. Conditions are as they have been in the past?

Mr. SANFORD. As far as I know.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee has gotten along without this clerk in the past?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seem to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PARK) there were—ayes 31, noes 84.

So the resolution was rejected.

WIDOW OF E. L. CURRIER.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I offer another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 178 (H. Rept. 221).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to pay to the widow of E. L. Currier, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' salary and funeral expenses not exceeding $250, the same to be immediately available.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "be," insert the words "paid out of the contingent fund of the House."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several resolutions were passed was laid on the table.

ATTORNEY'S FEE, CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I offer another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 189 (H. Rept. 222).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ counsel at a reasonable fee not to exceed $500 to represent him in the matter of suit brought against him in his official capacity as Clerk of the House by Aaron P. Prioleau, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. NORTON. May I ask the gentleman what is the occasion for the employment of counsel?

Mr. PARK. I understand from the Clerk, Mr. Trimble, that Prioleau claims that the papers sent were not filed by the Clerk, and he is bringing suit for $20,000 against him. This resolution provides that so much of the $500 as may be needed may be used to meet that suit. It may be knocked out on demurrer, with a cost of $50 or $100.

Mr. NORTON. What claims were not filed?

Mr. PARK. His contest papers.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman say the papers were not filed?

Mr. PARK. No; I do not say anything. He said that they may have been filed.

Mr. GILLETT. Is the gentleman cognizant of the fact as to whether or not they were filed?

Mr. PARK. No, sir; the Clerk, Mr. Trimble, said they were not filed with him, and he gave him notice in plenty of time to file. I do not know anything except what the Clerk says about it.

Mr. GILLETT. I understood from the gentleman's statement that he admitted that the Clerk of the House was negligent.

Mr. PARK. No, sir.

Mr. GILLETT. And if that was so I think we might consider whether we should allow this or not.

Mr. PARK. The gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. GILLETT. I understand the gentleman did not admit that?

Mr. PARK. No.

Mr. GILLETT. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. Has the committee made an investigation to determine?

Mr. PARK. Nothing, except Mr. Trimble appeared before the committee and made a statement about it.

Mr. GILLETT. He just asked for $500, on the ground that it was for an attorney's fee?

Mr. PARK. No; he asked so much of $500 that might be necessary to defend him be allowed, because it was against him as Clerk of the House. It may be disposed of by general demurrer.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman think this suit ought to be defended by the Government?

Mr. PARK. I think the Clerk is entitled to this fee, as the suit is brought against him officially.

Mr. GILLETT. Suppose the Clerk is in fault? Did he give the committee any explanation as to that?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Mr. LANGLEY, and Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARK. To the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has the suit been brought?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman know in what court?

Mr. PARK. I only have the Clerk's word.

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, my understanding is that the Clerk contends there was not an error on his part. I understand that to be his contention, and I do not think myself that he was at fault. He is too conscientious, painstaking, and efficient to have done what the plaintiff alleges.

Mr. PARK. The Clerk contends there was no error on his part.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it summons has been served upon the Clerk of the House in his official capacity by a former contestant in an election case, claiming large damages against the Clerk of the House. It has been customary in this House whenever such conditions have obtained heretofore to allow officials of the House to employ counsel and pay the counsel fees. As I understand it, this is merely an authorization to the Clerk of the House to employ counsel and pay a fee to the extent of $500 to defend the Clerk in the suit brought against him in his official capacity.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. As I understand it, the gentleman said he knows nothing about the merits of the case as to whether the Clerk was negligent or not. Now, it seems to me——

Mr. PARK. I stated to the gentleman awhile ago I only had the Clerk's statement before the committee about it. The Clerk stated, as I remember, that no contest papers were filed with him. If they were, he does not know anything about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PARK. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

Mr. SANFORD. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he thinks the Committee on Accounts should try the case first before we decide whether or not we will allow the Clerk to have counsel?

Mr. GILLETT. I certainly do not.

Mr. SANFORD. How else can we find out the truth and facts of the case?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not see why, unless all precedent is that way, the House should in advance of the case furnish the money. It seems to me the Clerk should defend himself and pay his own bills, and when it is over, if he should prove he was not negligent, we should reimburse him. Now, you are assuming that the Clerk was not negligent. I hope he was not. If he was, I do not see why the House should pay his resulting expenses.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] yield so that I may ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman recall that some 10 years ago, when the Committee on Printing was sued by an outside party an authorization was asked of the House to employ counsel and defend it? The House did not determine the merits of the controversy. We naturally voted authority to employ counsel. Here is an official of the House with summons brought against him in a matter arising out of the performance of his official duties. Naturally he should have some counsel, and the sum of $500 is not large, to protect him in a suit arising out of the performance of the duties as an officer of this House.

Mr. GILLETT. As I remember that case it was against a committee of the House, and it seems to me that would make a distinction. But, at the same time, what occurs to me is that if you make his appropriation now and it proves that it was the Clerk's own fault and his carelessness, we are protecting him in that. It seems to me the proper way would be to wait.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are only protecting him to the extent of the counsel fees, and not the damages that may be awarded against him.

Mr. GILLETT. If he is subject to damages, why should he not pay his own counsel fees? It seems to me the proper way would be to wait. The Clerk would be under no financial embarrassment in advancing this money. Let him pay the expense and let us reimburse him if it is proper that he should be reimbursed. It seems to me that would be the natural way. If all precedent is on the other side, perhaps we should not do it.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. PARK. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me if the Clerk is sued in his official capacity and as an official is not at fault—that is, if in any action for which he has been sued he has used reasonable care and diligence in the performance of his duty—it is only just and right that the House should pay his reasonable attorney's fees.

ADJOURNMENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman from Georgia will yield, I wish to say that I have an engagement at 1 o'clock, and I would like to offer a resolution.

Mr. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 29.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Tuesday, the 18th of December, 1917, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian of Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1918.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COUNSEL FEES FOR CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes to authorize the Clerk of the House to employ counsel at an expense not to exceed $500. The chairman of the committee tells the House that the committee has made no investigation to determine whether the Clerk has been grossly at fault in this matter or not. It seems to me that to pass this resolution without more facts before the House would establish a very dangerous precedent. I understand that the case of Aaron P. Prioleau is one of these cases from the South where a negro candidate for Congress has brought a contest for a seat in this House after every biennial election for many years. As a result of these contests he has received several thousands of dollars for attorney fees and expenses. With this colored man these election contests seem to have been a sort of a biennial Christmas present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What district is that from?

Mr. NORTON. I am not advised of the district this man Prioleau is from, but one of the Members of the House acquainted with the facts in the case, as I have stated them——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it from South Carolina?

Mr. NORTON. He is from South Carolina, I believe. Any attempt that may have been made by the Clerk to shut off the payment to this man of the attorney's fees that he has received year after year is commendable. However, it seems to me that the payment of attorney's fees in cases like this without any more information than is now before the House establishes a bad precedent on the part of the House. I do not know whether, as a matter of fact, in this case, attorney's fees should be authorized for the Clerk, but the Committee on Accounts, it seems to me, should be able to come into this House and say to the Members that they know from investigation that the facts are such that it is only fair and reasonable on the part of the House to grant these attorney fees.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. Is it not presumed that the Clerk has properly attended to his duties in connection with this matter, and it is not necessary for the Committee on Accounts to bring in an inquiry as to that?

Mr. NORTON. I take it the gentleman is an attorney learned and experienced in the practice of the law. Does the gentleman think it is a good precedent for this House to establish to employ an attorney for any official of the House who may simply ask the House to authorize the employment of an attorney, at an expense not to exceed $500, in a suit for damages brought against the official in his official capacity?

Mr. DYER. I do. I take it that the law presumes that the public official has discharged his duties correctly and faithfully, and that when he needs counsel it is the duty of the Government to employ that counsel and pay for it.

Mr. NORTON. Then the gentleman would say that the Doorkeeper here, or any official or servant of this House against whom an action is brought, would only need to come to this House and say, "Permit me to employ an attorney at an expense not to exceed $500," and the request would be granted. I want to say, as a Member of this House, that such would be a bad precedent and one that should not be established.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think the gentleman would be willing to stand entirely by that statement as he has just made it.

Mr. NORTON. I stand strictly by that statement, that I would not set the precedent for every employee of the House to come before the House and say that he had an action brought against him and should have counsel at the Government expense on the presumption that he has performed his duties properly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman would not accord to the Doorkeeper the right to make an obligation to agree to certain expenditures. That kind of case bears no relation to such a matter as this. Now, I will say frankly that I do not know about this case, but——

Mr. NORTON. It seems to me the better precedent would be this: To have the Clerk employ counsel and defend his case, and then, if it was found that he was not negligent, the Congress should reimburse him for reasonable expenses incurred.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I do not think that principle is right at all. I do not think the Clerk of the House ought to be required to advance money out of his own pocket to defend an official act of his, if correctly taken. I think that he ought to have a fund for use in his official capacity without having to pay it out of his own pocket.

With the details of the case now before the House I am not at all familiar. I asked the gentleman a few minutes ago for information. I do not think that an official of this House ought to be required to advance the money out of his own pocket to defend his own official acts. If there is anything involved in it that is personal, that is an entirely different proposition; but he ought not to be required to make whatever sacrifice may be involved in advancing the funds out of his own pocket and out of his own personal account to pay for the defense of that action which he has taken as the official representative of this House.

Mr. NORTON. Let me proceed. I contend this——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, may I have about two minutes more time.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. NORTON. I contend this, that before the House should authorize an appropriation for attorneys' fees for the Clerk or any other official of the Government, sued in his official capacity, a showing should be made to the Committee on Accounts, such that the committee could come to the House and say that the committee believes from that showing——

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. In just a moment. Let me complete my statement—that the committee believed from that showing that the House was justified in granting that request made by the official for an appropriation for attorneys' fees.

Mr. PARK. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. PARK. I have made the statement twice. I can not speak loudly, because I am suffering from a cold this morning; but Mr. Trimble came before the committee, and Mr. Trimble stated that no contest papers had been filed with him, so far as he knew; that he had made investigation among the officials in his office and that they did not know anything about it. He is presumed by the law to do his duty. He is presumed in this case to have done his duty. What investigation can the Committee on Accounts make beyond that? Can it go into his office and into the files? Let the gentleman make some suggestion as to what they ought to do besides what is being done.

Mr. NORTON. He made the statement that no papers had been filed in his office, so far as he knew.

Mr. PARK. Yes; that no papers had been filed in his office, so far as he knew, and the clerks say the same thing to him.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia allow me a question?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman think if it had been proved that the Clerk had been negligent and had not performed his duty we should still pay?

Mr. PARK. That is for the court to decide.

Mr. GILLETT. If we paid it now, it would not be decided by the court. That is the point.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has again expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. PARK. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I understand the facts in this case to be these: A contest was filed, or alleged to be filed, against the sitting Member holding the certificate. The Clerk had rumor of it. He wrote the contestant that his papers were not on file. The contestant then sent his papers to the Speaker of the House. The Speaker of the House referred them to the proper committee. It was done in time. The committee decided against the contestant. The House agreed with the committee. The contestant then asked for his usual $2,000 fee, that he had been receiving biannually for many, many years. The Committee on Accounts allowed him $1,000, and brought their report upon the floor, and in a hotly contested hour here the House refused to give him even the $1,000.

These are the facts in the matter; and now, three years after, suit is brought in damages in the home State of the contestant against the Clerk of the House. The Clerk of the House will have to employ counsel to file his answer and make his defense. Under these circumstances I think there is no question but that the House should stand by its Clerk and furnish the counsel. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kansas will permit, what is the charge which the contestant makes in his complaint against the Clerk? What is the charge that he made? What is the ground of his action?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He sets out as the measure of his damages the salary for two years $15,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does he allege against the Clerk?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That the Clerk failed to file his papers. But his papers were not offered to the Clerk, but to the Speaker, and the Committee on Elections and this House decided against him.

Mr. ELSTON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question if he will yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. ELSTON. Do the duties of the Attorney General cover a case of this kind, of the defense of an officer of the House?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all.

Mr. ELSTON. There is no question as to that?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No.

Mr. JUUL. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that if we fail to stand by the Clerk of the House at this time, a new industry will spring up in this country, that of suing the Clerk for damages? [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, that may be.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me two minutes?

Mr. PARK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts two minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. After the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas, I certainly shall have no objection to this appropriation being made; but I wish to say that it does seem to me that as a rule when an officer of the House is sued there is no reason why the House should anticipate that he is innocent and advance money to him. It seems to me the proper method should be always to wait until the result of the suit. If an officer of the House was not negligent, of course we ought to reimburse him for anything he had to pay, as well as his counsel fees; but, on the other hand, if he was negligent, it seems to me he personally ought to be held responsible for the pecuniary results of his own negligence. In this case I am quite satisfied that this resolution should be passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman differentiate between a suit against a committee of the House, such as the committee that went over to New York to investigate the actions of the then Representative Buchanan and of United States District Attorney Marshall, and a suit against an officer of the House?

Mr. GILLETT. I should want to think about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that case, though some of us believed the members of the committee to be at fault, and later the Supreme Court overruled the position taken by the committee of the House, nevertheless we voted them money for counsel.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have here a list of Republican assignments to fill vacancies on committees, and I move that the following gentlemen be, and hereby are, elected to the committees named.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the election of the Members whose names will be reported by the Clerk for assignments to committee vacancies.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Thomas A. Chandler, of Oklahoma.
Joseph McLaughlin, of Pennsylvania.

APPROPRIATIONS.

William R. Wood, of Indiana.

CLAIMS.

Schuyler Merritt, of Connecticut.

ENROLLED BILLS.

James W. Husted, of New York.
Willfred W. Lufkin, of Massachusetts.

EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

John M. Baer, of North Dakota.

EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Willfred W. Lufkin, of Massachusetts.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS AND EXPOSITIONS.

Charles C. Kearns, of Ohio.
Louis W. Fairfield, of Indiana.

IRRIGATION OF ARID LANDS.

Charles B. Timberlake, of Colorado.

THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Frederick R. Lehlbach, of New Jersey.
Sherman E. Burroughs, of New Hampshire.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Richard N. Elliott, of Indiana.

RAILWAYS AND CANALS.

Louis B. Goodall, of Maine.

REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Willfred W. Lufkin, of Massachusetts.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Richard P. Freeman, of Connecticut.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

John F. Miller, of Washington.

RULES.

William A. Rodenberg, of Illinois.

THE TERRITORIES.

Schuyler Merritt, of Connecticut.
John M. Baer, of North Dakota.

WAR CLAIMS.

Burton L. French, of Idaho.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Willis C. Hawley, of Oregon.
Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations? If not, the Chair will put the question.

The motion was agreed to.

DECEMBER SALARIES.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read H. J. Res. 193, authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1917, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1917, on the day of adjournment of the present session for the holiday recess; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on the same day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowance for clerk hire for the said month of December.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous vote of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, I make the following motion:

I move that the following House joint resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women be rereferred from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, with jurisdiction, namely House joint resolution No. 1, introduced by myself; House joint resolution No. 3, by Miss RANKIN; House joint resolution No. 4, by Mr. MONDELL; House joint resolution No. 11, by Mr. KEATING; House joint resolution No. 19, by Mr. HAYDEN; House joint resolution No. 34, by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not now in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Section 3 of Rule XXII, found on page 378 of the Manual that I hold in my hand, provides that—

All other bills, memorials, and resolutions may, in like manner, be delivered, indorsed with the names of Members introducing them, to the Speaker, to be by him referred, and the titles and references thereof and of all bills, resolutions, and documents referred under the rules shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD of the next day, and correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House, without debate, in accordance with Rule XI, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

Of course, the Journal was read quite a while ago and much business has intervened. I wish the gentleman from California would let this motion go over until next week.

Mr. RAKER. I will state to the gentleman that I was prepared to present this following the reading of the Journal, and have presented it at the earliest opportunity, and believe that I am strictly within the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Journal was read quite a while ago, and we have appropriated several thousand dollars since.

Mr. LITTLE. I understood the rule which the gentleman read to say that at the conclusion of the Journal it "may be" presented.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It says may be made by the House, without debate, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee construe that language to mean that it must be read at that moment and that it shall not be brought up at any other time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It may be done if brought up at once.

Mr. LITTLE. It says that it "may be" brought up at that time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; it says that it may be done if brought up at that time.

Mr. LITTLE. That does not mean that it may not be brought up a little later.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I was here and had seen the Speaker, so as to be definite as to the rule, but I am going to leave it to the Speaker's judgment as to whether I am in time.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HELVERING. I understand that an agreement was made as to the recognition immediately after the conclusion of the reading of the Journal. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has conformed to that agreement for recognition. The fact that the Speaker could not recognize two men at a time, other gentlemen being recognized, prevented the gentleman from California from presenting it at that time. Am I correct in that statement?

The SPEAKER. That is a correct statement.

Mr. HELVERING. Then the objection of the gentleman from Tennessee will not lie.

The SPEAKER. Here is the situation: The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] had certain privileged matters that he had been trying to get up for five or six days. The Chair had put him off because there were other matters that he considered of more importance and entitled to the right of way.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. With the creation of this new committee a few days ago, does it not create a new jurisdiction, and is it not correct that an exception can be taken at any time to jurisdiction? Would not the Committee on the Judiciary, since the formation of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, lose its jurisdiction of this question, and would not the Committee on Woman Suffrage take jurisdiction of these resolutions automatically?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman, with entire candor, this question: The adoption of the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules on September 24 provided for the creation of a Committee on Woman Suffrage, and if the reference to it of certain matters did fundamentally change the rules of the House and fundamentally change the jurisdiction upon one of the constitutional questions, it was not created until day before yesterday, and in the meantime, if I am correctly informed, the Committee on the Judiciary has reported to the House the subject matter which is now in controversy. It seems to me that the House is entitled to vote on the report from the Committee on the Judiciary, which undoubtedly had jurisdiction within the time that it did report.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. If that be correct, then the prohibition amendment rightfully belongs to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. Is that correct?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think so, under the practice of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the situation. Since the gentleman from California had the conversation with the Speaker an unexpected thing has happened; that is, the Judiciary Committee has reported this bill out, and the report is now in the basket.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk says that it is on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I presume that the question presented to the Speaker is a question involving the business under the morning hour, which has rarely been called up in these later days.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is not the whole question. The Committee on the Judiciary has reported without recommendation a resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution covering the question of woman suffrage. That resolution is in the basket and on the calendar of the House. How are you going to take it from the committee which has reported it when it is not before the committee and refer it to the Committee on Woman Suffrage? Do gentlemen who are in favor of the resolution desire it to be taken from the calendar and referred to the other committee?

Mr. RAKER. I take it for granted that it is in the basket. I investigated this morning before the Journal was read, looked at the RECORD, and no report had been made. If it was in the basket, it was put in while we have been waiting for recognition. It can not be on the calendar unless they have taken it from the basket and taken it to the office. Until it comes up for consideration, the House has full power to refer or transfer it. In other words, the committee that has jurisdiction does not lose jurisdiction until its report is on the proper calendar of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I agree with the last contention of the gentleman from Tennessee; but I believe the first point made is good, because under the construction of the rule for the business of the morning hour I direct your attention to Rule XXIV, paragraph 1, which enumerates the business that may be considered.

The order of business is, first, the prayer, next the reading and approval of the Journal; then the correction of references of public bills, which, if the resolution had not been reported, would then have been in order; then the disposal of business on the Speaker's table; fifth, unfinished business; sixth, for the consideration of bills called up by committees. Bills have been considered this morning that have been called up by committees, namely, the resolutions presented by the Committee on Accounts. Therefore the order in which this matter could have been considered under the third designation—the correction of reference of public bills, has passed, and it is now too late to consider it, even if the resolution had not been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary and the matter having passed out of the jurisdiction of that committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if it is true, as a matter of fact, and I take it that it is true, that the bill is actually here, then this other matter being discussed is merely a moot question and has no sort of relation to anything, and there is no excuse to take up further time in discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Virginia is entirely correct in that.

Mr. LITTLE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of this committee and I would like to say a word about the matter.

The SPEAKER. About what?

Mr. LITTLE. This point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLE. That is all I seek. Mr. Speaker, a correct reading of the clause read by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] does not warrant any such interpretation as he gives it.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman think about the fact that unexpectedly to the Speaker, at least, the Chair does not know how many people knew it, but after the Chair had had his conversation with the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] this morning, the Committee on the Judiciary actually reported this resolution?

Mr. LITTLE. I think I see a solution of that difficulty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be obliged to the gentleman if he will state the solution.

Mr. LITTLE. This rule that gave these bills to the Committee on Woman Suffrage provided that any proposition with regard to woman suffrage should go to the Committee on Woman Suffrage. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that that meant just what it said. It does not need any interpretation. There is no ambiguity; there is nothing to discuss. The minute the House adopted that rule that proposition, ipso facto, automatically belonged to the Woman Suffrage Committee, and the Committee on the Judiciary had no more authority over it than the Committee on Accounts would have over a revenue bill. They had no right under our rules to report it in here. The only thing that could be done with the constitutional amendment when this rule was adopted was to send it to the Woman Suffrage Committee. That was the reason for adopting the rule. It states distinctly that all propositions with regard to woman suffrage should go to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, and that is where this should have gone.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not contend that the new rule about the Woman Suffrage Committee automatically took a bill away from a committee that already had it, does he?

Mr. LITTLE. That is exactly what I do contend.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to be heard for a moment on that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. In just a moment. It has been suggested that this is analogous to the creation of a new court, where certain cases were before the old court, and that the new court would take jurisdiction of them, but would not take cases already set in the old court for hearing unless some provision to that effect were made; but, Mr. Speaker, that is only when they have concurrent jurisdiction. The minute the old court was deprived of jurisdiction and jurisdiction was conferred upon the new court, the old court had nothing to do with those cases and could not do a thing with them, and the minute that the Woman Suffrage Committee was given full authority over this bill the other committee ceased to have any authority over it whatever.

The SPEAKER. How will the gentleman get a bill that has already been referred away from the committee to which it has been referred and have it referred to the Woman Suffrage Committee?

Mr. LITTLE. I take it that when this rule was adopted the Judiciary Committee would obey the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. But the committee was obeying the rules of the House.

Mr. LITTLE. Not when it brought the resolution in here over which they had no authority. Suppose the Committee on Accounts should bring in a revenue bill, it would amount to nothing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, will the Speaker hear me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, the woman suffrage proposed amendments to the Constitution have been referred from time immemorial to the Committee on the Judiciary. Amendment or resolution No. 1, the author of which is the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], was referred to our committee, as usual at the beginning of this Congress. It was decided not to report the resolution out during the war session of Congress, as we did not regard it as a war measure, but we did agree to give hearings, and for a day or two both those for the Susan B. Anthony amendment and those against it came before our committee, and we sat and gave them all the time they wanted. We told them we would not report the resolution during the war session but that we would in December. The very second meeting of the committee in December we took up two proposed amendments to the Constitution, one relating to prohibition and the other to woman suffrage. The House ordered the creation of a Committee on Woman Suffrage in September. I did not want anything unseemly to occur between the Committee on the Judiciary and this new committee of the House, and I inquired of the Speaker and other Members who knew the rules of the House and told them I did not want my committee to act upon this measure if we had no jurisdiction of it. I was told universally from the Speaker down that our committee did have jurisdiction of it; that there was no intention of taking it away from us as long as we had hearings on it and was ready to report. Having the resolution on our hands, on Tuesday last we ordered it reported out as we had stated we would do. The committee ordered the report and the report has been filed and is now before the House for its consideration. Our committee properly had jurisdiction of this proposed amendment, and we had hearings upon it and we have voted the resolution out of the committee. It is now on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not also a fact, I will ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that the chairman was instructed and endeavored to procure a rule from the Committee on Rules for the consideration of this resolution before the Christmas recess?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; that is true, too, Mr. Speaker. We did promise the ladies last summer that we would get a vote as quickly as possible after the war session ended. We did what we promised. Mr. Speaker, I make the further point of order that having had regular jurisdiction of this amendment, having had hearings, having determined upon a report and that report actually having been made, that under the rulings, too numerous to cite, it is now too late to ask that the resolution be taken from the Judiciary Committee. I make that further point of order and ask for a ruling on it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think this matter can be settled very easily, and I want to make a request for unanimous consent. It is perfectly evident, of course, that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is now opposed to the amendment [laughter], because it has been reported to the House and is now ready for action, and I think we can settle this matter good-humoredly and pleasantly by entering into a unanimous-consent agreement; and I therefore, pending the decision on the point of order, ask unanimous consent that the resolution providing for the submission of the question of the constitutional amendment, and all resolutions related thereto, shall lie upon the table until the end of this session of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. Of course I would have to object to that.

Mr. CALDWELL. I object to that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, without undue feeling and with perfect confidence and the highest respect for the distinguished gentleman who graces the chairmanship of the Committee on the Judiciary and all of that committee, we tried to take this baby, as the gentleman called it, from the Committee on the Judiciary before they acted on it and before they reported, so that the friends of the baby, or the women interested in this resolution, might assist the Committee on Woman's Suffrage in seeing that it had proper clothing and was brought to manhood or womanhood and given the right to participate in the functions of this Government. [Laughter and applause.] Now, as to the gentleman's statement that there was an effort to have this voted upon on the 17th or 18th of this month. All of those who are interested in this amendment—and I believe that is two-thirds of the House—asked and requested that this be voted on early in January, either the 7th or 8th of January. It was agreed upon by the leader that that would be satisfactory and that he would secure unanimous consent to take up this resolution on the 7th of January, when Congress reconvened after the holidays. These folks have been working accordingly. Only those who are opposed to the amendment, who think they can take some advantage of it, have stated now that they want, as my friend from Massachusetts, to vote on it before the holidays.

Mr. WEBB. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think the gentleman fairly represents me. I stated to my friend from California and everybody that I have no feeling about this matter. That I was willing to vote on this resolution whenever it is suitable to the women, although I am opposed to woman suffrage.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina correctly states it; that the gentleman was ready to take a vote on the 7th of January next?

Mr. WEBB. Any time.

Mr. RAKER. And in deference to him and the members of the committee I talked with, I will say they are satisfied with the request of the women who are asking for this resolution. That is the view of the majority as near as we could get on the other side, that they would fix it for the 7th of January. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I want to state to the gentleman from California that the reason that I objected yesterday when the request was made that this matter be assigned to the 7th of January was because of the action taken by our committee, and further because on the 5th of December last the majority leader, in his place on the floor of this House, stated in a colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that undoubtedly both of these resolutions would be voted on before the Christmas holidays, and that was done before the Woman's Suffrage Committee had been elected by this House, and in fact unanimous-consent agreement for action upon the prohibition resolution was secured in this House before the Committee on the Judiciary reported it out, and the gentleman should not assume that the only people to be considered in this matter are those in favor of woman suffrage. I submit that those who are opposed to it conscientiously should have some consideration, and that the gentleman from California and the majority leader and others interested in the passage of the resolution ought not to enter into agreement regardless of what others who may be opposed to them think.

Mr. RAKER. Would the gentleman have objection now to fixing January 7 for the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. WALSH. If that is satisfactory to the chairman of the committee, I should not object; certainly.

Mr. WEBB. If I may be allowed to make a preliminary statement, it was the general understanding, I think, among all the Members of the House that they wanted to get both of these amendments off of their hands before the holidays and that is the reason why the Committee on the Judiciary requested the chairman of the committee to ask the Committee on Rules to dispose of woman suffrage and the prohibition amendment before the holidays, and I did ask the Committee on Rules; that is, I stated that to members of the Committee on Rules.

The committee itself, however, has no objection as to any date that you want to set to vote on this amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Would the chairman ask the House now to fix January 7 for the consideration of this amendment?

Mr. WEBB. If that is more agreeable than the 18th of this month, I would be glad to vote on it.

Mr. RAKER. Those of us who have gone over the matter wanted the 7th of January.

Mr. WEBB. Is that satisfactory to all advocates of woman suffrage?

Mr. RAKER. It is. I have talked to both sides.

Mr. WEBB. Then I have no objection, and I do not think the committee has.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have anticipated the decision of the Speaker on this snarl that the matter has gotten into, and have introduced a joint resolution providing for woman suffrage that can immediately or has already been referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage. They can act on it this afternoon and report it favorably and have it on the calendar next week.

Mr. RAKER. I will say that I would not take that course as chairman of that committee. I am not going to act after one committee has acted in the House. It is not treating them fairly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I take it the gentleman was anxious to have the matter referred to his committee.

Mr. RAKER. I want to do it under the rules, and in that way there can be no criticism from any man.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But that is exactly under the rules.

Mr. RAKER. Under the strict reading of this rule, before that bill was filed this morning there is no question on earth but that the Speaker of the House would have transferred its jurisdiction to the Committee on Woman Suffrage. The committee made their report and put it in the box in the last 15 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from California in good faith—and I take it he was in good faith—made his motion to refer all the matters to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. RAKER. Surely.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Bills heretofore introduced on the subject were properly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, there being no Committee on Woman Suffrage. Now, there being a Committee on Woman Suffrage I have introduced a resolution that can be referred to that committee and reported on this afternoon, and the committee's report will take precedence of any other report on that subject.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MEEKER. How is it possible for me to get recognition? I have been waiting here so patiently.

Mr. RAKER. In just a moment. Pending this matter, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the voting on woman suffrage be fixed for Monday, the 7th day of January.

The SPEAKER. In making that request you withdraw this?

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that it be fixed on that day, of course.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], in order to settle this muddle, asks unanimous consent that the woman-suffrage amendment be considered on the 7th day of January.

Mr. WEBB. As a substitute for that unanimous consent, I ask that unanimous consent be given to vote on this resolution next Tuesday, the 18th. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield to that. The gentleman is aware that the House this morning has passed a resolution to adjourn the session for the holidays on next Tuesday. Many gentlemen will be going away. Why hasten? Why not give everybody a fair opportunity, the same as the gentleman has had and the Members have had who wanted to bring up the prohibition amendment?

Mr. WEBB. I did that because the members of the committee wanted me to do it.

The SPEAKER. You can not offer an amendment for unanimous consent unless the Members agree to it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent that the woman-suffrage amendment be considered on the 7th day of January. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER. Now, does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] want to renew his request?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir. In obedience to the request of the Judiciary Committee, I ask that next Tuesday be set aside to consider the woman-suffrage amendment.

Mr. LUNN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LANGLEY objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

The SPEAKER. In the proper conduct of the business of the House some months ago—I do not remember the date—the Chair referred this constitutional amendment to the Judiciary Committee, where constitutional amendments have usually gone for the last 125 years. There was not any such thing as a Woman Suffrage Committee at that time. Very early in September, I think it was, they passed a resolution creating the committee. As a matter of fact it was appointed in the last two or three days. When the Chair refers a bill he parts company with it, for that purpose at least. The Chair has no more right to take a bill from a committee than any other Member of the House has. Now, it would take a very narrow construction to sustain the original point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] made. So there is no use to pass on that. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, if that were the only point of order, the Chair would be very much inclined to overrule it temporarily on account of the conversation the Chair had with the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] as to the order in which the business was coming here this morning. It is not necessary to pass upon that point.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, before you rule I wish to be heard just a moment.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. RAKER. Oh, gentlemen should not be impatient with me. I have hitherto taken up very little time.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Would it not be satisfactory to your committee to let the matter stand as it is by passing a little resolution giving the Suffrage Committee credit for killing bear? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. I do not quite gather the point in that elucidative remark of the gentleman [laughter], but that is all right. On the question of jurisdiction—and I would like to have the attention of the House a moment; I promise I will be short—under the rules, under the strict construction of the rules, there is no method provided for a case of this kind unless the House adopts an analogous proceeding for taking up the matter. You can transfer the jurisdiction or rerefer the bill by unanimous consent, and by vote of the committee having jurisdiction, or by the request of the committee claiming jurisdiction when a bill has been erroneously referred. That could not occur in this case.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield in just a moment. Let me finish this first. In this instance the House itself, since the bill was referred, amended the rules and created a new jurisdiction. There can not be any doubt about the jurisdiction conferred. The rule reads:

All proposed action touching the subject of woman suffrage * * *, to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The House adopted this rule. There is no rule of the House now in existence by which, if you will follow it, this resolution can be disposed of to the committee having proper jurisdiction, and still at the same time the House is not so impotent that it can not conduct its business and transfer the jurisdiction of bills to a committee that it has created, particularly under the circumstances of this case. But notwithstanding that belief and understanding the situation, I this morning saw the Speaker. He stated it as it occurred. I waited to give the other gentlemen a chance, and did not follow right on the rule strictly and act immediately after the reading of the Journal and make the motion directed by the Committee on Woman Suffrage this morning. And in the meantime—and I want you gentlemen to think about that—I am discussing the rule.

In the meantime, pending the discussion, the committee filed a report, not a favorable report, but simply a report shoving it back to the House without consideration, without either a favorable or an unfavorable report; so that, legally speaking, the House having control of its procedure, where none is provided, using an analogous proceeding, as in our courts, in all courts of the land, that where there is no rule laid down you apply a procedure analogous to the usual procedure in a court of justice or court of law—therefore a motion of this kind is eminently proper and eminently fit that I should move the House to transfer this jurisdiction to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am asking this question in all sincerity, without a disposition to be captious. What difference does it make to the House and to the country at large what committee reports out this resolution, so long as we have it here to act upon? [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. I will answer that question. The Committee on the Judiciary has reported adversely, in fact. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House on the 24th of September, 1917—and the RECORD I hold before me—said the Judiciary Committee was against this amendment. Now that a new committee has been appointed to handle this special subject, do not you believe the resolution ought to be in the hands of those who are in favor of it and not in the hands of those who oppose it, as stated by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RAKER. I want to finish my statement.

Mr. MEEKER. As a member of the committee, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RAKER. On page 7374 of the RECORD I read as follows:

Mr. MONDELL. Did I understand the gentleman to say that his committee is ready to report favorably on the constitutional amendment in December?

Mr. WEBB. No; I did not say favorably; I mean to say that the majority of the Judiciary Committee is opposed to woman suffrage, as is also a majority of the House against it.

Now, that being the case, with absolute respect and confidence of feeling, nevertheless I believe that where we have our committees appointed they ought to have charge of the matter.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. MEEKER. Are we, then, to understand that the creation of this committee, which was for the purpose of hearing this question discussed in open court, was effected with knowledge in advance that it was to be favorable to the amendment?

Mr. RAKER. I believe the committee are in favor of it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from California submit to an inquiry?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is not the gentleman from California unique in history in this, that he is the only lawyer on earth who ever moved for a new trial before he lost his case? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAKER. I want to answer that. I want to say to the gentleman that when I learned that the judge was against me and had so stated on the street, I spent four months at our State capitol getting a bill introduced, so that I could take the jurisdiction from him, so that I could get a fair trial by a man who was unprejudiced in regard to the matter, and then I was ready to take my chances.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule and get rid of this.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Rule! Rule!

Mr. WEBB. I want to ask my friend from California if he has not undertaken to do just what he objected to that judge doing? Has he not undertaken to pack the committee so as to get a favorable decision?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no!

The SPEAKER. The Chair started to state the history of this peculiar transaction. Some months ago this resolution was introduced into the House, and undoubtedly under the rules and practice it ought to have gone to the Judiciary Committee. The thing dragged along, and we had an agreement that we would not pass anything except war measures, and the Judiciary Committee, acting under that understanding, never reported the resolution. In September the Rules Committee brought in a rule to create this new Committee on Woman Suffrage, but the committee was not appointed until three or four days ago. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] talked to me. I did not have the remotest idea whether the Judiciary Committee were going to report the resolution or not, but they did report it after this conversation, and that changed the situation entirely. This new rule here about this woman-suffrage business—

All proposed action touching the question of woman suffrage, to the Committee on Woman Suffrage—undoubtedly applied to any business coming up after that rule was adopted, and not to the business that had been started before that, even by introduction into the House. After the Speaker assigns a bill to a committee he has no more control over it than the man in the moon, not a bit. I can not take a bill away from a committee, and the rule I have just read does not act automatically and is not retroactive. It would require exactly the motion that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has made here. Well, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] made the suggestion some time ago that inasmuch as the Committee on the Judiciary had reported this resolution, that ended the matter. The decisions are numerous that when a committee has done that, even if it did not have original jurisdiction—which this Judiciary Committee did have in this case—it has the right to go on with it, and he further suggested that all the rest of this talk was moot business. That is about the right name for it, as far as I can find out. If the Judiciary Committee had not reported this resolution, then I would have carried out my statement to the gentleman from California; but the decisions are too numerous even to quote that where an erroneous reference is made—and the case is stronger where a correct reference was made—and the committee reports or even considers the matter referred to it, it has jurisdiction. And the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] finally crystallized the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia into a point of order properly made. The Chair would be compelled under the circumstances of this case to hold that, as far as committees are concerned, this thing was concluded when the Judiciary Committee made its report, and the Chair so holds.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority members of the Judiciary Committee may have three days in which to file a report in favor of this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks three days in which the minority may file their views. Is there objection?

Mr. MEEKER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WEBB. I hope my friend will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. By request of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 242 be rereferred from the Committee on the Election of President and Vice President and Representatives in Congress to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The SPEAKER. Has that bill anything to do with woman suffrage?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; it is a bill to protect the rights of women citizens of the United States to register and vote for Senators of the United States and for Members of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Where is that bill?

Mr. RAKER. I have it in my hand.

Mr. GILLETT. We would like to know what the bill proposes to do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to know, too.

Mr. RAKER. That bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That women who are citizens of the United States and possess such qualifications of age, residence, property, or education as may be required of men to make them legal voters in the several States shall be eligible to register and vote in all States of the Union at all elections for Senators of the United States and for Members of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is that a law or a constitutional amendment?

Mr. RAKER. This is just a law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman the first thing Monday morning after the Journal is read, to make his motion.

Mr. RAKER. All right.

Mr. MEEKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Did I understand the Chair to say that he would recognize the gentleman on next Monday?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair will recognize him the first thing after the Journal is read on Monday, to make that motion.

Mr. MEEKER. Just for the motion. It comes up in the morning-business hour only?

The SPEAKER. Yes; and it is not debatable.

Mr. CANNON. Has there not been an agreement made that the vote shall be taken at 5 o'clock Monday on the resolution submitting the prohibition amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If I had been present, I should have objected to it; but the motion of the gentleman from California is likely to lead to a roll call, and the time for debate on the prohibition amendment is exceedingly short.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from California immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday morning.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that January 10 be assigned as the day for the consideration in the House, and for voting upon House joint resolution 1, known as the national woman suffrage resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the 10th day of January be set aside for the consideration of House joint resolution 1 and for voting on the same. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. A while ago under a misapprehension I objected to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina for a vote next Tuesday on the suffrage amendment, but immediately withdrew the objection. I want to know if the Chair announced that I had objected. I did not quite catch what he said. I want to be sure that the RECORD shows that my objection was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair said there was objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. I withdrew my objection when I was assured that I was wrong in my first impression that the purpose of the request was antagonistic to the amendment. Personally, I think we ought to wait until after the holiday recess when there is a full attendance, but I am for the proposition and ready to vote at any time.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules be requested to bring in a rule providing that the House may be permitted to vote on woman suffrage on January 7.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

PNEUMATIC-TUBE SERVICE.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 114 and consider the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution extending the commission provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, with the same authorities, powers, and provisions until on or before March 1, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was read.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I did not apprehend that there would be any fight against giving the Committee on Rules a stenographer. My experience has been that the chairman of the committee needs all the help that he is authorized to have under the rules of the House, including a secretary. I would like to say to the House that since I have been chairman of the committee, without any charge or suggestion of additional compensation, I have had compiled every rule and every report in the last three Congresses and have had them bound in book form for the use of the members of the committee and the Members of the House. The clerk to the committee is now engaged in the additional task of compiling every decision that has been rendered during the three Congresses on every one of the rules that has been presented to the House. If the House does not see fit to allow a stenographer I am going to continue the work. I am sorry that I could not get here in time this morning, but I was unavoidably detained in the Post Office Department on official business.

I make the statement to the House so that it may have full light on the subject.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. If the clerk was not doing this work which the gentleman alludes to, what other work would he be doing?

Mr. POU. The clerk is busy all the time. I have never seen a time when the clerk was not busy. I do not believe that there is a busier clerk to any committee of this Congress than the clerk to the Committee on Rules, excepting, of course, the great committees having charge of supply bills. He has no time to write letters. He is answering questions and serving Members most of the time while the House is in session. He is a very accommodating young man and takes a great deal of pride in answering every inquiry made by Members of the House on any subject connected with the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask how many special rules are now pending before the Committee on Rules?

Mr. POU. There are 39 resolutions, of which 9 are House joint resolutions. The gentleman from Wisconsin knows that the work of the Rules Committee is not confined to pending rules. Time after time gentlemen come in and want questions looked up. The gentleman from Wisconsin must know that the work of the clerk of this committee is a full man's work.

Mr. LENROOT. The "gentleman from Wisconsin" remembers that in the past a session clerk was not provided for until the congestion of the business before the Committee on Rules was such as to make it necessary, and at that time the ordinary business of the committee did not require a session clerk. The business before the Committee on Rules at this session is less than it has ever been in my knowledge.

Mr. POU. It is exceedingly difficult to secure a stenographer, as everybody knows. In order to successfully do the work of the committee it will take every person under the control of the chairman, as the gentleman from Wisconsin will find out if his party gets in power and he is made chairman of the Committee on Rules.

FEDERAL JUDGE FOR MIDDLE DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing some resolutions adopted by the judicial convention of Tennessee last week in relation to the necessity for an additional Federal judge for the middle district of Tennessee, and also a resolution on the conduct of the war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the resolutions referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas the middle district of Tennessee is the only Federal judicial district in the United States, save one, which does not have a United States district judge of its own; and

Whereas in recent years numerous laws have been enacted by Congress which have produced much additional work for such courts, and this together with the natural increase in litigation, has resulted in such a volume of litigation that no one judge can dispose of the business of the Federal district courts in both east Tennessee and middle Tennessee; and

Whereas a large amount of work is rapidly accumulating by reason of prosecutions under the selective-service law, the speedy disposition of which is of vital importance to the Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention does hereby earnestly urge all the members of the Tennessee delegation in the Congress of the United States to use all legitimate means to have created a new Federal judgeship in and for the middle district of Tennessee at the very earliest possible moment, the public welfare requiring it.

The war resolution is as follows:

CONDUCT OF THE WAR.

Whereas a world war is raging in which autocracy is arrayed against democracy, tyranny against liberty, brutality against humanity, savagery against civilization, and our Government has entered this conflict in behalf of democracy, liberty, humanity, and civilization: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we heartily indorse our President and the Congress and pledge them our loyal and unanimous support in all that has been done or that may be done by them in this crisis looking to a victorious and triumphant conclusion of this conflict so as to assure the perpetuation of our institutions and a permanent peace throughout the world; and be it further

Resolved, That we condemn Prussian militarism and denounce it as the curse of the world, which has drenched the earth with blood, violated every precept of humanity and civilization, disregarded the rights of neutrals and nonbelligerents, set at naught every principle of honor among men and nations, and now by terrorism seeks to subjugate the world.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have one further request to make. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial in the Evening Star on the services of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

TWO HOUSE PROMOTIONS.

Mr. SHERLEY for chairman of the Appropriations Committee and Mr. SIMS for chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee are excellent selections. Both have served long in the House. Both are familiar with the subjects they will be called upon to handle. And those subjects have taken on increased importance by reason of the war. Appropriations have mounted to the skies. No such figures have ever before been considered by Congress. Interstate commerce is now a foremost problem, with war as well as peace connections.

It is noteworthy, too, that both Mr. SHERLEY and Mr. SIMS are friends of the President and supporters of his policies. They will work in harmony with him. And in war matters harmony between the legislative and the executive branches of the Government is highly important. There is so much to be done, and so much of it of unfamiliar character, working at cross purposes would be expensive to the people.

Mr. SHERLEY has long been an advocate of a budget. He has probably given more attention to the subject than any other national legislator. He has worked it out with care, and presents it persuasively. If these were peace times, his promotion might operate in the interest of the adoption of a budget plan.

But the war times are not favorable to that reform. Estimates are extremely difficult. Income and outlay fluctuate. The Government's needs must be supplied, whatever they may be. If money is lacking, more must be raised. The Government is now a heavy borrower. It can not live within its means.

Mr. SHERLEY, a southern man, succeeds Mr. FITZGERALD, a northern man. Mr. SIMS, a southern man, succeeds Mr. ADAMSON, another southern man. But section had nothing to do with either selection. Both promotions rest on merit and seniority. Both are competent men and succeed competent men. And just now sectionalism cuts much less than its usual figure. It is very little considered. All public men are to-day thinking nationally more than ever.

There is nothing disturbing, therefore, in these two changes. Rather is the country assured of good work under the direction of two men who know the ropes, and bring to their places the confidence and respect of their legislative associates.

PENSIONS.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the omnibus pension bill, H. R. 7634, for consideration.

The Clerk reported the title to the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7634) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this bill contains 344 names, and 90 per cent of them were in bills considered by the last Congress. The Committee on Invalid Pensions had no bill after the 1st of February of this year. The actual cost of the bill per month is $3,918. If the soldiers pensioned by this bill should live until the end of the year, the actual cost of the bill would be a trifle over $49,000. These are nearly all desperate cases. The bill will not cost in the aggregate over $40,000. The increases are all moderate. No widows are pensioned in this bill, except eight who have helpless and dependent children. For the information of the House I desire to state that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have decided that they will consider no pension bills for widows, owing to the fact that the act of October 6, 1917, provided a pension of $25 a month for all widows of the Civil War. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of William B. Hampshire, helpless and dependent child of William W. Hampshire, late of Company C, Twenty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Jefferson Cherry, late of Company C, Forty-eighth Regiment, and Company B, One hundred and forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wesley B. Calder, late of Company A, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John J. Bradford, late of Company C, Forty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Russell, late of Company A, Twentieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James K. Jennings, late of Company D, Seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward Wilkinson, late of Company A, One hundred and sixty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank Logsdon, late of Company K, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Butterbaugh, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theodore S. Smith, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John C. Carroll, late of Company A, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William M. Pace, late of Company E, Third Regiment Tennessee Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David H. Hatfield, late of Company I, Thirty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James G. Young, late of Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John R. Ward, late of Company K, Fiftieth Regiment New York Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter F. Baker, late of Company G, Fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander Hall, late of Company I, Twenty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oscar G. Robinson, late of Company A, Eighth Regiment Massachusetts Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph W. Snave, late of Company E, Seventy-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph McArmstrong, late of Company H, One hundred and seventy-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew Robertson, late of Company B, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Francis M. Choat, late of Company A, Fifty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Harris, late of Company D, One hundred and eighty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Perry A. Crandall, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elijah Campbell, late of Company C, Twenty-second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Philip Richards, late of Company A, Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Philip Liebrick, late of Company I, First Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Bachman, late of Company G, Eighty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jay P. Eddy, late of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac Luke, late unassigned, Sixteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lemuel Cross, late of Company E, Ninety-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Heastan, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Moses McCleary, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis H. Bradshaw, late of Companies F and A, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Bellnap, late of Company E, Twenty-third Regiment, and unassigned, Twenty-ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elsden B. Stephens, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred H. Chaplin, late a first-class fireman, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank Drewes, sr., late an ordinary seaman, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elijah A. Hearn, late of Company C, First Regiment Delaware Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward B. Ward, late of Company I, Forty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas R. Beasley, helpless and dependent child of John C. Beasley, late of Company A, Second Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Sidney G. Sidner, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Sewing, late of Company B, First Regiment, and Company I, Fifth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adam Allwein, late of Company H, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joshua Gage, late of Company C, First Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jeremiah Shine, late of Company H, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Watson, late of Company C, Third Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Marshall Barnes, late of Company L, Third Regiment Colorado Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander J. Souden, late of Company F, Forty-ninth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin F. Umfleet, late of Company F, Fiftieth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis J. Cundiff, late of Company F, Forty-seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Riley A. Reeves, late of Company B, Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Ford, late of Second Battery, Minnesota Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James F. Bellew, late of Company G, Thirty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Francis S. Layton, late of Company D, Fourth Battalion Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Erow, late of Company A, One hundred and seventy-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sanford Earley, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elisha W. Phillips, late of Company F, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel M. Reese, late of Company B, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nicholas Wolf, late of Company I, One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel D. Mowrey, alias David O. Mowrey, late of Lambert's company, Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Campbell, late of Companies G and C, Eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton Cooper, late of Companies I and B, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Bishop, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Doyle, late of Company K, Sixty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Quick, late of Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elias Cleveland, late of Company K, Eighty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ezra McIntyre, late of Company C, Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, First New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John F. Bass, late of Company E, Seventy-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John J. McKenna, late of Company L, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harvey Bartley, late of Company G, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Whetzal, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Trenter, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Atwell, late of Company F, Third Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Franklin Manning, late of Company L, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Hoskins, late of Company A, Seventy-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert S. Scroggins, alias Allen S. Craig, late of Battery H, West Virginia Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles White, late of Company G, Seventeenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Hindman, late of Company F, First Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Swearengin, late of Company C, Twenty-fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William T. Stone, late of Company H, Fifteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander McGahan, late of Company K, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George M. Mays, late of Company D, Fifty-second Regiment Kentucky Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Enos R. Clark, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Stephen J. Coleman, late of Company A, First Regiment East Florida Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Andrist, late of Company I, One hundred and seventy-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George L. Davis, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Luther S. Pitcher, late of Company A, Forty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Dabner D. Wright, late of Company D, Third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Henry Jenkins, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hamilton L. Karr, late of Company G, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Ambrosier, late of Company H, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James H. Scott, late of Company D, Sixty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert B. Clark, late of Company D, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William G. Sadler, late of Company E, Third Regiment, and Fifty-eighth Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay hm a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles W. Foster, late of Fourteenth Independent Battery, Massachusetts Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Nutter, late of Company B, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George D. King, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Devon, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment, and Company K, Eighth Regiment, Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Cassidy, late of Company H, Twenty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Michael Greeley, late of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph N. Abbott, late of Company B, Ninety-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Myers, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $21 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Sanders, late of Company E, Fifty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Norman B. Yarwood, late of Company D, First Battalion Sixteenth United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Rivers, late of Company G, Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Kinne, late of Company G, One hundred and eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James S. Doolittle, late of Company H, One hundred and fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel A. Maxfield, late of Company H, Forty-ninth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Mallet, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel W. Thurston, late of Company I, One hundred and ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Pary McNair, late of Company H, Third Regiment Potomac Home Brigade, Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin F. Shipley, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert M. Butts, alias Albert J. Stewart, late of Battery D, First Maryland Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Smith, late of Company E, Third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William L. Tate, late of Company I, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Melville F. Allyn, late of Companies E and C, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Johnson, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert N. Hawkins, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and Company E, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ananias B. Reeser, late of Company D, Hickory County Battalion, Mounted Home Guards, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel H. Wise, late of Company A, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George A. Rubush, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred M. Wheeler, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment, and Company D, Fourteenth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jeremiah R. Sensenich, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eli House, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James K. P. Wyman, late of Company G, Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wilson Taylor, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christopher C. Russell, late of Company E, Fifteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Barker, late of Company F, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Garrett W. Freeman, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward S. Ragan, late of Company B, Baltimore Battalion Maryland Volunteer Light Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac W. Waters, late of Company K, Forty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. Raines, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Shepherd M. Gaston, late of Company E, Eighty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christian Lock, late of Company D, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Anderson J. Bowman, late of Company K, Ninety-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Julia Esther Hammond, helpless and dependent child of Israel B. Hammond, late of Company I, Twenty-eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John W. Robinson, late of Company D, Thirty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Null, late of Company E, One hundred and seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Warren, late of Company F, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Hank, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph A. Stephens, late of Company G, Third Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Thomas, late a seaman, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Marcus L. Moore, late of Company E, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles M. Dority, late of Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Richard M. Johnson, late of Company F, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel L. Brown, late of Company C, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry King, late of Company D, Forty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James J. Short, late of Company H, First Regiment Alabama Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John G. Hunter, late of Company H, Twenty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peleg B. Washburn, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas H. Goodrich, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward G. Sanchez, late of Company A, First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles P. Cook, late of Company K, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David E. Godfrey, late of Company G, Fifth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Schwicardi, late of Company G, Thirty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Helen A. Benjamin, helpless and dependent child of John Benjamin, late of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment New York Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George R. White, late of Company B, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William B. Porter, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Emmet Ellis, late of Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin Cuddeback, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry L. McMullin, late of Company K, Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Simon Kephart, late of Companies K and A, One hundred and tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abner A. Hurt, late of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James C. Haslett, late of Company L, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Deborah Sebring, helpless and dependent child of John Sebring, late of Company F, Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Monroe J. Potts, late of Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Phillip P. Keller, late of Company G, Thirty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Derning, late of Company B, Sixteenth Regiment, and Company K, Twelfth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo Fiero, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward N. Whitney, late of Company B, Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jasper N. Cummins, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Orville H. Patten, late of Company B, Twenty-first Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David H. Crumpacker, late of Company E, Forty-fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert Mason, late of Company E, Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Calvin Custer, late of Company L, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Horton S. Calland, late of Company D, Ninety-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ephriam Bartlett, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Johns, late of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George T. Harwood, late of Company K, Ninetieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Nineteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hutcheons B. Durham, late of Company H, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jonathan H. Robbins, late of Company F, Eighty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theodore Tooley, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Dominick, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nelson Hart, late of Company D, Second Regiment United States Sharpshooters, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Israel L. Hahn, late of Company M, Fifteenth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Townsend Roberts, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry M. Cottrill, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mathew Whitford, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry G. Hixson, late of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Philip H. Lind, late of Company H, Seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Albert Helms, late of Company G, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Proudfit, late of Company A, Thirty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, Third New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward Gridley, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles E. Knox, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eaton Kinney, late of Company F, First Regiment New York Dragoons, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Little, late of Company B, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Covell, late of Independent Company C, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Noah W. Tryon, late of Seventh Battery, Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William McClarren, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wilson J. Parker, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel H. Keech, late of Company G, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred T. Hawk, late of Company K, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William R. Gillespie, late of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi Vandervort, late of Company B, Eighty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac Postlethwait, late of Company B, Two hundred and sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Pope, late of Company I, Fifth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel R. Easter, late of Company A, One hundred and seventy-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. McCormick, late of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John C. Bollinger, late of band, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Carrie B. Wilson, helpless and dependent child of Braman J. Wilson, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James Buchanan, late of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sidney E. Timerman, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Guest, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ebenezer Riley, late of Company K, First Regiment Maryland Veteran Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew York, late of Company A, Forty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Lee, late of Company F, Stone County Missouri Home Guards, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Felix Karl, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Shadrack B. Johnson, late of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Greenbury Vickrey, late of Company I, Sixty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Sanns, late of Company A, One hundred and fifty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John J. Callahan, late of Companies K and C, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Johnston B. Geisinger, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Myrtle Webster, widow of Norman E. Webster, late of Battery B, Second Illinois Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of John A. Davidson, late of Company F, One hundred and sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry J. Kinney, late of Company L, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oliver Budd, late of Company K, Eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Cashman, late of Company C, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Decanter, late unassigned, Tenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Langley, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Josiah Dock, late of Company K, Thirty-eighth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo M. Hobbs, late of Company E, Sixty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob D. Peterson, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Wetzel, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Row, late of Company B, Forty-third Regiment, and Company H, Fiftieth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Willaby L. Groves, late of Company I, Thirty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and Company I, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew M. Murray, late of Sixty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theresa Dietz, widow of Henry Dietz, late of Company B, First Regiment United States Reserve Corps, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Mary Gehres, former widow of Jacob Diehl, late of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment, and Company A, Forty-third Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Henry Garvey, late of Company D, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Carter, late of Company I, Forty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Flint, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christian Broemer, late of Company E, Forty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Amos McKinley, late of Company E, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Silas H. Shepherd, late of Fourth Independent Company, Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Doctor E. Davis, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Jones, late of Fourth Independent Company, Ohio Volunteer Cavalry and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Dudley G. Allen, late of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month.

The name of Harrison Smith, late of Company H, Second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Francis M. Uhler, late of Company H, Seventy-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henderson Craft, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John F. Gibbons, late of Company M, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Ferster, late of Troop G, Third Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William McCloud, late of Company A, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Stillman, late of Company I, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles W. Green, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Augustus A. Prugh, late of Company C, Fortieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Schmidt, late of Company H, One hundred and tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Moritz C. Young, late of Company B, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac N. Splawn, late of Company G, First Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Fairfield Dresser, late of Company M, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Daniels, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred York, late of Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frances A. Sapp, widow of Willis M. Sapp, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Frederick Freund, late of Company K, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Hartman, late of Company D, Sixty-third Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of James T. Hewitt, late of Company G, Forty-eighth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Winfield S. Gregory, late of Company E, Fiftieth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander H. Lamb, late of Company B, Second Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Davis, late of Company G, Forty-eighth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John C. Shields, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alfred G. Daniels, late of Companies L and F, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harrison W. Fox, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Julius O. Deming, late of Company F, First Regiment, and Company G, Sixth Regiment, Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lafayette Barnes, late of Company I, Sixty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Clark K. Denney, late of Company F, Forty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac N. Mahan, late of Company H, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Pelly T. Martin, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Ward, late of Company I, One hundred and thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Newton J. Wells, late of Company C, Eighty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Hoover, late of Company D, Eighty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John C. Baker, late of Company H, Fifty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John I. Smallwood, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles L. Dunham, late of Company L, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Simon J. Martin, late unassigned, Fifty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Porter W. Roundy, late hospital steward, Thirty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William M. Gosnell, late of Company A, Thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Delia A. Lapham, helpless and dependent child of Alphonso M. Lapham, late of Company C, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George C. Presley, late of Company D, Twentieth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. Bailey, late of Company E, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Adams, late of Company D, Twenty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. Fesler, late of Company B, Forty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Gessner, late of Company K, One hundred and nineteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Josiah James, late of Company D, First Battalion Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Follette, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and Company G, First Regiment Maine Veteran Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas T. Owens, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Seventh Battalion Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary J. Guy, widow of William Guy, alias Andrew J. Guy, alias Charles G. Artz, late of Company F, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and Company C, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Anna Jacobs, widow of William B. Jacobs, late of Fifty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Lilly Howard, helpless and dependent child of Cyrus Howard, late of Company H, One hundred and eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William R. Boren, late of Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Devol, late of Thirty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Troxler, late of Company E, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Simon Bollinger, late of Battery D, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin Griffith, late of Company E, One hundred and seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Beverly W. Brittain, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas L. Jennison, late of Company G, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles G. Ginther, alias Charles Skinner, late of Company L, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Anna Smith, widow of Oscar Smith, late of Company D, Twenty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Henry C. Livezey, late of Company I, Sixty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Warren, late of Company C, One hundredth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elisha L. Powers, late of Company K, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Nash, late of Company K, One hundred and eighty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George M. Loring, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Seventy-fifth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Shaffer, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Asbery Mayfield, late of Company P, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James N. McHenry, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Gaskins, late of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William L. Faucett, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, First Regiment West Virginia Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi Brock, late of Company F, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William C. Martin, late of Company K, First Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo Whitehouse, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John S. Skeels, late of Companies I and C, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edwin C. Beall, late of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph McGuire, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Collins South, late of Company F, Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Josephine Freeman, widow of Charles C. Freeman, late of Company B, Sixty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $37 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Daisy B. Freeman, helpless and dependent child of said Charles C. Freeman, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Josephine Freeman the name of said Daisy B. Freeman shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of the death of said Josephine Freeman.

The name of Michael Kouth, late of Company B, Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob L. Hinkle, late of Company G, Twenty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John R. Houchin, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wallace Chamberlin, late of Company I, Forty-ninth Regiment Massachusetts Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John E. Stanton, alias Edward A. Stanton, late of Battery D, First Battalion Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Bardill, late of Company F, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Fagley, late of Company K, Eightieth Regiment, and Company A, One hundred and eighty-fifth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Catherine O'Connor, widow of Timothy O'Connor, late of Company H, Thirty-fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $37 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Ellen O'Connor, helpless and dependent child of said Timothy O'Connor, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: Provided further, That in the event of the death of Catherine O'Connor, the name of said Ellen O'Connor shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Catherine O'Connor.

The name of Ansil T. Bartlett, late of Company D, Fifty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frederick Christy, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Wright, late of Company B, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Kindle, late of Company B, Eighty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hobart Hamilton, late of the One hundred and second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Daniels, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander Frazier, late of Company D, Twenty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Lovens, late of Company K, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry J. Loughmiller, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Kimball, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendments were severally offered and severally agreed to:

On page 31, line 8, being the case of George T. Harwood, Company K, Nineteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, insert the dollar mark before the figures "40."

On page 40, line 10, being the case of Willaby L. Groves, strike out "apension" and insert "a pension."

On page 52, line 3, being the case of Anna Smith, strike out the word "window" and insert in lieu thereof the word "widow."

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to said committee:

H. R. 449. William B. Hampshire.
H. R. 455. Jefferson Cherry.
H. R. 456. Wesley B. Calder.
H. R. 459. John J. Bradford.
H. R. 510. George Russell.
H. R. 511. James K. Jennings.
H. R. 514. Edward Wilkinson.
H. R. 515. Frank Logsdon.
H. R. 521. George Butterbaugh.
H. R. 555. Theodore S. Smith.
H. R. 556. John C. Carroll.
H. R. 558. William M. Pace.
H. R. 575. David H. Hatfield.
H. R. 579. James G. Young.
H. R. 581. John R. Ward.
H. R. 583. Peter F. Baker.
H. R. 593. Alexander Hall.
H. R. 607. Oscar G. Robinson.
H. R. 634. Joseph W. Snave.
H. R. 657. Joseph McArmstrong.
H. R. 658. Andrew Robertson.
H. R. 659. Francis M. Choat.
H. R. 688. David Harris.
H. R. 689. Perry A. Crandall.
H. R. 690. Elijah Campbell.
H. R. 711. Philip Richards.
H. R. 712. Philip Liebrick.
H. R. 729. Daniel Bachman.
H. R. 738. Jay P. Eddy.
H. R. 742. Isaac Luke.
H. R. 743. Lemuel Cross.
H. R. 755. James Heastan.
H. R. 768. Moses McCleary.
H. R. 769. Lewis H. Bradshaw.
H. R. 770. David Bellnap.
H. R. 778. Elsden B. Stephens.
H. R. 779. Alfred H. Chaplin.
H. R. 780. Frank Drewes, sr.
H. R. 791. Elijah A. Hearn.
H. R. 839. Edward B. Ward.
H. R. 849. Thomas R. Beasley.
H. R. 857. Sidney G. Sidner.
H. R. 860. William Sewing.
H. R. 877. Adam Allwein.
H. R. 897. Joshua Gage.
H. R. 898. Jeremiah Shine.
H. R. 899. William Watson.
H. R. 909. Marshall Barnes.
H. R. 930. Alexander J. Souden.
H. R. 935. Benjamin F. Umfleet.
H. R. 937. Lewis J. Cundiff.
H. R. 969. Riley A. Reeves.
H. R. 971. Charles Ford.
H. R. 1011. James F. Bellew.
H. R. 1075. Francis S. Layton.
H. R. 1098. Jacob Erow.
H. R. 1105. Sanford Earley.
H. R. 1116. Elisha W. Phillips.
H. R. 1117. Samuel M. Reese.
H. R. 1133. Nicholas Wolf.
H. R. 1135. Samuel D. Mowrey, alias David O. Mowrey.
H. R. 1159. Daniel Campbell.
H. R. 1164. Milton Cooper.
H. R. 1175. Charles Bishop.
H. R. 1188. James Doyle.
H. R. 1196. John A. Quick.
H. R. 1197. Elias Cleveland.
H. R. 1207. Ezra McIntyre.
H. R. 1209. John F. Bass.
H. R. 1229. John J. McKenna.
H. R. 1230. Harvey Bartley.
H. R. 1302. John T. Whetzal.
H. R. 1308. John Trenter.
H. R. 1316. William H. Atwell.
H. R. 1327. Franklin Manning.
H. R. 1328. Joseph Hoskins.
H. R. 1331. Albert S. Scroggins, alias Allen S. Craig.
H. R. 1346. Charles White.
H. R. 1467. William H. Hindman.
H. R. 1472. William A. Swearengin.
H. R. 1480. William T. Stone.
H. R. 1482. Alexander McGahan.
H. R. 1485. George M. Mays.
H. R. 1508. Enos R. Clark.
H. R. 1510. Stephen J. Coleman.
H. R. 1544. Jacob Andrist.
H. R. 1558. George L. Davis.
H. R. 1560. Luther S. Pitcher.
H. R. 1585. Dabner D. Wright.
H. R. 1590. William Henry Jenkins.
H. R. 1591. Hamilton L. Karr.
H. R. 1593. Daniel Ambrosier.
H. R. 1604. James H. Scott.
H. R. 1606. Albert B. Clark.
H. R. 1633. William G. Sadler.
H. R. 1637. Charles W. Foster.
H. R. 1638. John H. Nutter.
H. R. 1642. George D. King.
H. R. 1823. John Devon.
H. R. 1824. James Cassidy.
H. R. 1827. Michael Greeley.
H. R. 1829. Joseph N. Abbott.
H. R. 1830. William Myers.
H. R. 1851. Henry Sanders.
H. R. 1858. Norman B. Yarwood.
H. R. 1916. John H. Rivers.
H. R. 1923. Charles Kinne.
H. R. 1937. James S. Doolittle.
H. R. 1963. Samuel A. Maxfield.
H. R. 1983. John Mallet.
H. R. 2016. Daniel W. Thurston.
H. R. 2018. Pary McNair.
H. R. 2043. Benjamin F. Shipley.
H. R. 2045. Albert M. Butts, alias Albert J. Stewart.
H. R. 2048. James Smith.
H. R. 2053. William L. Tate.
H. R. 2079. Melville F. Allyn.
H. R. 2142. John W. Johnson.
H. R. 2147. Robert N. Hawkins.
H. R. 2148. Ananias B. Reeser.
H. R. 2226. Daniel H. Wise.
H. R. 2227. George A. Rubush.
H. R. 2235. Alfred M. Wheeler.
H. R. 2272. Jeremiah R. Sensenich.
H. R. 2287. Eli House.
H. R. 2383. James K. P. Wyman.
H. R. 2403. Wilson Taylor.
H. R. 2406. Christopher C. Russell.
H. R. 2409. John Barker.
H. R. 2411. Garrett W. Freeman.
H. R. 2414. Edward S. Ragan.
H. R. 2433. Isaac W. Waters.
H. R. 2445. William F. Raines.
H. R. 2466. Shepherd M. Gaston.
H. R. 2469. Christian Lock.
H. R. 2485. Anderson J. Bowman.
H. R. 2501. Julia Esther Hammond.
H. R. 2536. John W. Robinson.
H. R. 2551. William N. Hull.
H. R. 2552. John Warren.
H. R. 2562. John W. Hank.
H. R. 2638. Joseph A. Stephens.
H. R. 2674. Daniel Thomas.
H. R. 2681. Marcus L. Moore.
H. R. 2687. Charles M. Dority.
H. R. 2710. Richard M. Johnson.
H. R. 2727. Samuel L. Brown.
H. R. 2728. Henry King.
H. R. 2740. James J. Short.
H. R. 2742. John G. Hunter.
H. R. 2828. Peleg B. Washburn.
H. R. 2857. Thomas H. Goodrich.
H. R. 2957. Edward G. Sanchez.
H. R. 2977. Charles P. Cook.
H. R. 2986. David E. Godfrey.
H. R. 3056. William Schwicardi.
H. R. 3060. Helen A. Benjamin.
H. R. 3066. George R. White.
H. R. 3067. William B. Porter.
H. R. 3069. Emmet Ellis.
H. R. 3073. Benjamin Cuddeback.
H. R. 3087. Henry L. McMullin.
H. R. 3088. Simon Kephart.
H. R. 3094. Abner A. Hurt.
H. R. 3099. James C. Haslett.
H. R. 3105. Deborah Sebring.
H. R. 3114. Monroe J. Potts.
H. R. 3161. Phillip P. Keller.
H. R. 3166. James Derning.
H. R. 3183. Alonzo Fiero.
H. R. 3205. Edward N. Whitney.
H. R. 3277. Jasper N. Cummins.
H. R. 3278. Orville H. Patten.
H. R. 3280. David H. Crumpacker.
H. R. 3306. Albert Mason.
H. R. 3308. Calvin Custer.
H. R. 3312. Horton S. Calland.
H. R. 3326. Ephriam Bartlett.
H. R. 3390. Henry Johns.
H. R. 3391. George T. Harwood.
H. R. 3392. Hutcheons B. Durham.
H. R. 3403. Jonathan H. Roberts.
H. R. 3412. Theodore Tooley.
H. R. 3413. Charles Dominick.
H. R. 3445. Nelson Hart.
H. R. 3460. Israel L. Hahn.
H. R. 3488. Townsend Roberts.
H. R. 3510. Henry M. Cottrill.
H. R. 3527. Mathew Whitford.
H. R. 3528. Henry G. Hixson.
H. R. 3542. Philip H. Lind.
H. R. 3677. Albert Helms.
H. R. 3717. George Proudfit.
H. R. 3722. Edward Gridley.
H. R. 3725. Charles E. Knox.
H. R. 3729. Eaton Kinney.
H. R. 3730. James Little.
H. R. 3735. Thomas Covell.
H. R. 3741. Noah W. Tryon.
H. R. 3752. William McClarren.
H. R. 3755. Wilson J. Parker.
H. R. 3756. Samuel H. Keech.
H. R. 3758. Alfred T. Hawk.
H. R. 3816. William R. Gillespie.
H. R. 3826. Levi Vandervort.
H. R. 3849. Isaac Postlethwait.
H. R. 3866. John Pope.
H. R. 3911. Samuel R. Easter.
H. R. 3916. William J. McCormick.
H. R. 3963. John C. Bolinger.
H. R. 3966. Carrie B. Wilson.
H. R. 4138. James Buchanan.
H. R. 4224. Sidney E. Timerman.
H. R. 4297. Joseph Guest.
H. R. 4298. Ebenezer Riley.
H. R. 4319. Andrew York.
H. R. 4362. Thomas Lee.
H. R. 4420. Felix Karl.
H. R. 4454. Shadrack B. Johnson.
H. R. 4471. Greenbury Vickrey.
H. R. 4543. John Sanns.
H. R. 4646. John J. Callahan.
H. R. 4660. Johnston B. Geisinger.
H. R. 4667. Myrtle Webster.
H. R. 4672. John A. Davidson.
H. R. 4677. Henry J. Kinney.
H. R. 4685. Oliver Budd.
H. R. 4691. John Cashman.
H. R. 4712. Charles Decanter.
H. R. 4713. George W. Langley.
H. R. 4775. Josiah Dock.
H. R. 4780. Alonzo M. Hobbs.
H. R. 4788. Jacob D. Peterson.
H. R. 4798. Jacob Wetzel.
H. R. 4841. William Row.
H. R. 4842. Willaby L. Groves.
H. R. 4857. Andrew M. Murray.
H. R. 4869. Theresa Dietz.
H. R. 4900. Mary Gehres.
H. R. 4931. Henry Garvey.
H. R. 4947. David Carter.
H. R. 4966. William Flint.
H. R. 5014. Christian Broemer.
H. R. 5052. Amos McKinley.
H. R. 5053. Silas H. Shepherd.
H. R. 5058. Doctor E. Davis.
H. R. 5061. John Jones.
H. R. 5083. Dudley G. Allen.
H. R. 5126. Harrison Smith.
H. R. 5190. Francis M. Uhler.
H. R. 5224. Henderson Craft.
H. R. 5232. John F. Gibbons.
H. R. 5243. Henry Ferster.
H. R. 5298. William McCloud.
H. R. 5315. George Stillman.
H. R. 5374. Charles W. Green.
H. R. 5397. Augustus A. Prugh.
H. R. 5400. Charles Schmidt.
H. R. 5480. Moritz C. Young.
H. R. 5483. Isaac N. Splawn.
H. R. 5590. Fairfield Dresser.
H. R. 5591. George W. Daniels.
H. R. 5682. Alfred York.
H. R. 5684. Frances A. Sapp.
H. R. 5729. Frederick Freund.
H. R. 5739. David Hartman.
H. R. 5740. James T. Hewitt.
H. R. 5741. Winfield S. Gregory.
H. R. 5742. Alexander H. Lamb.
H. R. 5743. Joseph Davis.
H. R. 5781. John C. Shields.
H. R. 5803. Alfred G. Daniels.
H. R. 5851. Harrison W. Fox.
H. R. 5852. Julius O. Deming.
H. R. 6082. Lafayette Barnes.
H. R. 6085. Clark K. Denney.
H. R. 6255. Isaac N. Mahan.
H. R. 6258. Pelly T. Martin.
H. R. 6373. Thomas Ward.
H. R. 6399. Newton J. Wells.
H. R. 6620. Henry Hoover.
H. R. 6625. John C. Baker.
H. R. 6634. John I. Smallwood.
H. R. 6665. Charles L. Dunham.
H. R. 6683. Simon J. Martin.
H. R. 6699. Porter W. Roundy.
H. R. 6701. William M. Gosnell.
H. R. 6709. Delia A. Lapham.
H. R. 6729. George C. Presley.
H. R. 6739. William F. Bailey.
H. R. 6822. John Adams.
H. R. 6823. John M. Fesler.
H. R. 6824. John Gessner.
H. R. 6829. Josiah James.
H. R. 6837. John T. Follette.
H. R. 6864. Thomas T. Owens.
H. R. 6874. Mary J. Guy.
H. R. 6917. Anna Jacobs.
H. R. 6918. Lilly Howard.
H. R. 7036. William R. Boren.
H. R. 7040. George H. Devol.
H. R. 7041. John Troxler.
H. R. 7042. Simon Bollinger.
H. R. 7043. Benjamin Griffith.
H. R. 7069. Beverly W. Brittain.
H. R. 7099. Thomas L. Jennison.
H. R. 7104. Charles G. Ginther, alias Charles Skinner.
H. R. 7105. Anna Smith.
H. R. 7107. Henry C. Livezey.
H. R. 7155. William Warren.
H. R. 7195. Elisha L. Powers.
H. R. 7197. William J. Nash.
H. R. 7241. George M. Loring.
H. R. 7266. Charles Shaffer.
H. R. 7270. Asbery Mayfield.
H. R. 7271. James N. McHenry.
H. R. 7272. Andrew J. Gaskins.
H. R. 7273. William L. Faucett.
H. R. 7274. Levi Brock.
H. R. 7365. William C. Martin.
H. R. 7379. Alonzo Whitehouse.
H. R. 7384. John S. Skeels.
H. R. 7385. Edwin C. Beall.
H. R. 7390. Joseph McGuire.
H. R. 7392. Collins South.
H. R. 7399. Josephine Freeman.
H. R. 7403. Michael Kouth.
H. R. 7415. Jacob L. Hinkle.
H. R. 7427. John R. Houchin.
H. R. 7464. Wallace Chamberlin.
H. R. 7465. John E. Stanton, alias Edward A. Stanton.
H. R. 7497. John Bardill.
H. R. 7509. John Fagley.
H. R. 7518. Catherine O'Connor.
H. R. 7519. Ansil T. Bartlett.
H. R. 7520. Frederick Christy.
H. R. 7537. George W. Wright.
H. R. 7538. Charles H. Kindle.
H. R. 7539. Hobart Hamilton.
H. R. 7540. Henry Daniels.
H. R. 7553. Alexander Frazier.
H. R. 7555. John A. Lovens.
H. R. 7559. Henry J. Loughmiller.
H. R. 7560. William W. Kimball.

GARABED.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 194.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration, under the general rules of the House, of H. J. Res. 174, entitled "Joint resolution for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the 'Garabed,' claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it has been very well understood that this matter would come up this afternoon. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] desire to enter into any agreement as to time for discussion of the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suggest 20 minutes on a side.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want about 15 minutes on the rule. I am opposed to the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman from Tennessee desires more time than that, I have no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not desire that much time. The gentleman from Missouri is opposed to the rule?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the gentleman from Kansas is in favor of it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the rule be limited to 40 minutes, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and one-half by myself, and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that both these gentleman are in favor of the rule. I desire to oppose the rule and I would like to have about 15 minutes in which to oppose it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw the request. The purpose of the resolution, which by direction of the Committee on Rules I have called up, is to provide for the consideration, under the general rules of practice of the House, of House joint resolution 174, Calendar No. 77, entitled "Joint resolution for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the 'Garabed,' claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy."

The resolution or special rule which the Committee on Rules presents is simple in its terms and requires no explanation. Its adoption is necessary, in view of the parliamentary situation, if the House is to consider the joint resolution.

I think, sir, it is highly important that we should consider and pass the joint resolution. It will be remembered that the House and Senate passed this measure at the very close of the last session of the Congress. It reached the President only a few moments before the hour that had been fixed for final adjournment of the session and was not signed by him. I assume that this did not indicate opposition upon his part, because I suppose if he had been opposed to it he would have vetoed it. My supposition has been that the President felt he should give it further investigation than the hurried and congested condition of affairs would then admit of, knowing that Congress would shortly reconvene, and that it could be again passed and submitted to him.

I have heard—and I suppose I violate no confidence in so stating—that with the amendments as adopted by the Committee on Patents, the Department of the Interior has no objection to the measure, and I feel quite hopeful that it will receive Executive approval if again passed.

A brief statement of the facts and purposes of the joint resolution will suffice, I trust, so far as debate on the rule I propose is concerned.

Mr. Garabed T. K. Giragossian, who, I understand, is a gentleman of Armenian birth, but who is and has long been a resident and naturalized citizen of the United States, claims to have developed a mechanism whereby what scientists call the cosmic or elemental forces or energies of nature may be utilized for industrial purposes. Whether this claim is well founded we do not know. If it be well founded, then, as the report of the Committee on Patents aptly says, "the possible results of the use of the means in question is beyond the power of man's imagination." It is so stupendous a thing that it is not strange that men should be frankly skeptical and openly cynical concerning it.

And yet, sir, I think all scientists are agreed that these cosmic energies do exist, that they flow in steady and unceasing streams throughout the universe. Would the successful harnessing of them be any more strange or wonderful than was the utilization of the power of steam or the leashing of the lightnings?

Mr. Giragossian claims to have the device developed and stands ready to submit it to the test, the only way in which its worth may be demonstrated. He asks no appropriation of the Congress. Unless he has something worth while, there is no contingency under which this Government will expend a penny.

On the other hand, if he does demonstrate that he has something worth while, an assignment of the right to utilize it for the Government's own use is made to the Government, said assignment "free of charge or expense," and he is to have a patent for 17 years. Certainly, the proposition of Mr. Giragossian does not have the earmarks of fakerism or fanaticism.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. I would not want to suggest that this bears the earmarks of fake or fanaticism, but does not section 4 of the bill absolutely prejudge Mr. Giragossian's case by saying that the Government of the United States shall not issue to anyone else a patent involving or relating to the principle of Garabed, regardless of its form or shape? Does it not absolutely assume the minute we pass this bill that he is the inventor and no one else has ever invented anything else involving the same principle, and that nobody else must be permitted to have a patent on anything involving the same principle?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No. The gentleman from Missouri is wrong in that conclusion. That is only to happen in the event the demonstration is made to the satisfaction of the board of scientists to be selected by Mr. Giragossian and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. In other words, it places him, if I construe the measure correctly, in no different shape than he would be in if he obtained his patent under the general law, except in so far as improvements are concerned.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will indulge me further a moment, no such condition appears in section 4; but assuming that it did appear there and assuming that Mr. Giragossian demonstrates to these scientists that his invention will work, have we not still prejudged his case as to all other inventors of the same principle? Would he not, after the demonstration, step into the rights of all persons who claim to have invented that same principle?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not any more than it would do so under the general patent law, except, as I have said, in the matter of improvements.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me call the gentleman's attention——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not want to go into details. We are providing for the consideration of the bill, and I should prefer that gentlemen from the Committee on Patents discuss that matter of details with the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Is there anything in the bill that determines the question of priority if there is any controversy as to the first inventor of this great invention?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say that the effect of House joint resolution 174 will be to grant to Mr. Giragossian a patent in the event he demonstrates his device to the satisfaction of the board of scientists approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. But if there is any proof afterwards that there is a prior inventor, the door is closed to him by this bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That might be the effect of it, but if the gentleman will bear with me in patience I will proceed——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question on the rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact under the rule, if adopted, the gentleman who has the bill in charge can do as he did when the bill was last under consideration, when only one amendment was offered, move the previous question and prevent any amendment to this most important question, which would give Mr. Giragossian, under section 4, the absolute right, even if the committee of experts appointed find in his favor, not to allow a patent to be given to anybody else?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman asks a question as to procedure. I answer it in the affirmative, that it will be considered under the general practice of the House and it will lie within the power of the gentleman from Ohio, the acting chairman of the Committee on Patents, at any time under the general rules of the House to move the previous question. If the House orders the previous question it will cut out amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the action before, does the gentleman think it is proper such action should be taken without opportunity to amend the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is a matter which addresses itself to the discretion of the gentleman from Ohio and the taste of Members of the House. A test of its elements indicates absolute good faith. Those gentlemen with whom Mr. Giragossian has come in personal contact all testify before the Rules Committee and the Committee on Patents to his gentlemanly demeanor, his intellectual strength, and the apparent sincerity which runs through his conduct and is evidenced in his character.

I am quite conscious of the fact that there are gentlemen who indulge their gift of wit in opposing this proposition, and I have even heard it put as strongly as that Congress was rendering itself ridiculous in passing it. That remains to be seen, Mr. Speaker, and I am willing to take the chance.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield as to the statement he just made?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly inform the House what test he referred to which Mr. Giragossian has made and submitted to any committee of the House?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I referred not to the test of the mechanical device. The continuity of my remarks was broken by inquiry, and what I meant to say was that the test of the proposition which he submitted, as contained in the resolution, bore the evidence of good faith. Do I make myself clear to the gentleman? [After a pause.] I meant that the proposition contained in House resolution 174, the contract involved in that resolution, bore evidence of good faith. I did not refer to the device.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the resolution now under consideration is more drastic, as far as Government rights are concerned, than the one passed last when we had it under consideration.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, that is aside, if the gentleman will pardon me, from the——

Mr. STAFFORD. Does that show good faith on the part of Mr. Giragossian?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, perhaps our minds do not run together on that proposition. The passage of the joint resolution in its present form can not possibly endanger a single public interest, and I feel that if the demonstration fails I can recover from the shock, and since no harm can have been done to any living person, I shall be able to go about my business, I think, without hanging my head in humiliation and shame. If it shall, on the other hand, prove a success, if it possesses even a tithe of the possibilities claimed for it, I shall be glad for my country's and for humanity's sake. I shall feel gratified to have even this small part in its advancement.

Why is it that gentlemen do so much fear to ascertain whether we really have some new blessing for mankind? [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman ask that rhetorically or directly?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As the gentleman chooses.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman asks why we fear. It is because before we know what the result is going to be we mortgage to this man any favorable result——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But only in event the result is what he claims it will be.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is where the gentleman makes a mistake if I may address that remark, with all respect, to him.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We promise beforehand that if he produces what he says he has he shall have exclusive right to the use of it except for the Government's own use, even if it should comprehend all the laws of physics known to science or hereafter to be discovered, and he can sue any man who subsequently brings in an invention which may in the consideration of some one of those laws impinge upon his own.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is a question of construction. If Mr. Giragossian has what he claims to have, I think he should have a special patent, and I think the Government would be extremely fortunate in obtaining the use of it as provided by the terms of this measure.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman undertake, in the spirit of true democracy, to argue that one man, by the terms of this resolution—which means the purchase of a pig in a poke—should utilize for himself all the royalties and profits to be had from his discovery of some great fundamental law of physics and nature?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is not the pure mechanical device——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman and I differ in our contention of construction.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is not the mere mechanical device.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think it would be construed necessarily to apply only to the device and improvements upon the device directly related to it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Without offense, is not that begging the question, for the utilization of a heretofore unknown law of nature may be possible only through a certain device, but if you protect him in the device he is the only man who can use the law.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in that event, of course, the Government can become the owner of it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The Government in this country is not every private manufacturer.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But my construction—I may be in error about it—the gentleman from Vermont is a clearer lawyer than I am——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I may be mistaken about it. However, we are not discussing the measure, we are merely discussing the rule for its consideration.

My thought concerning the measure is that the limitation with reference to the patent or improvements will apply only to improvements that under common sense, which is always good law, would relate directly to this mechanism itself.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. CHURCH. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in order to prevent monopoly the Government has the right to purchase this outright from Mr. Giragossian at any time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman from California. I just stated that in reply to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. Speaker, the miracle of yesterday is the commonplace of to-day. There was a time when man was perfect in all his parts and elements. He was complete physically. The poet, the painter, the sculptor, the dreamer, in the wildest flights of superb fancy, never caught more than a fleeting vision of that beauty which was given by the Lord to the first man and first woman.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question when convenient for him to be interrupted?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. At this time.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I simply wanted to ask why this gentleman did not proceed in the usual way to apply for a patent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The report from the Committee on Patents, of which I am not a member—I am merely reporting the resolution from the Committee on Rules—states that. The difficulties which have attended every revolutionary invention in the history of our country have caused this man to ask for a special patent rather than to pursue the usual way.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does he fear in some way that the device, for instance, might be stolen before the patent issues, or may leak out in some way?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. Or that there may be improvements and devices suggested that will result in endless litigation, such as marked the course of the telephone and other great inventions lying within the knowledge of all of us.

I was about to proceed further when interrupted by the gentleman.

Not only was man complete physically at one time, but he was perfect mentally. He knew all philosophy and all science. Mathematical exactness was instinctive with him. He knew and could interpret bird song. He knew where the flower bloom came from, and why. He understood the passions of the tiger. He saw all problems with clear and unmistakable vision.

He was complete spiritually. He discussed with the Divine the themes of the divinity. He communed with the angels.

He was so complete in his structure that he possessed the power to destroy his own perfection, and he exercised this power. He sinned. That is to say, he violated some law of harmony. What it was we do not know. Perhaps we never shall know. But we know that it was the exercise of a power by which the integrity of his triple structure was destroyed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Surely.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Is the gentleman proceeding upon the theory that mankind was created perfect in the beginning and has been degenerating since?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I told the gentleman privately he ought not to interrupt a speech like this.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It is a very difficult problem the gentleman is discussing now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is lots of time to do it, and I am going to elucidate it.

There was some power by the exercise of which the integrity of the triple structure was destroyed. I think that touched his every phase and characteristic. It devitalized him physically. The majestic brow receded; the form became bent. Warts and vile protuberances grew upon the skin. The nerves lost control over the muscles, and these, uncontrolled, fell to hideous expression.

And it devitalized him mentally. He lost intellectual excellence. He lost that power of discerning the truth clearly amidst every confusion and complexity.

It devitalized him spiritually. He could no longer look clear-eyed upon the angels nor commune in freedom with the God. And in this condition—a physical degenerate, a moral wreck, an intellectual prostitute—he was cast into the wild amid the wild things over which he had held an unrestrained dominion. But somehow, some way, there lingered in the sin-touched brain a glimmer of what he had been. And in the sin-dwarfed soul there sprang up an aspiration to regain by labor that which had been his by gift. And the master passion of the centuries, whether men be always conscious of it or not, is this great passion to be as the first man was, to see as the first man saw, to know as he knew, to be perfect as he was perfect, to walk abroad with the angels, to commune in freedom with the God. And the development of that ambition and all the activities essential to its growth is, after all, the fundamental thing that challenges each of us. [Applause.] Throughout all the long ages it has been the fight. It has been fought amid sneers, amid criticisms, amid cynicisms. It is rather remarkable that humanity has made the advance it has made.

It has advanced spiritually. Each race has developed its moral philosopher, its Buddha, its Confucius, its Mohammed, its St. Paul. I speak only of the human, not of the divine. The grunts have been developed into a language with which poets have expressed the intimate secrets of the human heart and philosophers have explained in a wondrous way the development of human impulse. The artist has looked upon the marble, surprised the dream that lay within it, and chiseled out the figure filled with life, almost love, and wondrous beauty. The painter has mixed the pigments and spread on canvas another longing for the lost dominion to fill us with delight or thrill us with despair.

Not alone in the spiritual and artistic world, but in the material and the mechanical world, what wonders man has wrought! From the crude, dwarfed, distorted man, standing weaponless and naked in the primeval wilderness, have sprung the splendid creatures who with soul and brain and nimble fingers have moved steadily toward the restoration of the dominion lost in the long ago.

What wonders man has wrought! He has piled stones and timber into massive mansions as beautiful as the dreams of heaven. He has set the poles and strung the wires and talks with his fellows across rivers and seas and continents; aye, without the wires he sends his message through the unseeable air. He has caught the secret of steam and made it do his bidding. He has taken the web spun by the worm and woven it into a fabric fit to clothe the angels.

Why do we speak of things as being impossible? Here comes a man who says he has plucked the heart out of another human mystery. It is no reflection on him that he comes from comparative obscurity. If what he claims proves true, he will stand among the great of all ages and all times, and his place in the sun will be quite secure. He offers to submit his proposition to a fair and proper test. He offers to this Government the benefit of his genius and his industry. If indeed he has plucked the heart of another mystery, why not have the benefit of it? I am entirely at a loss to understand why this body or any other body should refuse to give to him the opportunity to demonstrate, under the terms and conditions of this measure, whether or not he has worked one of those other things that we once called "miracles," but which, as I said a while ago, have become after all common places. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to oppose the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas, a member of the Committee on Rules, is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] 10 minutes out of my hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I would like first to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER]. There was, and I presume there is—and I would like to have it stated publicly—an understanding that if this rule is adopted there shall be three hours' consideration of this bill?

Mr. CROSSER. Does the gentleman include in that the time that has already been consumed, or does he still want three hours?

Mr. LENROOT. I believe we could not give it proper consideration by 5 o'clock this afternoon. With this understanding——

Mr. CROSSER. Can we not finish it to-night?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know. That will depend. There was an understanding, a private understanding, that there would be three hours' consideration of this bill after the adoption of the rule.

Mr. CROSSER. I assumed that that would include the little time we might consume on the rule. I did not assume that there would be any debate on the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not have that understanding. The only understanding we had was that the gentleman from Kansas and I thought we would each use an hour.

Mr. LENROOT. I believe it will be satisfactory, so far as I am concerned, that if we can not finish to-night, well and good. But substantial amendments are pending——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, would not the gentleman be willing to allow a certain amount of time for debate under the five-minute rule to consider amendments? I judge from the temper of the House that the purpose is to pass the bill, but I feel there should be time granted so as to allow discussion of the amendments.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I hope this is not coming out of my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that this discussion is going on in order to promote an understanding.

Mr. BORLAND. Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there has been an understanding entered into by anybody in regard to the limitation of debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know that anybody has entered into any.

Mr. LENROOT. It was within the power of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] to move the previous question at any time, and I went to him, privately, as I had a perfect right to do, and had an understanding with him that the previous question would not at once be moved, and that before it was moved—or that was the effect of it—we would have three hours for full discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No understanding has been reached. If these gentlemen have made an informal agreement among themselves, it would have to be submitted to the House before it would be binding.

Mr. BORLAND. This matter can not be foreclosed in that manner.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Ohio had it in his power to move the previous question at any time. I bring the question up now, so that we may get an understanding.

Mr. BORLAND. The evident purpose is to foreclose the whole subject in the interest of one man.

Mr. CROSSER. So far as I am concerned, I would like to finish to-night. I am willing to stay.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman will not move the previous question prior to 5.30 o'clock?

Mr. CROSSER. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if there will be a quorum here at 5.30.

Mr. LENROOT. Then we can raise the point at that time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am anxious that this matter be concluded this afternoon with a quorum of the House present. The discussion so far has been on the merits of the proposition. I take it that the discussion in the ensuing hour will be on the merits of the proposition rather than upon the rule itself.

Mr. LENROOT. I want an understanding as to the time for voting. I do not want to be shut off in a few minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am perfectly willing to go on, with an understanding that the previous question will not be moved until 5.30, unless we finish before that.

Mr. LENROOT. Unless we finish before that.

Mr. CROSSER. I have not consulted any other member of the committee about this. I want to satisfy everyone concerned, but I do want to finish this to-night.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is understood that the previous question will not be moved before 5.30, unless we conclude before that time.

Mr. CROSSER. Unless we conclude before that time, and I reserve the right to move the previous question at that time.

Mr. LENROOT. With that understanding, I shall not object.

Mr. CARLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CARLIN. I want to inquire whether the rule permits amendments to the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Under the rules of the House, if the previous question is not moved—and that is the purpose of getting this understanding—amendments can be offered. With the understanding that has been reached, I shall not oppose the rule, but I do want to take the time to call the attention of the House to the necessity of very materially amending this joint resolution, if the House would be true to itself and the country.

It is true this joint resolution passed in the last session of Congress, and yet we must conclude that the only reason why it passed in its present form was that Members were so tired and so worn out that they were not in a condition to give that careful consideration to measures that they usually give. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has stated that there is no public interest that can possibly be injured, nor the Government in any way made liable by the passage of this resolution in its present form. Why, Mr. Speaker, unless this joint resolution is amended, even though this committee of scientists shall find that there is nothing of value in this alleged discovery of Mr. Giragossian, nevertheless this bill provides that at no time during 17 years shall any patent be issued to anyone covering this principle of free energy, although this alleged inventor may have nothing whatever of value. There is no such condition attached to section 4 as was implied by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. This commission might unanimously find against there being anything of value in this discovery, and yet section 4 provides that the United States Government shall not issue to anyone else any patent involving or relating to the principle of the Garabed free-energy generator; and not only shall not issue a patent, but—shall prevent the construction, importation, use, or exploitation thereof, in whole or in part, in the United States, and shall protect the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, his heirs and assigns, in the rights and interests in the "Garabed" in the above respect for a period of 17 years in the United States and in foreign countries where such protection is afforded by treaty obligations, international law, or diplomatic representation.

In other words, although there may be nothing of value in this discovery, by this bill we agree that if some one else does discover something along this line the public shall not have the use of it or have the right to use it at all. Is it possible that the House of Representatives is in favor of any such proposition as that?

Then we come to section 5, another most remarkable section, providing—

SEC. 5. That any essential improvement or contrivance by any person or persons other than Garabed T. K. Giragossian relating to the "Garabed," or its principle, which shall prove valuable and essential thereto in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior during the period of the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian's special protection shall be bought by the United States Government for its own use in conjunction with its use of the said "Garabed," with adequate compensation to the inventor or contriver thereof. If, however, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian wishes to utilize any such invention or contrivance so acquired by the United States Government, he or his assigns, and no other person or corporation, shall be entitled thereto upon the payment of a fair, just, and reasonable royalty therefor. In consideration of this right the United States Government shall have, without expense, the right to use for its own purpose any new improvement or device made by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

Not even a patent is required upon this improvement or contrivance; and yet the Government agrees to purchase it and not permit the inventor of that improvement or contrivance to use it or the public to have the use of it except through Mr. Giragossian, although this committee of scientists might agree that there was nothing of value in this discovery. Is it possible that the House of Representatives is going to pass legislation of this nature? I am perfectly willing to vote for this bill amended, willing to take the chance that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] speaks of in giving Mr. Giragossian protection by this special patent, if this committee of scientists shall approve. I am willing that he shall have the right under this bill, upon the payment of a reasonable royalty fixed by the Secretary of the Interior to use any improvement or contrivance that some one else may invent in connection with this discovery. That gives full, complete, and ample protection to Mr. Giragossian. More than that neither he nor anyone else has the right to ask. Neither has he the right to ask, as is contained in section 4, that no patent shall be issued to anyone else, although he may have nothing, and that the Government will not permit anyone else to use the discovery or invention relating to the generation of free energy when he has not. Why, the very statement of the proposition shows its absolute absurdity. I sincerely hope that when we reach the point of amendment the committee will accept some of these amendments. And even then, although I am willing to vote for it I am frank to say that Congress will have gone further in extending a special privilege than has ever been done in the history of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, since this bill was under consideration in the House in the closing days of the last session there have been some developments that were unknown to me and unknown to the membership of the House. I have been informed that the bill passed the Senate in the closing hours of one day with a very small membership present, even after a disclosure made by one of the Senators that sometime before a person by the name of Mr. Casey had called at his office with a device that operated on the general principle proposed to be embodied in the invention claimed by Mr. Giragossian.

Since I came on the floor this morning it has been called to my attention that some person—whether Mr. Casey or some one else I do not know—demonstrated by a device to a Member of this House the very principle claimed by Mr. Giragossian. When the proposal was under consideration at the last session I attempted to point out in 10 or 15 minutes' discussion on the rule the fact that the rights of other inventors were not protected; that even if the committee of scientists that were to be appointed on the nomination of Mr. Giragossian, with the approval, it is true, of the Secretary of the Interior, should find that he had a device that was practicable, this bill took away the right of any other person, whether Mr. Giragossian was the inventor or not. Since the resolution was considered we have the positive statement in another body and also by a colleague in this Chamber to-day that there are other persons who have a similar device.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Has this other person or persons patented the device?

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as I am informed, he has not. I am not advised, nor does the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD show whether the other person has made an application for letters patent, but this resolution granting a patent to Giragossian does not hinge on whether he was the original inventor, but on whether he has a device that can utilize this energy. I have been informed that in Africa they have devices in operation that utilize the rays of the sun for generating power, not very successfully, but utilized to some extent.

Under this bill we are granting a patent to a man who may have created a device, although he may not be the inventor, and the bill will also give him an inclusive right to the use of a principle of nature. It is a fundamental principle of patent law—and I do not claim to be an expert on patent law—that a patent will not be granted for a principle of nature.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I want to direct an inquiry on that very point.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am glad to have the interruption and to have the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Has the Patent Office ever determined for patent purposes what free energy is?

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand under the patent law they have refused in all times past to grant patents on a principle of nature, like electricity or any other cosmic force, holding that that belongs to the public generally and only a device to utilize that cosmic force can be patented.

Since the resolution passed both bodies and was submitted to the President of the United States, who vetoed it by a pocket veto, I am informed only this morning, although my attention was not called to it in the public press, that a statement was given out setting forth the reasons why he refused to sign this bill. I do not know what his reasons were. Perhaps some member of the Committee on Patents may be able to inform the House. It is their duty, if they are acquainted with them, to state them to the House, for we are virtually considering a veto measure. It was the practice in early days of the Government when a bill was vetoed by a pocket veto in the closing days of a session because time did not permit the President to convey his reasons to Congress at that session, to submit the reasons to the House in which it originated at the next session. We have not the views of the President, but it may be that some member of the committee may have read the newspaper article that contained the statement of the White House as to the reasons why the President declined to approve the resolution. Certain it is that this resolution is not as favorable to the Government as the former resolution, because under section 6, if the Government wishes to purchase the exclusive right to this invention under the form as it existed when the bill passed the House, the compensation was determined by a committee of six, three to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and three to be appointed by the inventor, Mr. Giragossian. But now it provides that the finding of the committee shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and of Mr. Giragossian. Why, if the gentleman is going to obtain a patent under this bill for the use of a force of nature, and even though Congress should wish to purchase the right exclusively for all mankind, notwithstanding the committee of six have determined the amount of remuneration, he could reject it and hold the Government up and refuse to sell it. He could sell it to a corporation that might be capitalized at a fabulous amount. Is it possible that in this Congress we are willing to grant a man, who may not be the original inventor, the right to capitalize a principle of nature which may or may not have been discovered heretofore, and let him exact a tribute from all mankind that may amount to hundreds of millions of dollars?

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Does not the gentleman think that one of the reasons that actuated the President in vetoing the measure was that if we gave this privilege to one man we would have to give it to every other man who discovered something relating to free energy? That is the reason that the Military Committee of the House turned down the proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I was unadvised that the Committee on Military Affairs had ever considered the proposition. We now have the statement of the chairman of the committee why they refused to give any recognition to the proposition contained in this bill. Gentlemen, this is not granting a congressional patent; it is giving to a man who may not be the original inventor an exclusive right to use a law of nature. He may submit a device that is operated by electricity, something well known, a device which, if it could be utilized, would, under the terms of this resolution, grant him an absolute monopoly. This committee of scientists and the Secretary of the Interior would have no right under the terms of the resolution as it passed before and as it is presented by this committee to refuse to grant him a patent for utilizing the cosmic forces of nature, whether electricity or any other energy, but he would have that exclusive privilege for the term of 17 years.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. Does the gentleman think that this man could capitalize this invention or discovery if this board of scientists should discover or decide that it is not practicable?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can well understand that this man may have a device where he uses electricity, something not new.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. The situation might be such that if the device were practicable under the terms of the resolution the committee will be obliged necessarily to find in favor of it, and then under the terms of the resolution the Secretary of the Interior has nothing more to do, but is compelled to enter into contracts to carry out this law.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In a moment. Another provision of the measure says that the Congress will have the right to purchase this patent, but it is a limited right, limited only as I wish to call to your attention to that period of time in case the Congress is in session or to a limited time thereafter in case the Congress is not in session. Certainly we know by reason of the usual procedure of Congress that that might be too limited a time. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HULBERT. The gentleman has anticipated and answered the interrogatory I intended to propound.

Mr. STAFFORD. Furthermore, under the terms of this resolution the Government of the United States becomes a guarantor as against all prior inventors and all succeeding inventors of any improvement in the case of this principle. The history of the growth of manufacture in this country is due to the development of improvements on some basic patent, and yet under the form of this bill future improvements are estopped.

This bill, I dare say, was written by the attorney of Mr. Giragossian, for I can not conceive of any disinterested person writing it, who had at heart the welfare of the Government, as the bill, in the form in which it is before the House, grants away all of the rights—and I measure my words when I say all—of the Government except under conditions which in the ordinary application could not be fulfilled.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman stated that some other person had invented a device or an instrument which he thought was similar to the device which was involved in this resolution. I desire to ask the gentleman whether that gentleman has offered to submit his device to a test?

Mr. STAFFORD. That gentleman, as I was informed this morning by my colleague, Mr. LENROOT, who was informed by some Member of the House, stated that he was willing at any time not only to submit it to a committee of the House, but that he had showed it to this Member. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD discloses further, when this matter was under consideration one evening late in the Senate, that a gentleman came to the office of Senator NEW and demonstrated to him a similar device. Whether that person, Mr. Casey, whom Senator NEW referred to, is the identical person my colleague referred to this morning I do not know, but the man to whom we are conferring such great privileges absolutely refuses to show his device to any Member of Congress. The report in this case speaks in glowing terms of the standing of this man and of the three people who indorsed the invention. Let me call attention to the fact that while these three men may be estimable gentlemen, they are not scientists. One is a director of music in Boston, another is an artist in Boston, who has been advancing money to Mr. Giragossian, and the other is the chairman of some board of directors. They are not scientists.

I may be a little hard-headed, but before I am willing to vote away a valuable right foreclosing the public for 17 years from the use of an element of nature, even if Mr. Giragossian is the original discoverer of it, I shall demand more evidence than we have presented in this case. I am unwilling to transfer or mortgage the rights of all of the people in the United States in such a way that they can be capitalized to the tune of millions of dollars to the advantage of Mr. Giragossian and some promoter.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman says that Mr. Giragossian refused to show his device or its operation to any member of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Or to any committee that would be appointed by the House.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to ask the gentleman whether he knows how Mr. Giragossian was able to present such convincing evidence to the committee that they brought this bill in the second time?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no evidence on that subject. I know that he called at my office, and that other persons called there in his behalf, and I presume they did upon other Members of Congress, just as they did upon me.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In case this proposed committee should report that this device was not practicable, as it stands, would the Government, under section 4, be debarred from granting any patent to any person who might subsequently bring in a practicable device?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was brought out by my colleague [Mr. LENROOT]. The Government is absolutely debarred, whether the committee reports favorably or unfavorably. Section 4 provides as follows:

> That the United States Government shall not issue to anyone else any patent involving or relating to the principle of the "Garabed" free-energy generator, regardless of its form or shape, or for any device, improvement, process, equipment, or apparatus based upon the system or correlative principle of the said discovery or invention, or for any improvement or change developed in the use of the said "Garabed," and shall prevent the construction, importation, use, or exploitation thereof, in whole or in part, in the United States, and shall protect the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, his heirs and assigns, in the rights and interests in the "Garabed" in the above respect for a period of 17 years in the United States and in foreign countries where such protection is afforded by treaty obligation, international law, or diplomatic representation.

I can not believe any Member of the House would permit any such ridiculous proposal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the debate on this proposition seems to be more in reference to the merits of the bill than the adoption of this rule. I listened with a great deal of interest to the objections urged by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] with reference to section 4. If this section 4 is adopted as it is, and in the event that this committee that is appointed finds that it is a fake and of no avail, why there is not a court in the land that would hold that Giragossian would be entitled for a minute to the rights sought to be guaranteed to him here, and if there are any people that doubt that proposition of law—and I state it as a proposition of law—this could be very easily remedied by a simple amendment that in the event that this committee approved after their investigation this proposition then the section shall apply.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the bill as it now stands would absolutely bar for 17 years the acceptance by the United States Government of any invention which would be practical, no matter whether this committee should decide in favor of or against it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. GORDON. No; if the gentleman will yield, it will have to be on this distinctive principle.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The distinctive principle is patented, you know.

Mr. GORDON. It is not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We state as a proposition of law, in the event this bill is adopted exactly as it is and the committee approved by the Secretary of the Interior would find that it was a fake, that it would not do the things that it is said here it will do, then it will become a dead law from that minute, and anyone who had any principle or invention involving this principle would not be denied the right under this bill, for the reason that it has been decided there is nothing in the proposition stated here. But I say there is no trouble about that; it can be made absolutely beyond peradventure by inserting that in the event this committee does approve then he shall be guaranteed the rights spoken of in this bill.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Suppose the committee does not find that the invention is a fake, but simply finds this apparatus, and so forth, is impracticable, but there is some principle there that other prior inventors had developed. This would unquestionably foreclose the rights of those prior inventors to that principle, as the gentleman from Ohio says.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is exactly what I have tried to bring out.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I say if there is any fake about it that the Government should be protected absolutely, and it can be very easily secured by inserting the words I have suggested, that in the event it has proved itself to be what Mr. Giragossian alleges it to be.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then if by process of amendment to all the various sections of this bill, Mr. Giragossian is finally to come down to the estate of any patentee and take his chances under the law as to whether his invention is one of merit, why is it you bring his case in here as a matter of special resolution?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will answer the question and take pleasure in answering it. It has been demonstrated and been admitted here and even the gentleman from Wisconsin, in debating this question at the last session of Congress, that the patent laws of this country are so absolutely defective that a man who has invented an idea is very, very many times robbed of his invention. It has been repeatedly so. The records of this Capitol and the history of invention in the United States is filled with invention after invention where the man who invented it was absolutely deprived of his invention or the emoluments that came from it. The time was once in this country, and during that time a patent meant something, when the patents were granted solely by this Congress.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly, and we are getting around to that same point in a vicious circle again.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think we had better be doing that thing than be doing the injustice we are doing under the present patent laws to the men who invent these great benefactions. When this matter was under debate before I quoted the evidence of Mr. Edison, who has been a great benefactor to mankind, where he said that it cost him more money than it brought him in defending the patents he had made, and he points out very fully the many defects to which the inventor has to subject himself and that he virtually has no protection at all under the present patent laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask for one more minute; I have just gotten started.

The CHAIRMAN. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does not the gentleman think we ought to correct the patent laws we have before we fly to evils we know not of?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will answer that question by saying that there was a gentleman who came here more than 30 years ago and said to the people of the United States, "I have a great benefaction for mankind; I can send a telegraph message through the air without the intervention of wire."

He was doubted. The cynics sneered at him. Criticism was heaped upon him. And he went back to his home and died in less than three months after that time. Thirty years after then Marconi proved to the world what that man then said could be done, and he did it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit me to say that it is described by the old term in logic of post hoc reasoning, "after this, therefore, because of this"?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not care what kind of "hoc" it is. I want to say to you that, in these trying times, if this gentleman has what he says why not adopt it now; if he has not, why not explode the bubble now? The Treasury of the United States is not called upon to be opened in order that this man may filch money from it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. He is evidently simply putting something in hock. We will put our money in hock if we provide the terms in the bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is provided that this Government of ours may, if we find this thing proves the success that it is said it will, buy it for the benefit of all mankind.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But we buy it for money.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Would you buy it for nothing?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, why can not we proceed with the consideration of this resolution, and if it can be amended to meet the views of Members, we can proceed with it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the quickest way is to adopt this resolution.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I understand the gentleman from Ohio desires to press this resolution to a vote to-night, and we ought to go about the consideration of it if we are going to do so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to see if we can agree upon time. How much time does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] desire on the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Ten minutes. I could get along with that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have requests for a certain length of time against the proposition.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That discussion can be transferred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to have an agreement that we can vote after the gentleman has used his 10 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest this: No one has spoken yet, as I understand, against the rule itself. I asked leave to oppose the rule, but the time was claimed by the gentleman on the Rules Committee who was in favor of the rule, and he has parceled it out to gentlemen who are in favor of the rule. As a matter of fact, I undertook to oppose the rule, and I think nothing yet has been said against it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Kansas will permit, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have 10 minutes. I asked for 15.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the adoption of this rule and am somewhat surprised at its being brought in. I am somewhat surprised that this kind of a bill is being considered under a special rule, or that it has the merit or the steam behind it to secure a special rule. From all that has been said here, it is apparent that no evidence was presented to any committee of the House in regard to the merits of this proposition. We are just simply told that this man may have something very valuable, and therefore Congress ought to revolutionize its procedure and give him a special privilege. Now, assuming that that principle were right, if it turned out that this man did not have what he claims, it is perfectly manifest that Congress would be very unwilling in the future to grant a similar privilege to any man who might have a commendable proposition. In other words, it would completely destroy the opinion in Congress in favor of such a method of procedure. But that is not the only and chief objection to the rule. This bill itself provides that Mr. Giragossian shall have a patent upon a principle, not upon any machine which he claims to have invented, not upon any device which is patented, but he shall have a patent upon a principle. It strengthens that declaration by providing that no one else shall infringe—what? His device? No. His principle. In other words, if he claims that his device operates by means of a certain principle, all other devices operating, in whole or in part, by that principle are to be utterly and completely and forever barred.

Now, that is the chief objection to this bill. As has been stated here, and is perfectly apparent upon the face of this bill, it does not base that upon the necessity of novelty, which is the primary principle of the patent law. It does not say that Mr. Giragossian shall have been the sole and original discoverer of this alleged principle. There may be 50 inventors who are to-day at work, and who may have carried their inventions much further than Mr. Giragossian, upon the same principle. It does not base it upon the question of his novelty, of his being the original discoverer of the scientific proposition of that principle. It says there shall be no infringement of his principle. And it further strengthens that by going on to say that if the award is made to Mr. Giragossian, then all subsequent devices which operate under the same principle shall be purchased by the United States for the benefit of Giragossian and his assigns.

That is a most remarkable proposition. Now, as a matter of fact, what Mr. Giragossian claims, as near as we can discover in this maze of mystery that surrounds it, because there is nothing but mystery presented here to this House, is a name, namely, free energy. I am not a scientist and would not undertake to discuss the thing from a scientific standpoint; but, so far as I have learned, free energy is applied to the collection of electricity from the atmosphere or the earth without applied force. It is applied to the collection of electric energy by some other process than the dynamo. Now, that is free energy, as the word is generally used. I will guarantee that there are inventions in existence assuming to use the principle of free energy. And that is exactly what this invention is entitled to include.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman give the House the advantage of any information he has along that line?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. A hearing was had yesterday morning on an invention by a man named Perigo, who claims to have invented a machine to collect electricity by free energy; that is, to collect it from the energy of the air. In other words, his invention is based upon the idea, as I gather it, that electricity can be collected from the air, where it must be collected, by some other means than by the force of a dynamo.

Now, if this is true—and I am not enough of a scientist to know—there may be many devices that are patentable for doing that particular thing, or applying that particular principle. If Mr. Giragossian has a device for utilizing free energy, his device or machine or appliance is patentable, but the principle of free energy evidently is not patentable under the existing law. Anybody else who produces a better machine for utilizing free energy is just as well entitled to use it for the benefit of mankind as the man who first obtains the patent on it. In other words, we can not foreclose that principle.

Now, we have got a machine here in the Capitol—I understood from Judge ROMJUE a few minutes ago that the machine which Mr. Perigo had demonstrated before the Patent Committee had been brought over here. It was shown to the Patent Committee. It is in a small box. I have seen it. If they opened it I would not know anything about it. It runs a dynamo or motor, and it lights certain lights. In other words, there is some power in that box. What that power consists of I have no means of knowing. The inventor says it contains free energy. In other words, this device has been brought to a state of completion. It is in actual working order.

Now, it does seem to me that this bill ought not to be passed at all unless it provides that this committee of scientists shall not only have the power but shall be charged with the duty of ascertaining whether or not this device of Mr. Giragossian utilizes the same principle of free energy

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Can not this man get a patent on his invention?

Mr. BORLAND. I have no doubt that any of these gentlemen can get patents. In my judgment what is patentable is the device, not the principle, and I have no doubt that all of them, including Mr. Giragossian, can get a patent on their device, if they have one, and be protected from infringement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is a very weird proposition. I have been wondering why Congress should give this special privilege to this gentleman. Does the gentleman from Missouri, or does anyone, know if he is a citizen of the United States?

Mr. BORLAND. I know nothing about Mr. Giragossian. I never heard his name until this thing came up.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is nothing in the report except letters by way of commendation from three persons in Boston who have known him. Otherwise it seems to be a mystification, a question of the occult, so far as Congress is concerned.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, it was stated before the Committee on Rules that the gentleman referred to is a naturalized citizen of the United States and has been for 26 years, I think it was.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not want to yield for that question, because it is so far removed from what we are talking about that I think it does not matter.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The gentleman's idea is that one can obtain a patent on an invention and not on an idea or principle?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and I feel that if this bill is passed at all—which is a very extraordinary procedure—we ought certainly to safeguard the rights of prior inventors, if there should be any. We ought not to assume, as this bill does, that Mr. Giragossian is the inventor of a machine he claims to have invented, and we ought not to agree that he shall have the entire field to himself. Suppose his machine did work, and it were ascertained that he was not the first inventor. It would be a manifest mistake, as well as a manifest injustice, for Congress to retard the development of science by providing that only he should enter that field.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. As a matter of fact, would the gentleman urge this objection if these scientists were compelled by this resolution to discover or find out in advance whether or not his invention is practicable, whether or not he is the discoverer, the original discoverer?

Mr. LITTLE. And the only one?

Mr. BORLAND. That would remove a part of my objection, but I still feel that the principle which the inventor claims to have discovered is not patentable.

Mr. PURNELL. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I objected to that section 3 of the bill because if this committee of scientists should find that this invention is practicable the Government will consider him as the sole inventor, which does not necessarily follow. I think that an amendment will be offered, and perhaps agreed to by the committee, requiring the committee of scientists also to find that he is the original discoverer or inventor. Would the gentleman still insist on his objection if that were done?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman give me five minutes?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is to be open for amendment until 5.30 o'clock.

Mr. BORLAND. That is not my understanding.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] know that that is the understanding.

Mr. BORLAND. The Chair knows otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the understanding.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very well, whatever it was that passed in the presence of Mr. LENROOT and Mr. CROSSER. I will not characterize it as an agreement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, maybe we had better see if we can get an agreement. Do I understand that the agreement between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] holds?

Mr. LENROOT. The only agreement was that the gentleman from Ohio would not move the previous question prior to 5.30. Of course, that is not an agreement to vote at that time.

Mr. BORLAND. That is the only agreement that I know of. The gentleman from Ohio stated that he would not move the previous question before 5.30.

Mr. LENROOT. He has a right to move it then.

Mr. FORDNEY. I am told by gentlemen on this side of the House that there is another gentleman who is going to give a demonstration of this power, a man whose name has not been mentioned here, who is ready to demonstrate to the House that somebody else knows something about this matter. I should like to see that demonstration before we conclude this matter and vote upon it. Am I right about that?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] has the machine in the corridor, and is going to demonstrate it as soon as he has time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I think we ought to proceed to the consideration of the bill itself. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] stated that he desired to discuss the rule. As a matter of fact, he has discussed the bill and not the rule. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think I have come as near discussing the rule as anybody else on the floor.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Nobody has discussed it.

Mr. BORLAND. I have not discussed Paradise Lost, anyhow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is perfectly obvious that the gentleman will not discuss that. He does not know anything about it.

Mr. BORLAND. No. I might discuss Paradise Regained. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the fundamental objection to this rule is that it makes in order this particular bill, the whole purpose of which is to preclude any other inventor or any other process. Every paragraph in this bill bristles with the name of Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

I looked over this bill with the idea of amending it, to see whether these scientists could not investigate some other invention, or the general principle involved, but everything in this bill is Garabed T. K. Giragossian, showing very conclusively that it was drawn by some interested parties connected with that inventor. The bill itself ought to be entirely recast. It ought not to come before Congress in this shape. If it comes before Congress at all it ought to be in the shape of a bill providing for a committee under the Secretary of the Interior, a totally disinterested committee, to investigate the appliances supposed to utilize the principle of free energy, and under that Mr. Garabed T. K. Giragossian would have the same chance as any other man. I assume that these scientists will be above any ulterior influence, just as much so as if they were appointed solely for the purpose of investigating this gentleman's invention.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The gentleman raises a very interesting and delicate question. As I understand, for instance, an improved device for recording the speech of a Congressman would be subject to a patent?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. SHERWOOD. But the speech of a Congressman, even if it contained new ideas, would not be patentable, and the ideas contained in it would not be.

Mr. BORLAND. They would not be patentable. The speech would be copyrightable by the man who makes it. But the speech of a Congressman, of course, is free energy, and any possibility of utilizing it might come under the objection to this bill. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SMAEL). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman desire to close? If he does, I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia. I intended to move the previous question, but I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS]. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thirteen minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia 13 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And I yield two minutes and a half.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall occupy all of my time, but I certainly desire to answer some of the objections urged, and difficulties sought to be created, by the opponents of this resolution.

This matter has been before this body on a previous occasion. At that time a quorum was required by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and we did not proceed with the consideration of the bill until a quorum had arrived. A number of speeches were made on this resolution, and it passed this body something like two months ago by a vote of 234 to 14. It passed the Senate with practical unanimity. Then it went to the President, and under the circumstances which have been narrated, failed to receive his signature.

Since that time this resolution has been considered by the Interior Department, which has suggested one, or two amendments. If they are agreed to by the House the resolution will be acceptable to that department. It seems to me that this brief recital of the facts of the case ought to suffice to take the pending resolution out of that weird realm, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] seeks to consign it.

The real, basic proposition before this House is this: Is this body willing to ascertain without money, and without price, whether this man has made a discovery which, if made, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has very justly observed, will write him down as the greatest among all those great of all the ages? That is the real proposition that confronts us. If he has made the discovery that he alleges that he has made, then the difficulties and objections that have been urged this evening are simply fantastic. If this man makes good, then we can not go amiss in giving him the benefits and protection proposed by this resolution, which contemplates the creation of a committee of scientists of the highest order of capacity, and reputation to pass on the merits of the alleged discovery.

The resolution by its terms transfers this discovery to the United States Government. In this connection I wish to point out how impossible it would be for any of the consequences to follow that have been projected into this debate by the all too vivid imaginations of some of the gentlemen who have preceded me. When this measure was considered before, it was suggested—this suggestion now appears to have been abandoned—that a perfect orgy of stock speculation would follow upon its passage. That was about as good an argument against the measure, as any that have been made to-day; and yet how could an orgy of stock speculation arise out of an alleged invention that can not go on the market, until a committee of scientists has determined its merits, and the Government has refused to exercise its option of purchase?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman says the first operation of this bill is to transfer this invention to the Federal Government. Where does he find that? Not in section 6?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The trouble with many of the gentlemen in opposition is that they have in large measure consulted their imagination, rather than their reason, in their attacks upon this resolution. I refer the gentleman to section 1 of the bill, which provides for this transfer, and concludes in these words:

> Said assignment to and utilization of said discovery or invention by the United States Government shall be free of charge or expense.

More than this the inventor in a later clause turns over to the Government for its use any improvements that he may hereafter make upon the essential principle.

Mr. BORLAND. Then what does section 6 mean, that if after a successful demonstration the United States Government wishes to purchase it, it shall pay him for his invention, and that that option shall be exercised at the present or next session of Congress.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Precisely. The resolution first makes the Government the trustee of the discovery, thus rendering stock speculation impossible, and later provides that if the merits of the invention are established, the United States shall have the option to purchase the same, on an agreed compensation.

Mr. BORLAND. But it must do it within the session.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It matters not when the Government takes this action.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman states that the purpose is to ascertain whether or not this gentleman has discovered something of service.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The question of the gentleman's discovery has nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We first propose to ascertain whether this man has something worth while, and if so, the Government is given the right to purchase it.

Mr. REAVIS. Purchase it of this gentleman whether he has discovered it or not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, no. The gentleman, with some others, occupy an inconsistent position. They first maintain that the alleged discovery is incredible and impossible, and that on this ground the resolution ought to be defeated. Later they complain that Giragossian is given an exclusive right in an absurdity and an impossibility. If the committee of scientists should ascertain that this discovery has been made as alleged, then of course the Government ought to purchase it, but if the committee is of the opinion that the alleged discovery is a myth, an impossible and fantastic dream, an air bubble, why worry ourselves because the bill gives Giragossian an exclusive right in and control over the bubble?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What is the real purpose and necessity for bringing in special legislation for this man?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That question has been answered so completely by the gentleman from Indiana that I hardly think that I ought to take the time of the House to make further answer. It has been pointed out in the report of the committee, and we know that it is true as a matter of fact, that some of the greatest discoverers have never been able to realize the benefits of their inventions on account of the defects of our patent laws. This man says that he is not willing to take his chances under a patent. He says that he has discovered something greatly worth our while. The question is, Do we want it? He puts the matter up to us. He is willing to have this alleged discovery investigated by five scientists of the highest eminence. I do not say that he has discovered what he claims. I have no knowledge whatever on the subject, but in the event that a committee of scientists capable of passing on the merits of this or any other invention, should report that Giragossian has discovered all that he claims to have discovered, or even measurably all that he claims to have discovered, the question is, Do we want it or not on the terms proposed?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But they all say exactly that same thing when they present a claim, what evidence have we that this man has discovered this thing?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. For that we will take the report of the scientists, we will put it up to them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The scientists are to be appointed by the gentleman himself.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. With the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is all in his hands.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not a bit of it, the gentleman misunderstands the bill. The bill says that he shall appoint them subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Suppose he should suggest a man for the committee, and the Secretary of the Interior should say: "This man does not suit me, he does not measure up to the requirements of the position." What will happen? Why that man must be dropped. And so in succession all names must be withdrawn, until a committee is finally selected that will be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that every man selected must be satisfactory to Mr. Giragossian?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The committee must be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior. Does the gentleman think that an official of the standing and intelligence of the Secretary of the Interior, confronted with a matter of such vital importance as this, will for a moment agree that any member of this committee shall be other than a scientist of the highest standing?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Secretary should appoint five men without regard to Mr. Giragossian.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is proposed amounts to the same thing. The objection is a triviality.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In making answer to my question, I think the gentleman from Virginia misapprehended the question. I say that all inventors claim that their discovery is the most remarkable thing in the world; and in this instance you say that we must have a special legislation, because possibly he has discovered such a thing. Upon what does the gentleman base the idea that this is any more plausible than that claimed by any other man?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This man claims that he has discovered a method of utilizing the cosmic forces to drive machinery. I do not need anyone to tell me, that if he has discovered how to do this, he has made the greatest discovery in the history of mankind. I am willing to take the chance of ascertaining by a method that will cost the Government absolutely nothing, whether or not he has made this discovery. The committee of scientists that is proposed will be amply able to pass on the scientific or other merits of this alleged discovery.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not that sound like that the intelligent gentleman picking up the right shell?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not know what this proposition sounds like to the gentleman from Kansas City. But I do know this that the gentleman from Kansas City sneers at the invention under consideration, and then indicates that some other party has discovered something equally as remarkable and incredible. That is the attitude of the gentleman from Kansas City. He has maintained upon this floor this evening that we ought not to give this man the protection proposed by this resolution, on the ground that there is somebody else who has discovered something similar, and equally as astounding.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Kansas City does not ask any special rights.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not say he does. But I do say that the gentleman has indicated to this body that there is another inventor who has devised an instrument that will in all respects be as extraordinary in its possibilities as the possibilities claimed for the Garabed. If this be true, if this party has discovered anything that will do what is claimed for the Garabed, then I will be willing to deal with this inventor, precisely as it is proposed to deal with Giragossian. In other words, with respect to his distinctive principle to give him the same rights, and the same protection that is proposed to be given to the inventor of the Garabed. His invention will be upon the same plane as the Garabed, and should be dealt with precisely in the same way. Surely, the gentleman from Missouri will not complain of this plan of dealing with his inventor.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned with the statement that this is an absurdity. I want the gentleman to tell me what he thinks about section 3, wherein it recites that if a demonstration should establish the fact that the device of this gentleman is practicable, then by this legislation the United States recognizes this man as the discoverer of it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It has already been indicated by a member of the Patent Committee that this suggested difficulty will be removed by an amendment to the effect that the committee of scientists shall be empowered to ascertain whether Giragossian is the original discoverer of the device which he will submit.

Mr. REAVIS. Then it will not depend upon the demonstration, but on the fact of its discovery?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The committee will be empowered to fix and report on the priority of discovery of the device utilized in the Garabed.

Mr. REAVIS. As the bill is written now that is not true.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why trouble about the bill as it is written, when the gentleman's trouble will be relieved by an amendment that will be proposed by the Patent Committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House is not in order, and I ask that the Sergeant at Arms or the Speaker restore order, and if anybody has brought an electric device upon this floor, that they be directed to take it out.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I believe that it is claimed on the part of the device referred to by the gentleman from Kansas that it too, taps the cosmic forces. If this is maintained of the device now in the House, why this attitude of incredulity toward the claims of Giragossian?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has made an intelligent and a forceful argument. I want to know if he would be in favor of the resolution if we were not at war?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If we were not at war the circumstances would not be so exigent as they are to-day, but being at war, can we afford to take any chances?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. This resolution would never have been brought into the House if we were not at war.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Possibly not, but what conclusion do you derive from that? We are at war, and the resolution is before us. The conditions of war are absolutely different from the conditions of peace, and justify different attitudes and different action.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Each time hereafter that a man comes to us claiming to have discovered a new principle in cosmic forces, are we to treat him as we propose to treat Mr. Giragossian?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will answer that question categorically. Every time anyone shall come before this body submitting a proposition to test a discovery which in the judgment of this body will be as mighty and transcendent as the discovery alleged to have been made by Mr. Giragossian, put him on the same plane as Mr. Giragossian and try out his alleged discovery by the same method proposed in this resolution. That answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I beg the gentleman's pardon if I dissent from that suggestion. We do not know how great the discovery of Mr. Giragossian is until it is demonstrated.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We must leave the determination of the merits of future propositions to the judgment of future Congresses. We pass on this proposition to-day in the exercise of our best judgment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. On what evidence?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. None whatever.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly. Then what about the next man who claims to have an invention and who comes to us with precisely the same evidence—none whatever?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very well. The gentleman thinks he has put me in a quandary. The next man who comes before this body with the unanimous report of the Committee on Patents, and a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, providing for the consideration of his proposition, should be treated precisely as I ask this body to treat this man. That is fair.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What evidence has the Committee on Patents or the Committee on Rules had to substantiate this man's claim?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am putting the future man on the same plane as the present man. Any man who will be able to satisfy future Rules Committees and Patent Committees without evidence or otherwise, who can so impress himself on the judgment of these men, who are capable men——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That they are willing unanimously to report that it is in the interest of this Government to ascertain the merits of the proposition, and in the event it is ascertained that the device is meritorious to make the contract proposed, should be put precisely upon the footing of this man.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman does not wish to put the Committee on Rules in a false position. All the Committee on Rules does by a unanimous report is to give the House an opportunity to consider the proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I only meant to say, so far as the Rules Committee is concerned, that this resolution is before us, by a unanimous report from that committee. The attitude of some of the opponents of this resolution is highly inconsistent. First, they say that it is in the highest degree incredible and absurd to say that any man can drive machinery by utilizing directly the cosmic energies, that is to say by putting his machinery in direct relation to the flow of these energies. Right on the heels of that statement they submit the invention of a gentleman who claims he has discovered how to utilize one form of cosmic energy. I believe the statement is made that this machine derives its power from the utilization of cosmic electrical force. So that at the very moment when the effort is made to laugh the claims of Giragossian out of court, another inventor bobs up to maintain that he has done the very thing claimed on behalf of Giragossian, that he too has related machinery to the cosmic forces, and using the free electricity of the universe, has turned it to the uses of man.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But is not there this difference, that this man is willing to go to the Patent Office under the laws made by the Congress, whereas Giragossian is not willing to go there? Is it not a question of regularity of procedure?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No, he is here impeding the passage of the Giragossian resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not at all. No one I have heard has said that what Mr. Giragossian has is fantastic, except he does not want to conform to the law in this case as other inventors are obliged to conform to it; but he wants to take a short cut through Congress and get a patent right for 17 years, and if his bill is passed the other man has no right to bring his invention forward.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If Giragossian can make good, and he asks to be allowed to make good, I favor giving him the short cut, or any other cut. I hope he will get it. The Government will not lose anything, if this man's claims prove to be fantastic and absurd.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the other man is cut out.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. Giragossian is not given any indefinite rights. He is only protected for 17 years in his distinctive principle. If there is anything in this discovery the Government will buy it. If the committee reports there is nothing in Giragossian's contentions, and that his device is worthless, will the gentleman tell me how this man will be able to capitalize a proposition so decisively condemned?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMBPELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I would rather proceed without interruption. It is the easiest thing in the world for a Member to find fault and criticize. Fault is found with Mr. Giragossian because he has not gone to the Patent Office and taken his chances under the general patent laws of the United States on his invention, whatever it may be, and that the Congress should not give him special consideration.

Mr. Giragossian, in section 1 of this bill, offers the free use of his invention to the Government of the United States on its battleships, its aeroplanes, and wherever it may be utilized for all time. The improvements on this device provided for in section 3 may be made by anyone, and they may be taken over by the Government, and if Mr. Giragossian desires to sell them to Tom, Dick, and Harry, or the public, he must pay the inventor for their use in connection with his device.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman wishes to be accurate. He does not pay the inventor. The Government must take it over, and then he pays the Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He pays for it is what I assert.

Mr. LENROOT. Pays the Government for it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. At a reasonable price. I have not been able to get any definite information as to what this device is. I am told that it is so important, that it is so simple, that if its nature were disclosed it would give the key to other inventors to complete devices which they may have been working on or had in mind and almost grasped, but did not grasp, and he would lose his 25 years of labor and intelligent energy which has been expended on his device. The inventor of this discovery, if it will do what he says it will do, is what the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Virginia have said, a benefactor to mankind such as few men have been.

He offers this device to the Government of the United States for nothing, and no doubt the people of the United States will reap from it whatever benefit there is. More men and women are interested in this and are looking forward to its use, or what it is claimed the inventor has, than have looked forward to any discovery in years. There has been a subconscious feeling that the time is ripe for some great discovery. It is believed that that discovery is being now offered to the Government and to the people of the United States by the inventor, Mr. Giragossian. If he has nothing, we have but given the time of Congress and nothing else for a demonstration of the matter. If he has what he claims he has, Congress will have never done a more important thing than to give consideration to the resolution that permits the Government and the people of the United States to reap the benefit of the invention.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I would like to suggest if these matters suggested by the Interior Department——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They are now in the bill. The only amendment suggested by the Interior Department is in the bill by way of amendment—in section 4, I think. As a Member of this House I do not want to take the chance of putting an obstruction in the way of the passage of this resolution so that the people of the world may have the benefit of this discovery. I believe there are wonderful possibilities. I do not know whether we are to realize them or not. But if there should be something in the claims of Mr. Giragossian, it is not for this Congress at this time to say to him and to the world, and to the people of the United States, "no." There may be some one in Missouri, there may be some one in Indiana, there may be some one in Michigan, there may be some one in Kansas, who has something just as good. Indeed, I have men in my district who claim they have something just as good as this man has. I am more interested in the welfare of the world, the people of the United States, and the Government of the United States than the interest of any inventor, whether the inventor of this electrical device that was brought in here on the floor, or any other. This is no time to consider the welfare of a particular inventor. This man has a device in the use of which he says he can not be protected under the general patent laws of the United States. And everybody knows that is true. And he offers the Government of the United States, for the action of Congress in this special patent, the free use of his device. No other patentee makes such offer under the general patent law to the Government or people of the United States. The consideration for our action here to-day is the free use of this device for the Government, of untold value, if it is what he claims, with no loss to the Government or the people of the United States if it turns out to be a farce.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, as a citizen of the United States, as a Member of this House, I am not going to take the chance of voting against this resolution. I want to try out this device and see whether or not there is behind the claims of Mr. Giragossian such a device as would utilize the free energy that surrounds the earth. I am in favor of the rule and of the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the rule.

The rule was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I want to have the resolution read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 174) for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Farr	Kennedy, R. I.	Riordan
Bacharach	Fess	King	Robinson
Bathrick	Fields	Kinkaid	Rogers
Beshlin	Fitzgerald	Kitchin	Rowe
Blanton	Flood	Kreider	Rowland
Bowers	Flynn	LaGuardia	Scott, Pa.
Brand	Frear	Lazaro	Scully
Britten	Fuller, Mass.	Lee, Ga.	Sears
Brodbeck	Gallivan	Lesher	Sisson
Browne	Gard	Lever	Slemp
Browning	Garner	Linthicum	Smith, Mich.
Bruckner	Goodall	McArthur	Smith, C. P.
Brumbaugh	Goodwin, Ark.	McCormick	Smith, T. F.
Butler	Gould	McCulloch	Snyder
Capstick	Graham, Pa.	McKenzie	Stedman
Carew	Gray, N. J.	McKinley	Steele
Carter, Mass.	Gregg	Maher	Stephens, Nebr.
Cary	Griest	Mann	Stevenson
Chandler, N. Y.	Griffin	Mason	Sullivan
Chandler, Okla.	Hamill	Merritt	Swift
Clark, Fla.	Hamilton, N. Y.	Miller, Minn.	Switzer
Coady	Hamlin	Miller, Wash.	Tague
Cooper, Wis.	Harrison, Va.	Mondell	Talbott
Copley	Haskell	Montague	Taylor, Colo.
Costello	Hayes	Mudd	Templeton
Curry, Cal.	Heintz	Neely	Thompson
Dale, N. Y.	Helvering	Nelson	Tinkham
Davidson	Hilliard	Nolan	Towner
Dewalt	Hollingsworth	Olney	Vare
Dickinson	Howard	Osborne	Walton
Dies	Hull, Tenn.	O'Shaunnessy	Watson, Va.
Dooling	Husted	Overmyer	Webb
Drukker	Hutchinson	Parker, N. J.	Whaley
Dunn	Johnson, Ky.	Polk	White, Me.
Eagan	Johnson, S. Dak.	Porter	White, Ohio
Eagle	Johnson, Wash.	Powers	Winslow
Edmonds	Jones, Va.	Pratt	Wise
Ellsworth	Kahn	Price	Woodyard
Estopinal	Kearns	Ragsdale	Young, Tex.
Fairchild, G. W.	Kelley, Mich.	Reed

During the roll call the following occurred:

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. It is too late now.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my point of order.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman withdrawing his point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call will proceed, the absence of a quorum having been ascertained.

Thereupon the Clerk resumed and completed the calling of the roll.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 270 Members answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept, as trustee for the United States Government, from Garabed T. K. Giragossian an assignment of the right to utilize for the Government's own use a discovery or invention to be known as the "Garabed." Said assignment to and utilization of said discovery or invention by the United States Government shall be free of charge or expense.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to perform any and all acts, and to make such rules and regulations, and enter into such contracts as may be necessary to carry this resolution into effect: Provided, however, That the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian shall demonstrate the practicability of his discovery or invention to a commission of five eminent scientists, who shall be appointed by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian and be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The United States Government shall be under no expense in connection with the demonstration of the "Garabed."

Mr. BORLAND rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to offer an amendment to section 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has not finished the reading. The Chair thinks the Clerk had better read the bill through and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That if such demonstration shall in the opinion of the said scientists prove the practicability of said discovery or invention, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian shall be recognized by the United States Government as the original discoverer, inventor, and legal owner of the invention or discovery and of any improvements pertaining thereto that may be made by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian. The certificate of said commission of scientists, to the effect that said discovery or invention is practicable, shall constitute the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian the legal owner of and entitle him to all the rights and benefits of said discovery or invention for a period of 17 years. The right is reserved to the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, his heirs and assigns, to take out patents for his aforesaid discovery, invention, or for any improvement or device pertaining thereto.

SEC. 4. That the United States Government shall not issue to anyone else any patent involving or relating to the principle of the "Garabed" free-energy generator regardless of its form or shape, or for any device, improvement, process, equipment, or apparatus based upon the system or correlative principle of the said discovery or invention, or for any improvement or change developed in the use of the said "Garabed," and shall prevent the construction, importation, use, or exploitation thereof, in whole or in part, in the United States, and shall protect the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, his heirs and assigns, in the rights and interests in the "Garabed" in the above respect for a period of 17 years in the United States and in foreign countries where such protection is afforded by treaty obligation, international law, or diplomatic representation.

SEC. 5. That any essential improvement or contrivance by any person or persons other than Garabed T. K. Giragossian relating to the "Garabed," or its principle, which shall prove valuable and essential thereto in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior during the period of the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian's special protection shall be bought by the United States Government for its own use in conjunction with its use of the said "Garabed," with adequate compensation to the inventor or contriver thereof. If, however, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian wishes to utilize any such invention or contrivance so acquired by the United States Government, he or his assigns, and no other person or corporation, shall be entitled thereto upon the payment of a fair, just, and reasonable royalty therefor. In consideration of this right the United States Government shall have, without expense, the right to use for its own purpose any new improvement or device made by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

SEC. 6. That after the successful demonstration of the "Garabed," if the United States Government wishes to purchase the right and title for the exclusive use of said discovery or invention, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian will comply with the request of the United States Government: Provided, That he shall be remunerated to the extent commensurate with the value of his discovery or invention, which shall be appraised by a committee of even number, one-half of the membership of which shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior and one-half selected by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, and the finding of said committee shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and of the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

If the United States Congress in session at the time of the demonstration, or at the latest during the following session, does not decide to avail itself of this privilege, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian's legal rights and powers shall continue unimpaired as prescribed and set forth in this resolution.

SEC. 7. That any sale, or attempted sale, by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, or by his representatives or assigns, of any interest in or any title to said discovery or invention, or any part thereof, prior to the approval of the same by said commission of scientists, shall be illegal, invalid, and void.

SEC. 8. That the United States Government will have the right to exercise the aforesaid right to utilize said discovery or invention for its own use simultaneously with the beginning of the public and general use of the said "Garabed" system.

With committee amendments as follows:

On page 3, line 5, insert the word "distinctive."

On page 3, line 7, after the word "the," strike out the words "system or correlative" and insert the word "distinctive."

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has addressed the Chair and is entitled to an hour.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio before he proceeds, and that is whether there will be opportunity to offer an amendment?

Mr. CROSSER. I expect to move the previous question at about the time suggested. There will be one or two amendments.

Mr. BORLAND. I will ask the gentleman if he will object to this amendment?

Mr. CROSSER. The gentleman may send it up. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this be not taken out of my time.

Mr. BORLAND. I join with the gentleman in asking that this be not taken out of his time. The amendment is to section 3, requiring that "the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian is the sole discoverer and inventor thereof" and that "it does not involve any known principle." Has the gentleman any objection to that?

Mr. CROSSER. The committee has an amendment bearing on that same subject. I will discuss it during my time. The gentleman from Missouri has taken a great deal of time upon the question already.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a brief inquiry?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to know whether it is the purpose of the gentleman, by moving the previous question, to prevent any amendments being considered other than those that the committee having the bill in charge bring in?

Mr. CROSSER. Not necessarily. We want to conclude the debate here to-night.

Mr. SHERLEY. That does not answer the question, and I am asking it in good faith. I want to know just what the gentleman's purpose is, and I think the House is entitled to know that.

Mr. CROSSER. We have discussed certain amendments with Members of the House, which we are willing to accept, and some others we can not.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman willing to have the House consider those amendments?

Mr. CROSSER. Gentlemen have consumed the time in calling the roll, in debate, and so forth, and we can not agree to any further delay.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not a question of personal wishes. The House is entitled to know.

Mr. CROSSER. I am going to try to explain when I get the floor here, if I ever get it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has it now.

Mr. CROSSER. I have not taken any time thus far, and I want to make a few remarks.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill came before the House during the latter part of the last session, was quite fully considered, and passed the House by a vote of 234 to 14. It went to the Senate, and there were not half a dozen votes against it there. It reached the President's hands a few minutes before the expiration of the time fixed for the adjournment of the last session of Congress. I am not sure whether there was any misapprehension about it, but since that time we have had suggestions from the Secretary of the Interior as to two slight modifications, with which the committee are satisfied and with which the author of this discovery or invention is satisfied. Those amendments have been read by the Clerk. We have also a report upon the resolution from the Secretary of the Interior, and I want to read that. His letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 12, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES B. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on Patents, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: I am in receipt of your letter of December 7, 1917, asking for early report upon H. J. Res. No. 174, relating to the invention or discovery of Mr. G. T. K. Giragossian.

It appears that the resolution is, with the exceptions hereinafter noted, practically identical with the resolution passed by both Houses of Congress during the first session, 1917. In the present resolution section 4 has been so amended as to limit the protection extended to the inventor to "any patent involving or relating to the principle of the 'Garabed' free-energy generator" instead of "for any kind of free-energy generator," as in the original resolution.

Section 6 has been amended so as to give to the United States the option of acquiring the right and title for exclusive use of the discovery or invention anywhere instead of "within the boundaries of the United States," as originally proposed.

I know nothing of the invention or device to which the resolution relates, and can therefore express no opinion as to its feasibility. The resolution contains provisions designed to insure an investigation and examination as a prerequisite to the vesting of any right in the inventor or the imposing of any obligations upon the United States. The results claimed for this invention would be of such vital importance that I am inclined to the view that opportunity should be accorded for a trial thereof.

I suggest, however, that in order to afford opportunity to other inventors to secure patents upon discoveries which do not infringe the distinctive principle of the Garabed invention, that line 4 of page 3 be amended by inserting the word "distinctive" at the end of the line, and that lines 7 and 8, page 3, be amended by striking therefrom the words "system or correlative" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "distinctive." So amended I have no objection to interpose to the passage of the resolution.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. On account of the confusion on the floor I could not fully hear all that the gentleman read. Do I understand that is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. CROSSER. That is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And he is the head of the Patent Office?

Mr. CROSSER. Of course the Secretary of the Interior is the head of the Patent Office.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And with respect to this resolution that we are now considering he has suggested that certain amendments ought to be agreed to?

Mr. CROSSER. He has suggested the amendments which have been indicated.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And his department is satisfied with the bill if those amendments are agreed to?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has your committee reported these amendments?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes. His department is not only satisfied but he says he is inclined to the view that opportunity should be accorded for a trial thereof.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the committee has approved these two amendments. Personally, I think the same meaning was conveyed in the original resolution. That resolution provided that no patents should be granted based upon the principle of the Garabed. The whole question is whether or not the words "distinctive principle" make it any more definite than the term "principle."

We are glad to accept the amendment, and we are glad to have the Secretary of the Interior approve the idea.

When this bill was considered by the House before there was a great effort made by certain all-wise, very humorous gentlemen, who imagined that nothing good could come from an obscure source, that nothing good could come out of Nazareth, to ridicule this proposition out of court.

That effort failed ignominiously, as it should have failed. If this gentleman has what he claims he has, he is bringing to mankind something greater than all the discoveries, greater than any material thing ever brought to the human race in this or any other country. I can not see how men can stand here and quibble about the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee when it is possible—and I am almost inclined to say probable—that this man is holding out to the United States Government and to the people a thing of as great importance as this. I say that if there is even slight probability that such a discovery has been made, then quibbling about little details is, to say the least, not laudable.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman if the President has approved of the bill?

Mr. CROSSER. I have explained that the Secretary of the Interior has sent to the committee a letter expressing the opinion that with two slight amendments, which we have adopted, opportunity should be afforded for a trial thereof.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. No; I have not much time before the time suggested for a vote. Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that it may be that this man may have something which is practicable but which he did not discover. The members of the committee themselves, since this report was directed, finding that such objection had been raised, while they did not believe it to be likely, have agreed to incorporate in the bill, after the words "that if such demonstration shall in the opinion of said scientists prove to be practicable," the following language: "and that he is the discoverer or inventor of the same."

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. CROSSER. No; I can not yield; I want to finish my remarks. Now, this would make it absolutely impossible for anyone to be injured in any event. If this man is the original discoverer and inventor, and his discovery or invention is practicable, and if the commission of five scientists who are to be agreed upon by the gentleman and the Secretary of the Interior declares such to be the fact, protection is given to him, and he would be entitled to it if he has what is claimed.

It is the opinion of your Patent Committee, expressed on two occasions, that this man is worthy of the greatest confidence. He has impressed me, after hours of talk, as being one of the most intelligent and scientific men I have met, and no one who has ever talked with him will dispute the statement. Even if this man is able to dispense with the use of fuel of any kind, we nevertheless find men here objecting that he will get too much protection. In my opinion the United States Government could not give him enough protection during a period of 17 years to equal the benefit and blessing that such a discovery or invention would bring to the people of this country and the entire world. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. No; I do not yield, and it is useless to ask me until I have finished speaking. Now, gentlemen, why should there be any serious opposition to a proposition of this nature?

In the very first section of the bill he makes an assignment of whatever he has to the Government for its own uses everywhere free of charge and expense. Is any better evidence of his good faith required than that; if so, I would like to know what it is. Then it was suggested that it might be to the advantage of the people of this country that the Government should control even the private sale and use of the discovery or invention and permit it to be used by the people of the United States. He even provides that the Government shall have the right to buy the exclusive right to control its public and private use not only in the United States but throughout the world. Could there be any better evidence of good faith than that? And yet we have men standing here saying, "Oh, perhaps he may have made such a discovery, but why not tie him down still tighter." Do you realize that what we are considering is not an ordinary statute? This man has the right to some consideration in the determination of the terms of the proposed agreement.

I would like to know why it is that if these gentlemen who are now said to have discovered the same thing that Mr. Giragossian says he has discovered, if they have had it in mind all these years, they have never come forward before to announce their discovery to the public until it seemed likely that this man would be given the opportunity he asks to demonstrate his proposition? Does it not seem rather strange that just about the time he is to have the opportunity to demonstrate, and only to demonstrate, for if he does not prove anything he gets nothing, that then all these claimants should come forward saying that they had it also? A man in Cincinnati, in my own State, said to me, "I have something, but I need $1,000 to complete it, and if the Government would help me I can solve the mystery."

Mr. BORLAND. Has the gentleman time to yield now?

Mr. CROSSER. Not now. I yielded before and was deprived of time necessary to conclude my remarks. This resolution gives this man no rights whatever unless he has made a discovery and that discovery is proven to be practicable. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has eloquently described the possibilities of the human mind and who knows but that Mr. Giragossian has learned one of nature's secrets; and how can men justify the obstruction of an effort to prove his contention when it costs the Government not a penny?

Mr. Speaker, may I yield some time now and offer an amendment later without losing the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can yield time for debate, and reserve the balance of his time. If he yields for the purpose of amendment he loses the floor.

Mr. CROSSER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to apologize to the Members who were here during the former discussion of this matter, for taking the floor again and would not further trespass on the time of the House but for the fact that a very large proportion of the gentlemen who are now present were not here during the discussion on the rule. For the benefit of those not then present, I simply wish to epitomize and emphasize the features of this resolution that appeal to me, and which I think will appeal to other Members, so that they will be in mind, when the time arrives for voting. In the first place, this matter was fully discussed when it was last before this body. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], and many others spoke in favor of it. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and others spoke against it. There was a full debate. A call of the House was demanded before the discussion was allowed to proceed. Hence a quorum was present at the discussion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that when the bill was under consideration for amendment only one amendment was permitted and the previous question was then moved, without any opportunity to offer other amendments?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Doubtless the gentleman in charge of the bill was irritated by the extent to which the available time was frittered away, in useless contention, instead of upon the merits, and did move the previous question. He may have done that. But there was ample discussion of the bill and opportunity was given, if it had been availed of, to offer amendments. The gentleman from Wisconsin, as the RECORD will show, occupied the floor twice in the course of that debate, and spoke at length.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I can not yield. I have but five minutes. I have not stated other than what the RECORD shows. I see before me the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. He I think, is in a position to support the statement that I have made.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state what the vote was on that occasion?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Two hundred and thirty-four to fourteen.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that the President has since declined to approve this?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, for the satisfaction of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] who has already asked that question once, if not twice, and received the answer which I will now make, I will say that the President did not sign the resolution. Is the gentleman now satisfied? Has he put the precise matters he wanted, before the House? I admit that the resolution went up to the President one-half hour before the time of adjournment, and that he did not sign it. It was a pocket veto. The fact of that pocket veto affords the reason for bringing this resolution again before the House.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Has the gentleman any information as to the President's attitude now?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The President of course does not give out any information as to his attitude. All that I can say in this connection is that the Secretary of the Interior has had this particular resolution before him, and has indicated two amendments that he favors. Should these amendments be adopted by the House, he writes that he will not be opposed to this resolution.

Now for the benefit of my friend from Pennsylvania, having stated the attitude of the Secretary of the Interior, I will again make the statement, that the President did not sign this resolution when it was before him at the last session of Congress.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. I voted for this resolution when it was up in the last Congress, and I wish the gentleman would tell the House what the status of the matter would be in case Mr. Giragossian has not got what he claims to have?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Should the committee report that Mr. Giragossian's alleged discovery is without merit, then this bubble will be exploded. That is all. The Government will incur no risk or liability, in that event.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will it bar out other inventors?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Absolutely not. This report will merely serve to explode the Giragossian bubble. I want to be frank about this matter. It may be that we are pursuing a bubble, it may be that Mr. Giragossian does not possess what he claims to possess, but we will not buy a bubble. Should the committee of scientists report favorably upon the merits of this proposition we have an option upon the invention, but even then we are not compellable to buy it. Should the report of the committee be adverse, we will of course go no further in this matter.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman has looked this resolution over carefully, can he see any harm in allowing this to be amended so this board of scientists would have the right to look at any other invention if they so desired?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Of course the committee will take the claims of others into consderation in making their inquiries. They will have the right to determine the priority of discovery, if a counterclaim is submitted. I am perfectly willing to say that I see no objection to a number of amendments that might be offered, but on the other hand no particular reason why they should be adopted. I have never seen a bill before this body that could not be amended without any prejudice to the real merits of the bill. But on the other hand, these amendments could be omitted. That is true of the amendment suggested by my friend. Indeed another amendment will cover that point. Time presses. Hence I insist that this resolution should be passed with the committee amendments for the reason that it will then be in the form that is approved by the Secretary of the Interior. I undertake to say, of course this is merely my personal judgment, that the interests of the Government are amply protected by this resolution with the amendments, and in the form in which it will be voted on.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. JUUL. Has any other inventor appeared before the committee with a similar claim to the one here presented?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand not. Mr. Giragossian does not claim (I think I understand what the gentleman refers to) that his discovery has anything to do with electrical energy. I believe there is a gentleman who has come forward in the last two or three days who claims to drive machinery by the use of free electricity. But his claims do not conflict with the claims of Giragossian in any way whatever. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer several committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. There are two in the bill.

Mr. CROSSER. I wish to have those acted upon first.

The SPEAKER. Which?

Mr. CROSSER. Those in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time has not come yet, unless the gentleman yields the floor.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this before I conclude, that there are other people in the world, and I do not want to be too definite about it, although I know of what I am speaking, who will not sputter and quibble about terms. The failure of this resolution to become law last October was noticed very quickly, and less than two weeks ago there were very clear and definite suggestions made to Mr. Giragossian. I do not think I need to say anything further.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin? Has the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] yielded the floor?

Mr. CROSSER. No; I have not. I want to have these amendments read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments in the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 3, line 5, insert before the word "principle" the word "distinctive."

Page 3, line 7, after the word "the," strike out the words "system or correlative" and insert in lieu thereof the word "distinctive."

Mr. CROSSER. Those are committee amendments.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, does the rule permit debate upon this amendment—argument for and against?

The SPEAKER. After the amendment is read in the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, does that preclude argument against the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] still holds the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] a question?

Mr. CROSSER. I have yielded to a number of questions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman intend to permit debate against any of these amendments?

Mr. CROSSER. I can not answer everybody. I am trying to confer with everybody here at once.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose to a question of information. That is the end of it, unless he can get the consent of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the gentleman from Ohio refuses to answer?

Mr. CROSSER. I am yielding to another man.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORLAND. The Speaker has stated that these amendments were offered to be read in the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER]. Does that mean that they are offered and are now before the House?

The SPEAKER. It means that they are pending; yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Then they are to be debated and voted on?

The SPEAKER. They will be voted on; yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Will they not also be open to debate?

The SPEAKER. Of course, if you can ever get the floor.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. Does this rule permit amendments to be offered by anyone else?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], whenever he gets ready, moves the previous question, and it is carried, that is the end of amendment.

Mr. CRISP. An amendment can not be offered by anybody else?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Has the chairman of the Committee on Patents the right to submit amendments, and if so, to be heard on them?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated three or four times that the gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. HULBERT. Do I understand that the only method by which a Member can discuss amendments is by defeating the previous question?

The SPEAKER. That is precisely the situation. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] can do whatever he wants with the hour. He can move the previous question at the end of the hour, or at any time, if he does not lose the floor.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] in his own time submits an amendment, which is read in his time from his desk, he does not lose the floor by that action?

The SPEAKER. He has not lost the floor now; no.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So that he can offer in his own time any amendment that he thinks proper?

The SPEAKER. He can have anything read in his own time that he wishes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gentleman from Ohio has the right to offer an amendment or amendments when he pleases, but the moment he offers an amendment he must either then move the previous question or lose the floor. He can not offer amendments and afterwards debate them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is entirely correct.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is not my inquiry, Mr. Speaker. My inquiry was, when he offers his amendments it will be competent for him to order the previous question then and there on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. That is right. He must occupy the time or surrender the floor. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. LENROOT. To ask the gentleman from Ohio if he will yield for a question. I desire to ask whether it is the gentleman's intention to move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Without giving the House opportunity to discuss the amendments or offer other amendments?

Mr. CROSSER. It is 5.30 o'clock p. m., at which time I was to offer amendments. If I thought it was going to serve any purpose to go on indefinitely with this——

Mr. LENROOT. The only opportunity the gentleman proposes to give the House to consider amendments is to vote down the previous question?

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield for the purpose of allowing me to offer an amendment in his time?

Mr. CROSSER. Send the amendment to me. I think I have the same amendment the gentleman has.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BORLAND. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman from Ohio desires to keep the floor, he must proceed instead of holding caucuses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair just stated a minute ago that there is no sort of controversy on that proposition.

Mr. DOWELL. Then I insist that he has surrendered the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to follow the gentleman's advice. Here are two amendments that I offer.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CROSSER. Those are amendments that I intended to offer a while ago, and I have not had any opportunity.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question before he does that?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER: Page 2, line 14, after the word "invention," insert the following: "and that he is the original discoverer or inventor of same," and insert, after the word "practicable," the following: "and that he is the original discoverer or inventor of same."

Mr. CROSSER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman withhold that motion for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves the previous question on the bill and amendments. Those in favor of the previous question will say "aye"; those opposed will say "no."

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETT. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands a division.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking this vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixty-eight gentlemen have arisen, a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll. This vote is on agreeing to the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 163, nays 105, not voting 166, as follows:

YEAS—163.

Adamson	Dill	Jacoway	Raker
Almon	Dixon	James	Ramsey
Ashbrook	Dominick	Jones, Tex.	Randall
Aswell	Doolittle	Juul	Rose
Ayres	Doughton	Keating	Rouse
Baer	Drane	Kehoe	Rubey
Bankhead	Eagan	Kettner	Russell
Barkley	Emerson	Key, Ohio	Sabath
Barnhart	Ferris	Kincheloe	Saunders, Va.
Beakes	Fields	Larsen	Sears
Bell	Fisher	Lea, Cal.	Shackleford
Black	Focht	Little	Shallenberger
Blackmon	Foss	Littlepage	Sherwood
Booher	Foster	London	Shouse
Buchanan	Freeman	Lonergan	Siegel
Burnett	French	Lundeen	Sims
Burroughs	Fuller, Ill.	Lunn	Sinnott
Byrns, Tenn.	Gallagher	McAndrews	Slayden
Caldwell	Gandy	McKeown	Small
Campbell, Kans.	Garrett, Tenn.	McLemore	Smith, Idaho
Campbell, Pa.	Garrett, Tex.	Mansfield	Smith, Mich.
Candler, Miss.	Glass	Mapes	Snook
Cannon	Godwin, N. C.	Martin	Steagall
Caraway	Gordon	Mays	Steenerson
Carlin	Gray, Ala.	Moon	Stephens, Miss.
Carter, Mass.	Greene, Mass.	Moores, Ind.	Sterling, Pa.
Church	Hadley	Morin	Switzer
Clark, Pa.	Hamilton, Mich.	Nicholls, S. C.	Taylor, Ark.
Claypool	Harrison, Miss.	Oldfield	Thomas
Collier	Hastings	Oliver, Ala.	Tillman
Connally, Tex.	Hayden	Oliver, N. Y.	Venable
Connelly, Kans.	Heflin	Overstreet	Vinson
Cox	Helm	Padgett	Walker
Crisp	Hensley	Paige	Walton
Crosser	Hersey	Park	Watson, Pa.
Currie, Mich.	Holland	Phelan	Weaver
Dale, Vt.	Hollingsworth	Polk	Williams
Dallinger	Hood	Pou	Wingo
Darrow	Houston	Purnell	Wood, Ind.
Dempsey	Igoe	Quin	Young, N. Dak.
Denton	Ireland	Rainey

NAYS—105.

Alexander	Green, Iowa	Magee	Snyder
Anderson	Greene, Vt.	Moore, Pa.	Stafford
Bland	Haugen	Morgan	Sterling, Ill.
Borland	Hawley	Mott	Stiness
Byrnes, S. C.	Heaton	Nichols, Mich.	Strong
Carter, Okla.	Hicks	Norton	Sumners
Classon	Huddleston	Parker, N. Y.	Sweet
Cooper, Ohio	Hulbert	Peters	Temple
Cooper, W. Va.	Hull, Iowa	Platt	Tilson
Crago	Kelly, Pa.	Ramseyer	Timberlake
Cramton	Kennedy, Iowa	Rankin	Treadway
Decker	Kennedy, R. I.	Rayburn	Vestal
Dillon	Kiess, Pa.	Reavis	Volgt
Dowell	Knutson	Robbins	Waldow
Dupré	Kraus	Roberts	Walsh
Dyer	La Follette	Romjue	Ward
Elliott	Langley	Rucker	Wason
Elston	Lehlbach	Sanders, Ind.	Watkins
Esch	Lenroot	Sanders, N. Y.	Welling
Fairchild, B. L.	Longworth	Sanford	Welty
Fairfield	Lufkin	Schall	Wheeler
Francis	McArthur	Scott, Iowa	Wilson, Ill.
Garland	McClintic	Scott, Mich.	Woods, Iowa
Gillett	McFadden	Sells	Zihlman
Glynn	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sherley
Good	McLaughlin, Pa.	Sloan
Goodall	Madden	Snell

NOT VOTING—165.

Anthony	Beshlin	Britten	Bruckner
Austin	Blanton	Brodbeck	Brumbaugh
Bacharach	Bowers	Browne	Butler
Bathrick	Brand	Browning	Cantrill
Capstick	Gard	Lee, Ga.	Rowland
Carew	Garner	Lesher	Sanders, La.
Cary	Goodwin, Ark.	Lever	Scott, Pa.
Chandler, N. Y.	Gould	Linthicum	Scully
Chandler, Okla.	Graham, Ill.	Lobeck	Sisson
Clark, Fla.	Graham, Pa.	McCormick	Slemp
Coady	Gray, N. J.	McCulloch	Smith, C. B.
Cooper, Wis.	Gregg	McKenzie	Smith, T. F.
Copley	Griest	McKinley	Stedman
Costello	Griffin	Maher	Steele
Curry, Cal.	Hamill	Mann	Stephens, Nebr.
Dale, N. Y.	Hamilton, N. Y.	Mason	Stevenson
Davidson	Hamlin	Meeker	Sullivan
Davis	Hardy	Merritt	Swift
Denison	Harrison, Va.	Miller, Minn.	Tague
Dent	Haskell	Miller, Wash.	Talbott
Dewalt	Hayes	Mondell	Taylor, Colo.
Dickinson	Heintz	Montague	Templeton
Dies	Helvering	Mudd	Thompson
Dooling	Hilliard	Neely	Tinkham
Doremus	Howard	Nelson	Towner
Drukker	Hull, Tenn.	Nolan	Van Dyke
Dunn	Humphreys	Olney	Vare
Eagle	Husted	Osborne	Volstead
Edmonds	Hutchinson	O'Shaunessy	Watson, Va.
Ellsworth	Johnson, Ky.	Overmyer	Webb
Estopinal	Johnson, S. Dak.	Parker, N. J.	Whaley
Evans	Johnson, Wash.	Porter	White, Me.
Fairchild, G. W.	Jones, Va.	Powers	White, Ohio
Farr	Kahn	Pratt	Wilson, La.
Fess	Kearns	Price	Wilson, Tex.
Fitzgerald	Kelley, Mich.	Ragsdale	Winslow
Flood	King	Reed	Wise
Flynn	Kinkaid	Riordan	Woodyard
Fordney	Kitchin	Robinson	Young, Tex.
Frear	Kreider	Rodenberg
Fuller, Mass.	LaGuardia	Rogers
Gallivan	Lazaro	Rowe

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BATHRICK with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. BESHLIN with Mr. AUSTIN.

Mr. BLANTON with Mr. BACHARACH.

Mr. BRAND with Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. BRODBECK with Mr. BROWNE.

Mr. BRUCKNER with Mr. CAPSTICK.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. CHANDLER of New York.

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. BOWERS.

Mr. CAREW with Mr. CARY.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. COADY with Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma.

Mr. DALE of New York with Mr. VOLSTEAD.

Mr. DENT with Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.

Mr. DEWALT with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. DICKINSON with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. DIES with Mr. CURRY of California.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. EAGLE with Mr. DENISON.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. EDMONDS.

Mr. FLOOD with Mr. ELLSWORTH.

Mr. FLYNN with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. FARR.

Mr. GARD with Mr. FESS.

Mr. GARNER with Mr. FORDNEY.

Mr. GREGG with Mr. FREAR.

Mr. GRIFFIN with Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. GOULD.

Mr. HAMLIN with Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. HARDY with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. HELVERING with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. HILLIARD with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. WHITE of Maine.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. IGOE with Mr. HAWLEY.

Mr. JONES of Virginia with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. MANN.

Mr. LAZARO with Mr. WINSLOW.

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. HUSTED.

Mr. LESHER with Mr. HUTCHINSON.

Mr. LEVER with Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.

Mr. LOBECK with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. KEARNS.

Mr. MONTAGUE with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.

Mr. NEELY with Mr. KING.

Mr. OLNEY with Mr. KINKAID.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. KREIDER.

Mr. OVERMYER with Mr. WOODYARD.

Mr. PRICE with Mr. MCCORMICK.

Mr. RAGSDALE with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana with Mr. MASON.
Mr. SCULLY with Mr. MEEKER.
Mr. SISSON with Mr. MERRITT.
Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH with Mr. MILLER of Minnesota.
Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. MILLER of Washington.
Mr. STEDMAN with Mr. MONDELL.
Mr. STEELE with Mr. MUDD.
Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. NOLAN.
Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. OSBORNE.
Mr. SULLIVAN with Mr. PARKER of New Jersey.
Mr. TAGUE with Mr. PORTER.
Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. BROWNING.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. PRATT.
Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. REED.
Mr. VAN DYKE with Mr. RODENBERG.
Mr. WATSON of Virginia with Mr. ROGERS.
Mr. WEBB with Mr. ROWE.
Mr. WHALEY with Mr. ROWLAND.
Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania.
Mr. WILSON of Louisiana with Mr. SLEMP.
Mr. WILSON of Texas with Mr. SWIFT.
Mr. WISE with Mr. TEMPLETON.
Mr. YOUNG of Texas with Mr. TINKHAM.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 5, at the beginning of the line, insert the word "distinctive."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "system or correlative" and insert the word "distinctive."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Were those amendments offered, or were they simply read?

Mr. CROSSER. They were offered.

The SPEAKER. They were offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER: Page 2, line 14, after the word "invention," insert the following: "and that he is the original discoverer or inventor thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER: Page 2, line 20, after the word "practicable," insert the following: "and that he is the original discoverer or inventor thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not possible to offer amendments after the previous question is ordered?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The only way to get at that is to beat the previous question. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. LENROOT: I move to recommit House joint resolution 174 to the Committee on Patents with instructions to forthwith report the same back to the House with the following amendments:

On page 3, line 3, after the word "That," insert "if the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian shall receive the special protection provided for in section 3 of this act, then."

On pages 3 and 4, strike out section 5 and insert:

"SEC. 5. That any essential improvement or contrivance patented by any person or persons other than Garabed T. K. Giragossian relating to the 'Garabed' or its principle which shall prove valuable and essential thereto in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, evidenced by such finding by him filed in the Patent Office, may during the period of the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian's special protection, if the same shall become effective, be used by the United States and the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian or his assigns upon the payment of a fair, just, and reasonable royalty therefor, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and every patent issued for any such improvement or contrivance shall be upon such express condition.

"In consideration of this right the United States shall have, without expense, the right to use for its own purposes any new improvement or device made or invented by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian."

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LENROOT) there were—ayes 69, noes 101.

Accordingly the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. CROSSER a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER. There are three vacancies on the Board of Regents for the Smithsonian Institution, and the Chair announces the following appointments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FERRIS, to succeed himself;
Mr. GREENE of Vermont, to succeed Mr. Roberts of Massachusetts; and
Mr. PADGETT, to succeed Mr. Lloyd of Missouri.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday next, December 17, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of urgent deficiency appropriation, "Quarantine service, remodeling buildings, Cape Charles Quarantine Station" (H. Doc. No. 574); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting amended estimate of appropriation (p. 5, Book of Estimates for 1918) for "Salaries, office of the Coast Guard" (H. Doc. No. 575); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. Letter from the Inspector General and chief surgeon, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and Sailors, transmitting report of inspection of State soldiers' and sailors' homes for the year ended June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 576); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

4. Letter from the president of the board of managers National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, transmitting annual report for the year ended June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 577); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

5. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 578); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate required for the service of the War and Navy Departments (H. Doc. No. 579); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from Hon. Newton D. Baker, chairman of the Council of National Defense, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 580); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a detailed statement showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation (H. Doc. No. 623); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a detailed statement showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation (H. Doc. No. 582); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the commanding officer of Watertown Arsenal of "tests of iron and steel and other materials for industrial purposes" made at that arsenal during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 619); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

11. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement from the sundry offices and bureaus of the Treasury Department showing in detail what officers and employees traveled on official business to points outside of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 624); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

12. Letter from the secretary of National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, transmitting record of changes in membership of the home during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 577); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LONDON, from the Committee on Labor, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 189) to provide for a commission to inquire into the advisability of establishing national insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and sickness, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 218), which said resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7697) to authorize the calling into the service of the United States the militia and other locally created armed forces in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 225), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CARLIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 219), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 188) extending until January 1, 1919, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 227), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7731) amending section 32 of the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 228), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SEARS, from the Committee on Education, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," approved February 23, 1917, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 229), which said resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1418) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Harry Graham captain of Infantry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 226), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2206) authorizing the payment of salary due to J. A. McCreary, of Forestville, Cal.; Committee of Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 4889) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet Alexander; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6990) granting an increase of pension to Edgar C. Martin; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7560) granting an increase of pension to William W. Kimball; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7416) granting a pension to Fred D. Marshall; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GLASS: A bill (H. R. 7731) amending section 32 of the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GARD: A bill (H. R. 7732) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, so as to exclude from the excess-profits tax income derived from personal services; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CROSSER: A bill (H. R. 7733) to provide better sanitary conditions in printing offices within the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WHITE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 7734) to provide for an increase in the compensation of rural free delivery carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 7735) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War,' approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKEOWN: A bill (H. R. 7736) extending the franking privilege of the Government to the members of the Council of National Defense, and to the chairman of the several councils of national defense in the United States; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 7737) to increase the rates of pensions of certain widows and Army nurses; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7738) to increase the rate of pension allowed to Army nurses; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DICKINSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 191) amending section 201 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 192) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. GLASS: Resolution (H. Res. 197) for the consideration of House bill 7731; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 7739) granting an increase of pension to Irene Reid Ervin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7740) granting a pension to Lucy M. Roby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7741) granting a pension to Dartha Swihart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 7742) granting an increase of pension to Edward Durbin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7743) granting an increase of pension to Green P. Gray; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7744) granting an increase of pension to Thomas C. Layton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7745) granting an increase of pension to Calvin A. Hutchinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7746) granting an increase of pension to Marion F. Willis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7747) granting a pension to Samuel Ash; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7748) granting a pension to Mary J. Titus; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7749) granting a pension to Margaret A. Cooper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7750) granting a pension to Herschel Spainhour; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 7751) to grant a gold medal to James F. Walker for conspicuous bravery; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLAYPOOL: A bill (H. R. 7752) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Donnells; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 7753) granting an increase of pension to Ross Montgomery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DEWALT: A bill (H. R. 7754) granting a pension to Catherine F. Reinert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 7755) granting an increase of pension to Horace W. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7756) granting an increase of pension to Belle W. Dexter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7757) granting an increase of pension to D. W. Farington; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7758) granting an increase of pension to James H. Kabrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7759) granting an increase of pension to George Kint; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7760) granting an increase of pension to John Keefe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7761) granting an increase of pension to Silas W. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7762) granting an increase of pension to Albert Vantassel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7763) granting an increase of pension to George W. White; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7764) granting a pension to Joseph Karr; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7765) granting a pension to Christian A. Baldwin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7766) for the relief of Albert T. Huso; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7767) for the relief of John C. Kathan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7768) for the relief of Edward Looby; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7769) for the relief of Robert McFarland; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 7770) granting a pension to Wedding Colgate; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7771) granting a pension to Hiner A. Rawlings; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 7772) granting an increase of pension to John Day; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7773) granting an increase of pension to Jacob C. Stupp; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 7774) granting an increase of pension to Fannie M. O'Linn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLEPAGE: A bill (H. R. 7775) granting an increase of pension to Noah Porter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7776) granting an increase of pension to James L. Stover; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7777) granting an increase of pension to Charles McCarthy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKENZIE: A bill (H. R. 7778) to amend the military record of George W. Laland; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 7779) granting an increase of pension to William E. Kirkpatrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7780) to correct the military record of Thomas Fogle; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOORES of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 7781) correcting the military record of Daniel H. Prunk; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEELY: A bill (H. R. 7782) granting an increase of pension to Emanuel B. Silcott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7783) granting a pension to George W. Sampson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 7784) granting an increase of pension to Enoch E. Boyd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 7785) granting a pension to Ophelia F. Covert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7786) granting a pension to Hamilton B. Pate; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7787) granting a pension to Anna E. Pagett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7788) granting a pension to Franklin B. Washburn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7789) granting a pension to William H. Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7790) granting a pension to John J. McGinley; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7791) granting a pension to Laura A. Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7792) granting an increase of pension to Sylvester C. Loveless; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 7793) for the relief of Dr. George W. Flynn; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of congregation of the First Christian Church, Webb City, Mo., urging the passage of Senate resolution No. 17; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of sundry citizens of California, Colorado, Indiana, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New York, Pennsylvania, and Texas, favoring the passage of the Moore Purple Cross bill, H. R. 5410; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), petition of F. Terry and 166 other students of Teachers' College, Columbia University, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BLAND: Evidence in support of bill for increase in pension of Green P. Gray; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of bill for increase in pension of Samuel Ash; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of bill for increase in pension of Thomas C. Layton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of bill to increase pension of Calvin A. Hutchison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of bill to increase pension of Mary J. Titus; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of bill to increase pension to Marion F. Willis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of bill to increase pension of Margaret A. Cooper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of bill for pension for Herschel Spainhour; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of bill for increase in pension of Edward Durbin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: Telegrams from Edward A. Uphrig, president Milwaukee Western Fuel Co.; Fehrer & Meyer Co.; Benjamin Wells & Sons Co.; Blumenfeld Locher Co.; William Marnitz Co.; Vilter Manufacturing Co., H. P. Andrae, treasurer Julius Andrae & Sons Co.; the Boston Store; O'Neil Oil & Paint Co.; Joseph J. Kozourek; Richard Philip; W. H. Upmeyer, president Bunde & Upmeyer Co., all of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against passage of national prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegram from William F. Luick, treasurer Luick Ice Cream Co.; Fred F. Luedke; L. W. Bunde, of Bunde & Upmeyer Manufacturing Co.; E. P. Hunkel; Dr. F. J. Gaenslen; O. R. Pieper; Edwin Wollaeger, of the Wollaeger Manufacturing Co.; Arthur Wenz; and Peter Brust, all of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegrams from the Kurth Manufacturing Co.; Hoffman & Bauer; Leedom Miller & Noys Co.; Hoffman & Billings Manufacturing Co.; H. S. Hadfield; Frank Luensman Co.; John L. Klinger, president Milwaukee Association of Commerce; and Biersach & Niedermeyer, all of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition from Frank B. Metcalfe, secretary-treasurer Trades Union Liberty League of Wisconsin; Otto E. Schulz; and F. T. Andrae, secretary Julius Andrae & Sons Co., all residing in Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Joseph Dehan, secretary Labor's Emergency Liberty League, representing 60,000 men, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of the executive committee of the Manufacturers and Dealers' League, of the city and

State of New York, and of the general counsel of the Malsters' Bureau of Statistics, Chicago, Ill., protesting against the submission of the prohibition amendment; also, resolution of the Brewery Workers' Internat'on Union, representing 60,000 workmen, protesting against the prohibitory amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the National Council of American Cotton Manufacturers, urging Congress to make liberal appropriations for the support and development of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and the creation and maintenance of a bureau for the extension of American foreign trade; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DYER: Memorial of Republican city central committee, St. Louis, Mo., favoring the Anthony suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: Memorial of Woman's Auxiliary to Local 130, National Federation of Post Office Employees, favoring increased salaries for clerks and carriers in first and second class post offices; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ESCH: Resolutions by the county board of supervisors of Monroe County, Wis., favoring the suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. FREEMAN: Petition of First Baptist Church, Stonington, Conn., urging the submission of the prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of citizens of Streator, Ill, opposing the prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of Anti-Saloon League of America, urging the adoption of the prohibitory amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary

By Mr. HILLIARD: Memorials of Local Union No. 18, Journeyman Cooks and Pastry Cooks; Sheet Metal Workers' International Alliance; Local No. 68, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Local No. 1874, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America; Local Union No. 930, Glass Workers and Glaziers; Buildings Laborers of Denver; Local Union No. 634, Meat Cutters' Union; Local Union No. 3, Plumbers' Apprentices; Division No. 451, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; Local Union No. 111, Electrical Workers; International Workers' Defense League; Local Union No. 25, International United Brotherhood of Leather Workers on Horse Goods; Journeyman Barbers' International Union of America; Lodge No. 35, Switchmen's Union of America; Local Union No. 79, Painters' Union; Local No. 577, O. P. & C. F. I. A.; Mile High Lodge No. 680, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Local Plumbers' Union No. 3; Bricklayers', Stonemasons', and Marblemasons' Union; Local Waiters' Union No. 14; Denver Lodge No. 47, International Association of Machinists; Snowy Range Lodge No. 30, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Local Union No. 7, Retail Clerks' International Protective Association; Local Union No. 40, International Broom Makers' Union; Denver Council No. 539, Knights of Columbus; Denver Buildings-Trades Council; Golding Fairfield, Esq.; W. C. Castwright; and Central Labor Union of Boulder and vicinity, all in the State of Colorado, urging the passage of House bill 1654, granting an increase of pay to post-office clerks and letter carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petitions of Mrs. J. A. Easton and three others; C. J. Morley and seven others; Interdenominational Committee, representing 60,000 women; Women's Foreign Missionary Society of Methodist Episcopal Church of Colorado, comprising 21,000 women; Interchurch Council of Denver, representing 34,000 protestant church members, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Mrs. M. W. Morrison, of Colorado Springs, Colo., urging the adoption of a constitutional amendment providing for woman suffrage; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. KAHN: Petition of citizens of San Francisco, Cal., in favor of the Madden bill, granting an increase of pay to the letter carriers; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Petition of Sayles B. Steere, of Chepachet, R. I., favoring national prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Bottlers and Drivers' Union No. 245, of Providence, R. I., against national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Mrs. B. Wallace Comstock, of Providence, and Mrs. Helen Hazard Bacon, of Peace Dale, in the State of Rhode Island, in opposition to passage of woman-suffrage legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Laurel Grange No. 40, of Gloucester; Daniel Partridge, of Pawtucket; Henry A. Sayles, of Chepachet; C. R. Martin, of Pawtucket; Neighborhood Auxiliaries to the Woman's Home Missionary Society; Providence Woman's Christian Temperence Union; and Providence County Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Sunday school of Embury Methodist Episcopal Church, of Central Falls; adult department of the Fourth Baptist Sunday School, of Providence; First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Pawtucket; and Rhode Island Glass Division, of Central Falls, all in the State of Rhode Island; also 518 citizens of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Letter of George C. Balton, of Baltimore, Md., urging that new clerks be not discriminated against in providing increases of salary; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Arthur E. Slagle and 62 other citizens of Baltimore, Md., and a memorial from the Maryland legislative committee, Antisaloon League of America, favoring submission of the prohibition amendment; also letters and telegrams from the Baltimore Enamel & Novelty Co. and nine other firms and organizations of Baltimore, Md., protesting against the submission of the prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of Baltimore Branch No. 4, United National Association Post Office Clerks, and Local No. 181, National Federation Postal Employees, indorsing House bill 1654; also a letter of the same import from L. C. Perkins, of Baltimore, Md.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. MEEKER: Resolution adopted by the American Federation of Labor in favor of an increase in salary of the postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of surviving officers of the Civil War praying for the passage of the officers' retired bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Locals No. 3, No. 37, No. 91, and No. 148, of the Coopers International Union, of St. Louis, Mo., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and approved by the Manufacturers' Association of St. Louis, Mo., in favor of the establishment of a foreign exchange department in the Federal reserve banking system; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of St. Louis, Mo., asking for time extension for the completion of the municipal bridge across the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PAIGE: Petitions of George R. Wallace and 300 others, of Fitchburg, Mass., against woman suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Also, petitions of 395 persons in various cities of Massachusetts in favor of woman suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. SANDERS of New York: Petition of the Waterport Woman's Christian Temperance Union, urging the passage by Congress of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for their ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Barre Center Presbyterian Church, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Missionary Society, the Red Cross, the Ladies' Aid, the Christian Endeavor, Loyalty Class, and Men's Bible Class, all of Barre Center, N. Y., urging the passage by Congress of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Epworth League, and Women's Home Missionary Society, all of West Barre, N. Y., urging the passage by Congress of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the women of the First Presbyterian Church of Albion, N. Y., urging the passage of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of 45 male voters and of 63 women voters of the West Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Rochester, N. Y., urging the passage of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of 73 male voters and 115 women voters of the Calvary Baptist Church, of Rochester, N. Y., urging the passage of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the First Baptist Church, the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Lake Avenue Baptist Church, all of Hilton, N. Y., in joint assembly, urging the passage of the joint resolution for the submission of a prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 65 women voters of Rochester, N. Y., urging the passage by Congress of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the women of the Press Club of the Young Men's Christian Association Auxiliary, of Rochester, N. Y., urging the passage by Congress of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Willing Workers' Circle, the World Wide Circle, and the Emily Barrett Circle, of Rochester, N. Y., urging the passage of the joint resolution for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution to the several States for ratification; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of postal clerks and carriers at St. Cloud, Minn., urging early and favorable action on House bill 1654; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. STINESS: Letters and telegrams from East Greenwich Baptist Church, Rev. Theodore C. Gleason, pastor, East Greenwich; Rev. W. H. Lane, Shawomet; Christian Endeavor Society, Alice M. Farrow, secretary, North Scituate; Bradford Y. P. B., Ruby E. Collings, secretary, Bradford; Providence Young Men's Christian Association, John G. Olmstead, acting general secretary, Providence; Niantic Baptist Sunday School, Ray B. Kenyon, secretary, Bradford; Phenix Baptist Sunday School, Frank Gardner, pastor, Phenix; Lutheran Bethany Church (950), Joel Ol, pastor, Auburn; First Baptist Church, F. Stewart Kinley, minister, Westerly; Advent Christian Sunday School, W. F. Bliven, superintendent, La Fayette; First Methodist Episcopal Church, Francis H. Spear, pastor, Warren; First Seventh Day Baptist Church of Hopkinton, George B. Shaw, pastor, Ashaway; Lutheran Conference of the Providence District (Pontiac, R. I., Nov. 12, 1917), Providence; Sunday School of the East Baptist Church of Hope Valley, E. T. Spencer, superintendent, Hopkinton; and church and congregation and Sunday school, Oak Lawn Baptist Church, Oak Lawn, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letters and telegrams from St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, Frederick E. Hawkins, superintendent, and Providence Epworth League Union, Myrtie A. Brown, secretary, Providence; St. Luke's Episcopal Church Sunday School, Ida Collette, secretary, East Greenwich; St. Stephens Church, George McClellan Fiske, rector, Providence; Sunday schools in North Scituate held in the Free Baptist Church, Philip Shippee, C. A. Durfee, and Ernest M. Spencer, superintendents, North Scituate; Sunday School of the First Baptist Church, Joseph E. Matteson, secretary, Allenton; Woman's Christian Temperance Union, through Mrs. H. E. King, North Scituate; Mary J. Locke, Narragansett Pier; Eunice B. Clark, Wakefield; Emma B. Potter, corresponding secretary, North Scituate; Mrs. R. J. Griffin, Mrs. G. A. Griffin, and Fannie E. White, Wakefield; Apponaug Woman's Christian Temperance Union, through Mrs. W. C. Pierce, secretary, and 300 representative citizens, Nathan M. Littlefield, chairman, Providence; Quonocontaug Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, No. 48, Anne L. Waite, secretary, Westerly; and Oak Lawn Grange, Edgar A. Wood, grand master, Oak Lawn, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegrams from John A. Tandwin, Bertha A. Bissell, Horace G. Bissell, Everett Messinger, Mrs. Thomas Uray, E. P. Bogert, Florence A. Moulton, Emily B. Aldrich, H. Cutler, Harry A. Slocumb, W. D. Olson, Elizabeth Joynt, Rev. E. F. Jones, Frank C. Dudley, Mrs. W. C. P. Faunce, William A. Farren, Francis Gallagher, Mary A Gifford, Henry A. Fifield, Alfred M. Thompson, Jesse V. Dudlong, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Whitmarsh, Ellen G. Hunt, W. H. Faunce, Mrs. William L. Coop, Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs (39 clubs, representing 3,000 women), Maude Evelyn Bradley, and Rhode Island State Grange, Clara L. Chase, secretary (representing 3,500 patrons of Rhode Island), Providence; Mrs. David Harley and William Rogers, Pawtucket; William D. Chickle, East Providence; and Charles Knowles, Lillian Knowles, Julia Knowles, Asa Humphrey, and Marshall Young, Wakefield, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegrams and letters from Sarah Champlin, John Champlin, C. Hill, Emma Humphrey, Mrs. E. E. Hill, and Mrs. William G. Sweet, Wakefield; Men's Club of Cranston Community, H. B. Coombs, and T. W. Waterman, Providence; Herbert M. Clarke, Arctic; and New England Coal Co., Harry E. Davis, Woonsocket, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letters from Mrs. Eva H. Smith, Washington; F. L. Fowler, Oak Lawn; J. F. Archibald, Providence; Chester Donelly, Oliver W. Sherman, Clifford A Woodmansee, and Edward E. Kenyon, West Kingston; Charles L. Johnston, Auburn; Alston W. Knowles, N. K. Hazard, Charles J. Tucker, Charles W. Hall, Joseph A. Boss, Stephen B. Gardiner, Charles H. Knowles, Louisa H. Knowles, William Young, and Moses Young, Narragansett Pier; Chesman O. Childs and John A. Allen, Peace Dale; Marshall Young, Harry S. Champlin, Asa H. Humphrey, Leon M. Champlin, and John R. Champlin, Point Judith; Leon L. Holland, and W. A. Pollock, Saunderstown; and Hartford P. Brown, Robert P. Graves, Everett E. Jones, Mrs. E. G. Babcock, Charles C. Armstrong, Ransford Collins, Oliver H. Jones, J. Haskell Edson, John B. Peck, W. F. Congdon, L. W. Tucker, Charles E. Mitchell, James H. Buton, John E. Ross, and Oscar T. Dykstra, Wakefield, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letters from Johnson Hoyle, Daniel C. Watson, Joseph B. Tucker, Stephen B. Gardnier, jr., Benjamin W. Palmer, Mrs. B. W. Palmer, James G. Champlin, L. D. Miner, W. Luther Bates, Henry W. Partelow, and Howard R. Tucker, Wakefield; William P. Brownell, Miss Annie B. Arnold, E. M. Docherty, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mary E. Olney, corresponding secretary, of the State of Rhode Island, and members of the parish of the Church of the Mediator, Providence; Potter Hill Sunday School, Potter Hill; and Rowland W. Gilbert, Louis R. Houston, Charles G. Houston, Story E. Johnson, B. P. Pollock, and Walter J. Westlake, Peace Dale, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, telegrams, letters, and petitions from Tabernacle Methodist Episcopal Sunday School, G. W. Amison, superintendent, and Liberty B. Greene, Providence; A. J. Webster, Auburn; Henry B. Trinkhover and Ada Blinkhom, Providence; Mrs. E. O. Benson, Auburn; Charles E. Westcott, Christie C. Crowe, and Olly R. A. Jillson, Providence; Thomas J. Clarke, Charlestown; Harlon A. Page and Albert E. Titchener; Mrs. Jennie F. Smith, representing 45 members of Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Wakefield; William Entwistle; Ethel Johnston, Arlington; Carrie O. Brown, John D. Miner, and Alice O. Miner, East Greenwich; Robert McGhee, Providence; John Siswick, manager Mystic Woolen Mill, Hope Valley; Broad Street Christian Church (385), Samuel Glivven, clerk, Archie Meikle and 22 citizens, and John C. Stanton and 35 citizens, Westerly; 58 members of People's Church (Baptist), Rev. William O. Keirstead, Providence; and Frank Hill and 13 other citizens of the town of Westerly, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letters and petitions from A. J. Schultheiss and Joint Local Executive Board of the International Union of the United Brewery Workmen, William H. Lovett, secretary, Providence; Jacob Mack, Rudolph Mitschke, and Joseph Wacker, Cranston; Paul Wermuth and John Grasslin, Providence; Christian Ackermann, Arlington; Albin Hertzsch, Providence; Gotthard Wemmer, Arlington; Mathias Kormann, Providence; Michael Bosko and Melchior Buck, Cranston; Nicola M. Loudoti and Paul Kaleen, Providence; Louis Gentile and William L. Reichert, Cranston; Frederick W. Weise, Salvatore Pullano, Lewis L. Cushman, Ernest R. Williams, John J. Brennen, and Alex J. Langlois, Arlington; Benjamin R. Jepson, Thomas F. McMahon, T. J. Tiernan, Fred H. Bartels, John W. Nolan, Roderick McGary, Bernard McCabe, William J. Guest, I. Precourt, and M. Hercov, Providence, all in the State of Rhode Island, opposing prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TREADWAY: Resolutions of Shields Court No. 63, Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters, Holyoke, Mass., and by Holyoke Council No. 90, Knights of Columbus, of Holyoke, Mass., in support of legislation to draft alien ally population into the military service of this country or have them deported; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VARE: Memorial of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage Association requesting the passage of the suffrage amendment; to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 17, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee out of the rest and recreation of the holy Sabbath day. We thank Thee for this institution that is not only precious in our memory and sacred in our lives but also holds the forces of the Christian civilization within it. We thank Thee that Thou dost preserve for us this day of rest.

As we start on the labor of a new day do Thou give to us the inspiration that God only can give. May we have an open-eyed vision of the tremendous responsibilities resting upon us in this hour. May we not wait for the clash of swords or the sound of guns or the wail of the broken hearted over their dead boys to arouse to an interest, to a deep concern, and to a self-sacrificing effort to put forth the best of this Nation to establish peace and brotherhood and freedom among men. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. SMITH of Michigan and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, pursuant to the order of the court, certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

Mabel Cushman Hitt (daughter), Florence Cushman Mudge and Douglas Cushman (grandchildren), heirs of William H. W. Cushman, deceased, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 132);

Tunis Vosburgh v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 133);

George F. Sinclair v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 134);

Edmund Johnson v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 135);

John H. Ingram v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 136);

Thomas Cusack v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 137);

Horace D'B. Cutler v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 138);

William T. Cessna v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 139);

James W. Briscoe v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 140);

John Acker v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 141);

Wesley R. Adams v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 142);

Robert L. Wilson v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 143);

William W. Stinnett v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 144);

Joseph Sears v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 145);

George B. Randall v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 146);

Jonas C. Littlefield v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 147);

Jonathan F. Linton v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 148);

Theodore F. Lewis v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 149);

Henry T. Lee v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 150);

R. P. Higgins, administrator of John P. Higgins, deceased, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 151);

John Douch v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 152); and

James H. Day v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 153).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) extending the commission provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, with the same authorities, powers, and provisions until on or before March 1, 1918.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7237. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7634. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. J. Res. 174. Joint resolution for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy; and

H. J. Res. 193. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1917.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that when the two Houses adjourn on Tuesday, the 18th day of December, 1917, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1918, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 29.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Tuesday, the 18th day of December, 1917, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday, the 3d day of January, 1918.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House resolution which has just been read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 193) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1917, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1917, on the day of adjournment of the present session for the holiday recess; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on the same day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowance for clerk hire for the said month of December.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church, of St. Anthony Park, St. Paul, Minn., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GRONNA presented the petition of Mrs. L. A. Day, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Southam, N. Dak., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented petitions of sundry citizens of Seattle, Prosser, Kennewick, North Bend, South Bend, Chehalis, and Ellensburg, all in the State of Washington, praying for an increase in the salaries of postal clerks, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of Gate City Branch, No. 230, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Nashua, N. H., praying for an increase in the salaries of letter carriers, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of St. Joseph and Berrien Counties, of the Literary Club of Trenton, and of the Federation of Labor of Detroit, all in the State of Michigan, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ottawa County, Kans., praying that farmers be exempted from the draft law, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Pollock Post, No. 42, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Marion, Kans., praying that a pension of $50 a month be granted to veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Ladies' Auxiliary, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Kansas City, Kans., praying for an increase in the salaries of letter carriers and postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I present resolutions adopted by the National Security League of Passaic, N. J., pledging support to the President and the country in time of war. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Branch of the National Security League (Inc.) of the city of Passaic, N. J.]

Whereas the security of the United States and the success of our arms are endangered by the activities of disloyal persons and organizations within the borders of our country, we, citizens of the city of Passaic, in the State of New Jersey, in mass meeting assembled, and representing the National Security League, do hereby adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the action of our President and the Congress of the United States in the declaration of war against the Imperial German Government.

Resolved, That we pledge our manhood to the cause until a victorious peace and the elimination of German military autocracy both have been accomplished. We stand for the defense of liberty, civilization, and morality. We believe in our flag and all that it stands for. We condemn German frightfulness in all its branches, the sinking of merchant and passenger ships without warning, and the murder of civilians and noncombatants, including women, children, and aged persons. We condemn in general the barbaric warfare now being carried on by the Imperial German Government.

Resolved, That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to enact forthwith a law imposing punishment upon all persons or organizations responsible for pro-German activities or for the publication or public utterance of statements tending—

(1) To impede or interfere with the operations or success of the United States in war or in recruiting or enlistment.

(2) To hold the Government of the United States or any of our allies up to ridicule or obloquy.

(3) To cause disloyalty or refusal of duty on the part of any person in connection with the war.

Resolved, That we applaud the President of the United States for his patriotic endeavors in the conduct of the war and for his various able and statesmanlike proclamations. We pledge ourselves to stand behind the President and the Government of our country until our flag shall return unsullied, undefiled, and victorious.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the chairman and secretary of this meeting, be transmitted to the President of the United States and to the Senators and Members of Congress from the State of New Jersey.

BIRD W. SPENCER, Chairman.
C. H. BICKELL, Secretary.

OCTOBER 27, 1917.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented petitions of the National Security League of Passaic, of sundry citizens of Englewood, of the National Security of Westfield, of the Borough Council of Rutherford, and of sundry citizens of Ridgewood, all in the State of New Jersey, relative to the public utterances of Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Paterson, Short Hills, and Newark, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry letter carriers of Ridgewood, N. J., praying for an increase in their salaries, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Stockton Grange, No. 88, Patrons of Husbandry, of Stockton, N. J., and of the board of agriculture of Monmouth County, N. J., relative to the importation of nitrate of soda, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Asbury Park, N. J., favoring the enactment of legislation providing rank and uniforms for members of selective draft boards, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the board of agriculture of Monmouth County, N. J., relative to the supply of farm labor, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Trenton, N. J., favoring full taxation for all Federal officeholders, exempting the President, members of the Cabinet, and men in the service of the Army and Navy, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, favoring liberal appropriations for the support and development of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Horton, Kans., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Lew Gove Post, No. 100, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Manhattan; of Pea Ridge Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Chetopa; and of Canby Post, No. 11, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Osage City, all in the State of Kansas, praying for an increase in the pensions of veterans of the Civil War, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Ladies Auxiliary, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Kansas City, Kans., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Men's Brotherhood of the First Presbyterian Church, of Chanute, Kans., remonstrating against the use of cigarettes by soldiers, sailors, and marines, which was referred to the Committte on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wichita, McPherson, and Hutchinson, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Board of County Commissioners of Wyandotte County, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SHORTAGE OF COAL.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have a number of telegrams this morning bearing upon the coal situation. I do not desire to discuss the matter at all, but one telegram I hold in my hand I desire to emphasize particularly. It is from the president of the Pere Marquette Railroad Co., a railroad consisting of about 2,200 miles, operated in Michigan and Indiana, who says:

For your information, the fuel situation on the Pere Marquette Railway has become so serious that we will be obliged to discontinue more service to-morrow, and unless relief is forthcoming our operations will be largely closed down by Tuesday. The trouble is inability of the railroads serving mines in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to handle the coal under our contracts. Mines serving us were partially idle during past week, due to lack of service by railroads. There is no shortage of empty cars. It is all a question of transportation. What we need is to have the railroads serving the mines give the movement of fuel coal preference over everything, even passenger trains. I believe this is what the priority order contemplates. Any assistance you can render will be very much appreciated. I am wiring you in the interests of the people of Michigan, that you may bring pressure to bear whereby the roads of Michigan will secure their full share of fuel coal in order to provide the service. Roads in Ohio and south of us are also short of fuel, and unless positive orders are issued they will naturally look after the interests there before helping Michigan.

That telegram is signed by Frank H. Alfred, president of the Pere Marquette Railroad, and represents a situation which is so deplorable that I rise this morning, somewhat in violation of the rule, to emphasize again the desirability of the fuel situation receiving practical attention at our hands without further delay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to state that I have received a number of telegrams from citizens of my State calling attention to the fact that there is a shortage of fuel. I have not presented any of them here. I sent them to the fuel administrator. I simply want the RECORD to show that I have taken such steps as I deem best.

EAST ST. LOUIS LABOR TROUBLE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to present a list from the attorney general of Illinois and call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the East St. Louis riot cases prosecuted in that county there have been 51 convictions by a jury, and the penalties ranged all the way from fines and jail sentences to 15 years in the penitentiary. About half of them are convictions for felony. I ask that the list be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

LIST OF CONVICTIONS IN EAST ST. LOUIS RIOT CASES AND DISPOSAL OF CASES UP TO DECEMBER 10, 1917.

James W. Andrews: Case No. 7806, acquittal.
Marshall Alexander: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
Sam Bauchens: Cases No. 7802, 7818, 7824, 7825, nol-prossed; case No. 7829, plea, 30 days' jail.
Richard Brockway: Case No. 7806, 5 years and $1,000 fine.
Tony Borcey: Cases No. 7812, 7849, 7850, 7851, nol-prossed; case No. 7852, plea, 30 days' jail.
Joe Braunagel: Case No. 8043, guilty; sentence not yet pronounced.
Charles Calvin Beener: Case No. 7805, indeterminate sentence in penitentiary.
Daisy Clavin: Case No. 2041, nol-prossed; case No. 8042, $50 fine.
Joseph Dickerson: Case No. 7804, nol-prossed; case No. 7806, acquitted; case No. 7807, plea, $50 and costs.

John Doe: Cases No. 7811 and 7847, nol-prossed.
Leon Doherty: Case No. 8041, nol-prossed; case No. 8042, plea, 60 days' jail.
Mike Evanoff: Case No. 7818, $500 fine.
Tobe Fancher: Case No. 7806, nol-prossed.
Charles Foster: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
Leslie Fowler: Case No. 7794, acquittal.
John Gow: Case No. 8046, 15 years.
Charles Hanna: Case No. 8046, 15 years.
Ralph Hood, jr.: All cases nol-prossed.
Mat Hayes: Cases No. 7794, 7860, 7862, nol-prossed.
Albert Hughes: Case No 7794, 14 years.
John Johnson: Case No. 7806, 1 year.
Leo A. Keane: Case No. 7796, 14 years.
Robert H. Kelley: Cases No. 7798 and 7823, nol-prossed; case No. 7844, plea, 30 days' jail.
Emmet Krisnic: Case No. 7852, plea, $50 and costs; all other cases nol-prossed.
Moze Lockett: Case No. 7820, nol-prossed.
Charles Luden: Case No. 8063, plea, $50 and costs; other case nol-prossed.
John Luden: Case No. 8063, plea, $50 and costs; other case nol-prossed.
Jess Meeker: Case No. 7818, nol-prossed.
John Mateer: Case No. 7806, nol-prossed.
Christ Mouralec: Case No. 7841, nol-prossed; case No. 7945, plea, 30 days' jail. (In case No. 7945 indicted under name of Christ Movchelis, which is correct.)
Guy Moore: Case No. 7794, acquittal; all other cases nol-prossed.
Henry Morris: Case No. 8045, plea, 10 days' jail; other case nol-prossed.
John Morris: Case No. 8044, nol-prossed; case No. 8045, plea, 30 days' jail.
Pete Majouskas: Case No. 8045, plea, $50 and costs; case No. 8044, nol-prossed.
Chester Ortgier: Case No. 7818, nol-prossed.
Ed Otto: Case No. 7818, $500 fine.
Mary Osborne: Case No. 8063, plea, 30 days; all other cases nol-prossed.
William Palmer: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
George Palmer: Case No. 7848, plea, $50 and costs.
Otis Pigg: Case No. 7852, plea, 30 days; all other cases nol-prossed.
O'Faniel Peoples: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
Fayette Parker: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
Harry Robinson: Case No. 7806, plea, 5 years; case No. 8046, jury could not agree.
John Rogers: Case No. 7818, acquittal; all other cases nol-prossed.
Richard Roe: All cases nol-prossed.
Herman Rohwedder: All cases nol-prossed.
Henry Rohwedder, jr.: Case No. 7858, plea, $50 and costs; all other cases nol-prossed.
George Roberts: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
William Ragen: Case No. 8045, plea, $50 and costs; other case nol-prossed.
Dorothy Ruth: All cases nol-prossed.
Robert Roberts: Case No. 8042, plea, $50 fine; other case nol-prossed.
Will Shears: Case No. 7829, plea, 60 days; other case nol-prossed.
S. L. Schultz: Case No. 7806, plea, 5 years; case No. 7835, plea, 1 to 14 years; all other cases nol-prossed.
Joe Sanicki: Case No. 7830, plea, $50 and costs; all other cases nol-prossed.
Dee Smotherman: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
Connor Smith: Case No. 8045, $50 and costs; other case nol-prossed.
Red Smith: Case No. 8042, plea, $50 and costs; other case nol-prossed.
John Tish: Case No. 7806, 5 years.
Bud Townsend: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
Horace Thomas: Case No. 7794, 14 years.
Thomas Takcett: Case No. 7794, acquittal; all other cases nol-prossed.
Alice Taylor: Case No. 8044, nol-prossed; case No. 8045, plea, $50 and costs.
Herbert F. Wood: Case No. 7796, 14 years.
Dan Walsh: Case No. 7818, $500 fine.
Joe Welch: Cases No. 7811 and 7847, nol-prossed. (Should be Clarence Welsh.)
Clarence Welsh: Case No. 8059, nol-prossed; case No. 8063, plea, 10 days' jail.
Felix Wiercik: Case No. 7839, plea, $50 and costs; all other cases nol-prossed.
George Zeman: Case No. 7818, nol-prossed.

PURCHASE OF FARM-LOAN BONDS.

Mr. HOLLIS. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3235) amending section 32, Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, and I submit a report (No. 184) thereon.

This is a matter of emergency, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. HOLLIS. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not object. The matter was very carefully considered in the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] took a position against the bill, but I think he is satisfied that the bill might well be considered at this time. There is no disposition to smother anything or to prevent a full discussion, but it is a matter of the greatest importance, and I appeal to the Senator to withdraw his objection.

Mr. PENROSE. This is a matter of very great magnitude, and in my opinion involves a most questionable transaction. I do not feel like permitting it to be passed without proper discussion and opportunity for examining it. Those Members of the Senate who are not on the committee have had no opportunity to look into this question, and I think there will be a good deal of scandal involved in this proposition before the Senate gets through with the discussion.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I insist on my objection, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes to the calendar.

Mr. HOLLIS. The request was not that the matter be passed without the fullest consideration, but that the matter might get before the Senate so that it might be discussed, and if there is any scandal involved in it that it may come out at once.

Mr. PENROSE. I can not see the reason for this undue haste. These rural banks have been permitted to drift along until they have been in what is virtual bankruptcy, and no brake has been put on the slide down the precipice. It certainly seems to me reasonable that Senators who are not members of the committee should have an opportunity to look into it. I only know regarding this matter from desultory reports in the newspapers of what would seem to me to be a scandalous condition into which these banks have been permitted to drift. If the Senator has any idea that he can get unanimous consent to drive this legislation through without proper discussion and without an opportunity of calling the attention of the country to the condition which the administration of these banks has permitted them to be involved in he is gravely mistaken.

Mr. HOLLIS. I can not allow the statement to pass that there is any scandal or any bankruptcy or anything allowed to drift involved in the bill. There is no such condition. If the Senator objects to the immediate consideration, of course that settles it. He has a perfect right to do so; but I do not want his statements to go unchallenged, because they are without foundation.

Mr. PENROSE. I disagree with the Senator. Since this bill has been reported——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Either the bill goes over on objection or it is up for discussion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania agree to withhold his objection—he can make it later on—until a small opportunity is given to explain exactly what the situation is?

Mr. PENROSE. No; I intend to object in a matter of this magnitude. I have information that the banks have been wired not to make any more loans since this bill has been reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over on objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania insist on his objection?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is either going over or it is going to be considered.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over on objection.

EMPLOYMENT OF TELEPHONE OPERATORS.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Rules I report a joint resolution and ask for its consideration.

I wish to say that the manager of the telephone exchange says it is impossible to do the work, and Senators know how hard it is to get connections now with the different departments. She asks for four more telephone operators during the war. The committee has passed upon it, and I ask for present consideration of the resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 115) providing additional telephone operators for the Senate and House of Representatives was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,680 for the salaries of four telephone operators, two for the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate and two for the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at the rate of $840 per annum each, from January 1 to June 30, 1918, both dates inclusive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I ask that it may be read. It is very short.

The joint resolution was read and ordered to be placed on the calendar, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That Article V of the Constitution of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows, to wit:

"ARTICLE V.

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified within six years from the date of their proposal by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, or by the electors in three-fourths thereof, as the mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

ELLEN M. STONE RANSOM FUND.

Mr. POMERENE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 1848) for the relief of contributors of the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been passed by the Senate before at the same amount.

Mr. POMERENE. The bill providing the same amount has passed the Senate four or five different times.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to return, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to such contributors, or, in the event of the death of any such contributor, to the legal representative thereof, as may file their claims within one year from the passage of this act, the money subscribed by such contributor to pay the ransom for the release of Miss Ellen M. Stone, an American missionary to Turkey, who was abducted by brigands on Septempber 3, 1901, said total sum not to exceed $66,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 3236) granting six months' pay to Katharine Taylor Dodge, widow of Charles Dodge, captain, United States Army (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota:

A bill (S. 3237) granting an increase of pension to James Dornan (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3238) granting an increase of pension to Luther L. Rewalt (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3239) granting a pension to R. C. Warne (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3240) granting a pension to Barnett C. Toliver, alias Charles Swartz (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington (for Mr. KENYON):

A bill (S. 3241) to amend section 4, chapter 1635, Revised Statutes of the United States, page 994; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3242) to increase pensions of certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War;

A bill (S. 3243) granting a pension to Charles Dohr (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3244) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Baskett (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3245) for the relief of Quartermaster Sergeant Herman G. Seyler; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3248) granting an increase of pension to John Beahan (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3249) granting a pension to Franklin Polen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 3250) granting a pension to Margaret Dicks (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3251) granting a pension to Alphonso L. Armstrong (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 3252) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Cross; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 3253) for the relief of the heirs of Ann Gregory, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3254) granting a pension to Daniel P. Wright (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 3255) granting a pension to Frank Fessenden (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS (for Mr. WALSH).

A bill (S. 3256) for the opening and settlement of a part of the Crow Indian Reservation in the State of Montana; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 3257) granting a pension to Barney McKay; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 3258) for the relief of Ethel Proctor; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3259) for the relief of fourth-class postmasters; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A bill (S. 3260) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Wilbur F. Lawton;

A bill (S. 3261) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Alonzo W. Livingston;

A bill (S. 3262) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James F. Cole;

A bill (S. 3263) for the relief of Sarah De Witt;

A bill (S. 3264) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Harrison H. Frain;

A bill (S. 3265) to correct the military record of John Corwin;

A bill (S. 3266) correcting the military record of Abram H. Johnson;

A bill (S. 3267) to correct the military record of William Harman;

A bill (S. 3268) to correct the military record of John P. Webber, alias John J. Webber;

A bill (S. 3269) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John H. Armstrong;

A bill (S. 3270) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Andrew B. McIntire; and

A bill (S. 3271) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Moses Chauncey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3272) granting a pension to Arelia Gleason; and

A bill (S. 3273) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Colby; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3274) granting an increase of pension to Zed Culver;

A bill (S. 3275) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Haxton (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3276) granting an increase of pension to Cal K. Shoemaker (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3277) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Schiedel (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3278) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Wert (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3279) granting a pension to Sarah F. Steele (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3280) granting a pension to Elvira Jarrett (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3281) granting an increase of pension to Josiah T. McKnight (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3282) granting an increase of pension to Sylvester H. Gaskill (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3283) granting a pension to Mary J. Maclary (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3284) granting a pension to Elizabeth E. Bay (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3285) granting a pension to Marshall Ray (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3286) granting an increase of pension to Henry O. Pixley (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3287) granting a pension to Julia A. Tucker (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3288) granting an increase of pension to Abram A. Raub (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3289) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Williamson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3290) granting a pension to Mary E. Allen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington (for Mr. KENYON):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 116) amending section 201 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917; to the Committee on Finance.

TAXES ON SALARIES UNDER REVENUE LAW.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I introduce the bill which I send to the desk, and as it is short I ask unanimous consent that it may be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The bill (S. 3246) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 201 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"(a) In the case of officers and employees under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers and employees: Provided, That this exception shall not be construed to apply to the compensation or salaries received from the Government by Senators and Representatives of the United States."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word in connection with this bill. I think there has been a great deal of misapprehension in regard to subdivision (a) of section 201 of the revenue law. It appears from communications which I have received, as well as from statements contained in some of the newspapers, that there is a general impression that Representatives and Senators are, under the revenue law, exempt from the operations of the income tax provided for by the law of 1917. That, Mr. President, is certainly a mistake. Representatives and Senators are liable to the income-tax law proper the same as other individuals are liable; but the clause to which reference is made is the clause relating to the excess-profits tax. This clause or paragraph provides that there shall be an exception—

In the case of officers and employees under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees.

In other words, the excess-profits tax is not to apply to these officers or employees of the United States or of the several States nor, according to the interpretation put upon this provision by many, to Senators or Representatives.

Mr. President, I do not believe that it was the intention of Representatives or Senators that they should in their salaries or compensation be exempt from this tax; nor do I believe that the provision itself properly bears that construction. I think the weight of authority will be found to be to the effect that Representatives and Senators are not within the meaning of the Constitution or of this statute officers "under" the United States; and that hence it would not apply to them; but in order to settle the question of construction I have introduced the bill so that the provision I have quoted shall be construed as not to apply to Senators and Representatives; and in order that there may be no reason for holding that they are exempt from the excess-profits provisions of the act.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask whether the measure introduced by the Senator from South Dakota was a bill or a joint resolution?

Mr. STERLING. It is a bill amendatory of the provision of the revenue act therein referred to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply rise to ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

I will state, Mr. President, that I entirely agree with the Senator from South Dakota that there is a very serious doubt as to whether the provision to which the Senator refers would release Senators and Representatives from the payment of the excess-profits tax. Of course they are subject to the income tax; there is no doubt about that; I wish to say to the Senator and to the Senate that I am inclined to think that the department will so construe the law; but I am advised that the other House, in order to remove all doubt, will probably to-day consider an amendment something in the nature of the amendment which is proposed by the bill which has been introduced by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can not quite understand the purpose either of the bill or of the suggestion which has been made by the Senator from South Dakota. Of course, the normal tax upon incomes provided for by the old law and reinserted in the new law applies to the salaries of all persons, including Representatives and Senators.

Mr. SIMMONS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McCUMBER. The other law to which the Senator from South Dakota refers is simply the law relating to excess profits or war profits.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator tell me how he is going to figure a salary of an officer which has not been changed since the war from what it was before the war as constituting an excess profit? We determined our excess profits between 6 and 9 per cent, I think, as the law reads, as between what a man in business or a corporation in business was earning before the war, as compared with what they are earning since the war, and if there is an excess between those two figures of 6 and 9 per cent, that is the basis of the excess taxes; but inasmuch as there has been no excess earned in salaries, which are exactly the same, why do we need a law to cover it or to explain it?

My own opinion was that when we inserted that matter in conference—for it was no part of the original bill as it passed either the Senate or the other House—it was unnecessary and really had no meaning in the particular section of the bill in which it was inserted, that being a section which dealt only with excess profits. It was intended to exclude, of course, from the excess profits those additional sums that were granted to Government employees; but inasmuch as no additional amount was granted to these other officers, I can neither see the occasion of inserting it in the excess-profits provision or in the amendment now proposed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course it is self-evident that if a salary has not been increased the general provision of the excess-profits tax would not and could not apply, because that provision purports to place a tax upon the excess earnings over the prewar period. Where there has been no increase of salary we could not possibly reach the salary of an officer through that provision of the excess-profits tax law. The only way in which a salary could be reached where there has been no increase would be to apply to it the flat 8 per cent provision, which is applied to occupations and professions having but very little or no fixed capital invested.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota, and also the Senator from North Carolina, why section 209 does not apply? It provides:

SEC. 209. That in the case of a trade or business having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 201, a tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the net income of such trade or business in excess of the following deductions: In the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000; in the case of all other trades or business, no deduction.

Would not our salaries come under that provision, unless they were excepted?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator probably does not advert to the exception in the act; there is an exception.

Mr. BORAH. I know there is an exception; but unless that exception is sufficient, would not our salaries come under this clause, generally speaking?

Mr. SIMMONS. Undoubtedly; and I have just stated to the Senate that it was my opinion, as a result of a conference I have had with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the department will hold that the salaries of Members of the Congress were not exempted under that exception clause. I do not know with certainty how that may be; but I stated that I was so advised. I do not know how the commissioner will hold; I am merely stating what impression I received after talking with him; and I stated that I was advised that the House of Representatives, or I may say another branch of Congress, with the purpose of removing all possible doubt, would probably pass some legislation on the subject to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have offered a bill proposing to amend the existing revenue law by repealing that provision of it. The Senator will remember that such a provision was voted down in the committee of the Senate; it was in neither the Senate bill nor in the House bill, but was inserted in conference, contrary to every rule of this body or of any other legislative body of which I have knowledge.

Mr. SIMMONS. To what provision does the Senator refer—to the exception?

Mr. GALLINGER. To the 8 per cent tax. Now, I will ask the Senator this question: The Senator intimates that a bill on the subject is to come over from the other body to-day, and I should judge the Senator is in favor of passing it. I hope the Senator will not do that; but that he will give some consideration to the bill which I have introduced and had referred to the committee of which the Senator is chairman. There is a great deal of opposition to that provision throughout the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to make it clearly understood that I have expressed no opinion about it, and no purpose about it. I was merely trying to state the facts to the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the colloquy which has taken place in regard to this matter, may I ask the Senator if it is contemplated upon the part of his committee to deal with the revenue act in any other respect than that which relates to the matter which we have been just discussing? There has been considerable said to the effect that the committee proposes to rehabilitate that measure to some extent or to renovate it, and I ask if the Senator is informed as to what the committee is going to do about it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that there has been no meeting of the Finance Committee at this session; there probably will be a meeting of the committee tomorrow; but I wish to say to the Senator, most emphatically, that, in my judgment, there is no purpose on the part of the committee of this House or of the other House to attempt any general revision of the revenue act of the last session. The Senator knows, however, that the Secretary of the Treasury has appointed what he calls an advisory committee, who have been examining the law very carefully with a view to aiding the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with reference to its administration and possibly to some extent its interpretation. I understand that probably that committee will bring to the attention of the commissioner some errors and omissions and probably some inconsistencies that call for possible legislation, if they can not be removed or remedied by construction and administration. Of course, if any such case as that should be brought to the attention of the Finance Committee, I assume the committee would consider it; but as for undertaking any general revision or rewriting the law, I do not think that that is contemplated. On the contrary, I think the country has accepted the law as a very good piece of legislation.

Of course, Mr. President, no measure of as great magnitude as the revenue law, of a pioneer character and affecting so many interests, can be expected to be absolutely perfect. We have heretofore passed no general legislation of this character since I have been a Member of this body that has not called for some emendation. For instance, the act creating the Federal Reserve System, which was thoroughly discussed and debated both in the committee and in the two Houses, has required frequent emendation, and there will possibly be some amendments at this session of Congress to the revenue law; but I think they will deal only with errors, omissions, inconsistencies, and, in case a very great injustice should be pointed out as the result of rigid construction or even a liberal construction, the committee might take that under consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not anticipate that there would be any legislation which would deal with any phases of the law other than its inconsistencies and its omissions; but I do think that in dealing with those it will be necessary to go much further than has been suggested by the Senator. There are some fundamental things which were omitted from the law which I think the business of the country will require us to consider before this session closes, and I venture to say that by the time the advisory committee to which reference has been made reports to the Senator and to his committee there will be found sufficient grounds for a very general review of that measure.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am advised, Mr. President, that the advisory committee has found very little to criticize in the law.

Mr. BORAH. I have not seen any report of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course I can not speak for the Finance Committee of the Senate, but I do want to say, in answer to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], that there is not a feeling among the business interests of this country or among the people generally that the legislation is anywhere near perfect. There is a feeling growing throughout the country—and I think it has a just ground—that the law is so inconsistent in many of its provisions that it will become necessary for Congress to amend it, if not to rewrite it.

When the conference report on the bill was before the Senate I called attention then to some of the changes that had been made in the bill by the conferees that made it almost impossible of administration. I doubt very much, Mr. President, whether the advisory committee that has been appointed can possibly arrive at their decisions before the citizens of this country will have to make the returns, and I think that there will be trouble from the very day the citizen begins to make out his return until it is finally examined by the examiners of the Internal-Revenue Department, for as the law now stands no one can tell just what it means. I can not find two persons in the United States who construe the law in the same way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is not the difficulty with which the Senator is now dealing a difficulty arising from the fundamental defect of the bill? The whole basis of calculation is wrong, in my judgment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that if the original bill as reported to the Senate had not been so emasculated by the conferees the business men and the citizens generally who fall within its provisions would have known how to make the required report. But the conference report on the bill which became a law was based partly on one system and partly on another system, and it seems to me that it is almost impossible of construction. I know myself that there will be a great deal of trouble in having it construed in such a way that the people generally will understand what it means. I have heard some of the best attorneys in the United States say that they have tried to come to a conclusion as to how to advise their clients to make out reports, and they say that it is absolutely impossible to do so; they can not come to any conclusion as to what the provisions of the bill really mean.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will remember that in the committee I urged several times, if we could not make out a bill starting from the very bottom—from the foundation—a new bill that would take in such part as we desired to continue of the old bill, that at least we should attempt to have our experts so combine the old bill with the new bill that they themselves at least might understand it and give us some information concerning it. But the real difficulty lies in this: We ingrafted upon one bill, embodying one system of taxation, another entirely new system of taxation covering exactly the same incomes, with a thousand different ramifications, so that no person could apply one system and then apply the other system and have the two agree upon the same income, even from the same source. Until we rectify that incoherency of the several sections of the bill not only not one citizen out of ten thousand will know how to make out his report but no two of them among the ten thousand will agree.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when that bill was before the committee I was in favor of repealing all of the revenue laws that were then upon the statute books and writing one law to cover revenue taxation. But in justification of the action of a majority of the committee I will say that the idea was to leave the act of September 8, 1916, upon the statute books, and only enact such legislation as would be necessary during the war, and at the close of the war the bill that was passed at the last session of Congress was to be repealed, leaving the law of September 8, 1916, in force. That was the object of a majority of the members of the committee in having the two laws which now trouble all who have to make reports as a basis of their taxation. I believe now, Mr. President, that it would be best to repeal all of the revenue laws and write a single law so that the average citizen can understand it. If that were done we could raise just as much revenue, and even more if we desired, and have it so simple that anyone would know just what the Government required in the report.

I called attention to the fact, when it was under discussion, that the law could be written in one-third of the words of the law that was passed at the last session if we had not undertaken to keep upon the statute books the law of September 8, 1916; and in writing the law that was passed at the last session we had to refer over and over again to provisions that were covered in the act of September 8, 1916.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, can the Senator give any good reason why it was necessary to write such a complex proposition for the American people to decipher in order that we might not be put to the trouble, when we want to change it, of reenacting an old law that we could reenact with 10 words, if we desired to do so?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct, and the Senator takes the position that he took in the committee and the position that I took in the committee at the time. I think the real trouble comes from the arrangement that was agreed to beforehand that the law of September 8, 1916, should not be interfered with.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether this discussion is proceeding in order. I have some very definite views upon this question which I wish to submit. I do not want to begin an argument here if it will be cut off by a call for the regular order. If this discussion is proceeding out of order, so that there can not be a full and free discussion of the revenue bill enacted at the last session, its injustice, its unsoundness in principle, and its insufficiency in all respects, then I do not think we should proceed further with this irregular debate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that if the Senator from Wisconsin desires to object the discussion of this matter is not in order, although it has been before the Senate now for thirty-odd minutes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not desire to object at this time, Mr. President, if it is understood that we may proceed here by unanimous consent——

Mr. SMOOT. That is what we were doing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (continuing). To a thoroughgoing discussion of the whole subject. With that understanding I would be very glad to have the debate proceed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there is a bill which is the unfinished business——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin, who has just entered the Chamber, that before he entered the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] practically gave notice to the Senate that the war-revenue law would not be reconsidered here or recast, and out of that statement grew a rather harmonious discussion between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from North Dakota, during which they were trying to account for the fact that two different kinds of fruit were growing on the same legislative tree, as a result of differences between two schools of economic policy.

What I want to say before this discussion closes is this: I do not favor and did not favor that law. I did not think it was a good bill, and my feeble voice answered "No" here in the viva voce vote on the bill. There were only a few of them, however, as I recall. But there is a feature to that law to which I think public attention has been appropriately directed and which ought to receive encouragement and emphasis from the floor, and that relates to the exemption from taxation of the salaries of Members of Congress. Where did such a proposition come from, in the name of Heaven?

Mr. SMOOT. Conference.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. When everybody is being taxed, where did such a proposition come from? In what brain was it born? How did a provision exempting from taxation the salaries of Members of Congress ever find its way into an act? I do not believe there is a single Senator on this floor who would for one moment knowingly vote for such an exemption; yet through this very novel and illegal method of procedure, as far as the rules of the Senate are concerned, we turn over the Senate bill and the House bill to conferees, and they amend it to suit themselves.

So far as I am concerned, I am sick and tired of that practice. Legislation by conference committees is not legislation at all. I know the Senator from Utah has criticized it, but the Senator from Utah was on the committee, and I have heard him again and again protest against it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator that I have proposed an amendment to the rules that will allow a Senator to make a point of order against such a provision, and I am glad to say that the Committee on Rules has agreed to report on that amendment early after the holidays.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I commend the amendment of the Senator from Kansas; but if we had depended upon that amendment here I doubt very much whether this provision would have gone out of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. It would have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. STERLING and Mr. KNOX addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know it would have been subject to a point of order, but it was surreptitiously put into the act.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Even without the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas, which I am glad to say will perhaps make it plainer and more emphatic, it is a parliamentary rule that as far as I know has no exception in any parliamentary body that conferees have not any right to put into a bill that which has not passed either of the two Houses that they represent. That is part of our rules, without any provision on the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The function of conference committees is a question of reconciliation between the two Houses. That is their function, reconciliation only, and they have no more right to originate legislation than one of the page boys.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the difficulty is this——

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PITTMAN. Has the morning business been closed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not. This discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. PITTMAN. I make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is still in order.

BERT H. CLARK AND OTHERS.

Mr. STERLING. I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (S. 3247) for the relief of Bert H. Clark, Maud A. Graham, Grace A. Graham, Lee Hurley, Emma I. Gordon, Mabel H. Dwight, and Nellie A. Pardy was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. As I understand, these private bills can be handed to the Secretary without formal introduction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that this is not a private bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then I beg the Senator's pardon. By hearing the title, I thought it was. Anyway, I wanted to call the attention of Senators to the fact that all private bills ought to be handed to the Secretary.

Mr. GALLINGER. They can be if we wish to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 169) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, directed to inform the Senate what measures, if any, have been taken under their authority, or by their direction, for cleaning ice and snow from the sidewalks of the city of Washington; and if no measures have been taken, to inform the Senate the reasons for failure to take action in that regard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not object to this or any other resolution seeking information, but I think if the Commissioners of the District of Columbia undertake to remove the ice from the streets of Washington at the present time they will need a much more liberal appropriation than we have given them to do it. I think it would be an impossibility for the Commissioners to accomplish that task.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, just a word in that connection, with reference to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, who for a long time was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that the commissioners would need a more liberal appropriation than is now afforded them if they are to clean the ice and snow from the sidewalks.

I will say that the manner in which the ice and snow ought to be cleared from the sidewalks is by a regulation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia under the existing law, if the present law authorizes it, or, if not, under a law which ought to be enacted requiring the occupants of all premises that are occupied to clean the snow from in front of their premises. Almost every other intelligently governed city in the country has such a regulation; and if the occupants of premises do not remove the snow and ice from the sidewalks in front of their premises, then it ought to be removed by the public authorities and the cost of removing it taxed to the premises occupied.

I had assumed, from the enormous extent of smooth ice of a dangerous kind in front of premises, that probably there has been some object in keeping it there instead of an effort to remove it; but if it is intentionally done through some deliberate public policy I want to say that it is a pretty expensive proposition. I do not know whether it is done in complicity with enemies of the country; but if some pro-German influences had conspired to injure the military forces of the United States, they might well have adopted this plan. I know military officers who have been seriously crippled—men whose services are of importance in the preparation for the waging of this war—long before they had any opportunity to get on the battle front, by attempting to walk on the sidewalks of the city of Washington, and falling upon the smooth ice which covers the greater part of them.

I should like in that connection also to call the attention of the Committee on Rules—I think that is the committee that has jurisdiction of it—to the steps leading into the Senate Chamber and to the Senate Office Building and inquire of them what regulations have been made by the Senate for the supervision of the property under its jurisdiction to make it at least reasonably safe to get into the place where it and its Members transact business. They apparently have adopted the plan of putting gravel on the ice. I do not know what the purpose of that is. It is just as easy to sweep snow off the steps as to go and get gravel or coal cinders and put on it and wait until accidents have happened, or the snow has melted, and then sweep off the remains of that and clean off the gravel and cinders and carry them away. As a matter of fact, the much-boasted government of the Capital of the Nation—and it has good grounds for boasting of its efficiency in many respects—has left the sidewalks of the city in a condition that would be disgraceful to a frontier mining town.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just one moment, just to make one further comment, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. There is not a city in the country outside of the city of Washington that I know of that has not had to pay for damages out of the city treasury for accidents to people falling and either killing themselves or crippling themselves, sometimes for life, upon smooth ice which has been allowed to accumulate and remain from day to day upon a sidewalk. Wherever the responsibility exists—and it exists somewhere in the government of this city—it has a duty which it owes to citizens who have a right to walk upon public streets to make those streets reasonably safe for that purpose; and they are not in that condition to-day. A good many people in the last few days have been subjected to pain and suffering and to being crippled by reason of the unsafe condition of the sidewalks, due to the ice that has accumulated on them.

I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I wanted to say, in view of the criticism the Senator is making of the streets, that at different times in the history of legislation there have been two acts passed by the Congress to remedy this evil, and both of them have been held to be unconstitutional under the decisions of the court of appeals of the District. Two or three years ago another bill was introduced into this body and came out of the committee of which the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was then chairman, which was believed to be constitutional and would reach the evil which the Senator from Washington is complaining of. It was intended to place the responsibility upon the abutting proprietors. That bill has twice passed the Senate, but never has passed the House of Representatives, and so far as I know has never been reported out of the committee to which it was referred. I want that fact to appear, that the Senate has already passed such an act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad the Senator has given the information. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if, in view of those decisions and of the fundamental law of the District, he claims that it is unconstitutional to remove snow from the sidewalks of this city?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the only question that is involved. If it is not unconstitutional to do so, there certainly can be a way found to do it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In the bill that was passed by the Senate it was believed a method had been found that the courts would be compelled to respect.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 7237. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. R. 7634. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

H. J. Res. 174. Joint resolution for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Patents.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, Senate bill 2812, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, this is an oil bill. Oil is very smooth matter, and I wish to address a few remarks to what it occurs to me has been the object of smooth proceedings, which I feel not altogether foreign to an oil bill—it is itself a sleek movement. At the outset I should say that I have no objection to what appears to be the provisions of this particular bill; but, Mr. President, I want to consume one or two moments to bring attention to what I think might attract the public as from this body.

Already there has set upon Congress a fever of investigation. We remember that Hamlet bemoaned that the world was out of joint and despaired and deplored that he was chosen to set it right. At certain periods of our country there ever arises a certain set of gentlemen who conceive to themselves that Heaven has delegated them as the particular emissaries to the earth to readjust all matters and to assume to set everything right which they feel is out of joint. That is a commendable pursuit, and on the part of those who have any qualifications to perform it meets my hearty approval. But, sir, it has fallen to my lot in the uneventful era of public life that I have enjoyed to note how many ill-advised spirits enter upon the general undertaking of correcting all the ills of mankind, and particularly to observe those who feel that they are Heaven inspired to drop the intimation that all mankind except themselves are either corrupt or ignorant.

In every instance where there has been any conflict between this Government and any other Government that led to war, or indeed within the Government itself, there were gentlemen who would canter to the front of the stage and view themselves in the reflectory of the spot light, and among these there would arise those who felt it their privilege to intimate every form of charge that could suggest scandal upon officials of the Government or reflections of dishonor or incompetence upon the administration, whatever might be in power.

Mr. President, it is a commendable task to investigate anything with which the public are concerned. If there be anything wrong, it ought to be revealed; it should be divulged and promptly condemned and its perpetrators execrated by public opinion or punished by the processes of the law. If, however, sir, the motive of these investigations, wherever they arise, is to gratify the private grievance of some competitor of business or to vent the vengeance of some disappointed aspirant for military or naval honor, or, sir, to give glamor and notoriety to certain sets of individuals who like to pose as correcting the evils of mankind and seek to be known as the author of all forms of disruption, dismay, and confusion, such should be carefully reflected upon before an investigation stimulated by such agencies should be undertaken.

Mr. President, this morning in every diplomatic court of Europe, I am permitted to say upon the credit which Senators have for the information communicated by another Senator, we are being held up as having discovered in our Government frauds in the undertakings of our supplies, crimes on the part of the officials who administer the Government, weakness and incompetence on the part of the administration conducting the war. Second, we are in certain imperial capitals this morning advertised as a people whose citizenry have arisen in revolt against the manner of the conduct of the war. It is charged that the country has discovered that it has been tricked in one quarter and betrayed in another, and that the spirit behind the conduct of the war has been greatly weakened by the disclosures of how money has been made out of the enterprises of the military and of the civil departments of the Government. This is being spread as proving the charge which has been made against America in certain quarters that "money grubbing" was the principal object of our life and the real purpose which led us to the declaration of war.

Mr. President, if these things were true, I and my brother Senators would be the first to leap to see that the investigation led to the very final end of any discovery and of all the facts that could justify the imputations. But where I am confronted, as I am at this hour and as is almost every other citizen, with the knowledge that the imputations are born of no fact that has been shown to exist and that the insinuations against the officers of the Government are springing from no act that has been shown to have been perpetrated, I am compelled in my place to advise the Government to move cautiously and the people to reflect considerately and Congress to act with deliberation, lest we do wrong to those in power, injustice to those administering the offices of the Government, and visit a hardship upon those executing severe tasks in this solemn hour. We must not hasten to embarrass the officials in their discharge of duties and finally bring such reflection upon our own citizenry that for years they will be unable to absolve themselves from it, and that, too, without the slightest foundation of fact or justification in acts for it.

Mr. President, may I be pardoned, sir, for adverting to it, a personal experience. I was a Member of Congress just before the Spanish-American War, as was your distinguished self, Mr. President [Mr. KING in the chair], and as were many colleagues in this body who were likewise Members then of the House. These will admit, with me, that we saw the beginning of the imputation hurled against officers of the Government then under the McKinley administration. These accusations, as time devolved, had no real foundation, and was so established in the final result. It fell to my lot to render an insignificant service as officer in the Spanish-American War, being then a colonel of a State guard. I returned to Congress after the war, and there, sir, I had occasion, as many of my colleagues sitting around me (some who were in the Senate at that time and others Members of the House) to see what was the aftermath of those general wholesale accusations, and what were the facts, and what was the final result upon the Government.

Sir, let us reflect upon the time to which I allude. The charges then hurled against the War Department drove Gen. Shafter, who was then in command of transportation and supplies, into a condition of confusion and demoralization by which his whole service was of no utility whatever to the Government. We were left in a state of complete disorganization, and yet it developed, after that distinguished soldier passed to his grave and when the final result came, that there was not that which could mar him with a shade much less with a cloud.

Gen. Alger, the then Secretary of War, was driven, sir, into sickness and then to political suicide by withdrawing from every political honor, notwithstanding the fact that at the conclusion of all the investigation, at the end of all the intimations, his character came out without the suggestion of a dishonorable deed, or, sir, without the insinuation of his knowledge of a dishonorable or dishonest act by others.

Ludington, then head of the supply department, was held up and cauterized before the country as having some qualities of irascibility of temper, coupled with an inefficiency of service, and a participation in dishonesty of conduct. He passed to his grave in sadness if not in dishonor, yet when the final result came forth it disclosed that there was not an act in existence for which he could have been held responsible. Yet his whole life in his generation was tainted with those unjust intimations.

What was the final result? Senators about me will recall, and, in order that they may be guided by it, it developed, we repeat, that certain profiteers in the Government had taken advantage of the officials of McKinley's administration, which, in its great hurry and responsibility, could not have had an opportunity to investigate every incident. There were a certain set of men in that time availing themselves of the opportunity to take advantage of that administration, as a class of men are ever to be found in every Government to take advantage of any administration in any crisis, and ever succeed in overreaching the Government; in imposing upon the Government by putting supplies upon their country that were decayed; powder that was deficient, if not wholly fraudulent; armor plate and other conduct, if you please, sir, that were a reflection upon the honor and integrity of the whole Nation.

Secretary Long, then, of Massachusetts, upon whom reflections came from quarters which were never justified, was disclosed afterwards as bearing no more relation to the subject of complaint than a man upon foreign soil who had never seen the American Continent; yet, sir, these reflections were permitted to rest upon these distinguished men, and they passed into the end of their life, receiving in after days just credit due when it was too late to remedy a wrong unpardonable.

Mr. President, I ask that no man in this administration of any nature, whatever be his politics, escape from any investigation necessary to disclose what he has been doing and all the conduct relating to his public business. I ask that no guilty man be permitted to escape, whether that guilt be a crime, inefficiency, or mere neglect. But I do demand, sir, that we pause at this threshhold and, remembering the history of the past, either in the Civil War or following it or the Spanish-American War and following it, of which we have knowledge, that it may admonish us that we, at the outset, refuse to be stimulated and hastened by a sentiment of scandal mongery and sensationalism to enter into things that will reflect upon the integrity of honest business men or upon the honor of competent officials or upon the efficiency of men who administer this war, particularly when doing such we merely gratify the desire of those who would use the occasion to satisfy personal grievances of their own. We would leave the outside world to misunderstand, to misapply, and to construe all of such course as a certificate on the part of our Republic of a want of confidence in those who are conducting the war, and it would leave our opponents in Europe, our enemy, Germany, and the civilized world generally to conclude that America has risen up in revolt against her officials, in accusation against her war officers, and besmirching her own people upon the assumption that they have been guilty of something and shown to have been responsible for crimes and conduct unworthy of a patriotic people.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LEWIS. Gladly.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to ask the Senator if he thinks any such investigation has been undertaken. I ask particularly because the Military Committee of the Senate is making an examination of the War Department, which, I understand, has the full approval of the Secretary of War, and it is being done in order to obtain facts very largely to consider in connection with the appropriation bills which will come before Congress. I have not heard that there was any criticism of that examination or of any other, and I am asking the question whether the Senator has any basis for the address he is making.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am sure the Secretary of War has never objected to that investigation, nor will he be found ever objecting to any form of investigation. I answer the Senator to say that no members of this administration, who are called Democrats, or that eminent set of men that they have brought in to aid in the conduct of the war, called Republicans, are objecting to investigation, either upon the ground of present self-preservation or because they fear its future disclosures. What I want the distinguished Senator to understand, as every other Senator understands, is that which I am striking at. It is that, however we may enter upon an investigation, we ought to really pause at the threshhold to inquire as to two things: Are there foundations of fact that justify entering upon it in order that we might not carelessly rush into investigations from which there may be drawn conclusions such as now are drawn and published all over Europe; second, that we consider the man behind the investigation, wherever he is, his object in inciting it. Then, sir, that we go further to inquire of the motive behind the man who undertakes to incite or initiate these forms of investigation at the hands of the public agencies of the Government——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Illinois if those very facts will not be developed by any investigation that may be held? I will furthermore ask the Senator if he finds any reason for objecting to the investigation that a Democratic committee is making of the coal and sugar situation as it exists to-day? Some of us believe that those matters ought to be inquired into, calmly and dispassionately, and that a report ought to be made to Congress as to what has been found in connection with them.

The situation is very serious; it is inflicting incalculable discomfort upon multitudes of people. I saw this morning a poor woman, with tears running down her cheeks. Upon inquiring what the trouble was, she said: "I have not a pound of coal in my house, and I can not get it." If that is the condition which exists to-day to any considerable extent, surely a committee of Congress is justified in looking into the matter, making a report, and pointing to a remedy, if one can be found. There are two investigations going on, both headed by eminent Democrats, and

I can not believe that they have any purpose of smirching the administration or of giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the Republic.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LEWIS. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. KENYON. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire at this point.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the resolution for the investigation of the coal and sugar situation was introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who certainly could be accused of no ulterior purpose in those matters.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am quite aware of that fact.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before replying to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], there is no objection from any source to investigation, I answer the Senator directly; certainly not. Mr. President, it is not accurate, however, to state that an investigation anywhere is before any Democratic committee. The investigation is before a committee of the Senate, composed of Senators representing both political parties.

But what I will have the able Senator from New Hampshire to understand is this: I say certainly the situation as to coal should not only be investigated, but the evils, which we gather from the public press are being suffered by so many, should be remedied if there is any way in the world to do it. The same must be said of sugar or of any other necessity.

Mr. President, what I am alluding to is the fear that must be drawn by anyone who reads but the public press and sees what is transpiring. It is, sir, that there will unnecessarily go forth the impression that these investigations, instead of being what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] correctly characterizes them, as they should be—a calm and careful investigation of facts—will take at the outset the coloring of imputations of offense against officials and against public servants, leaving that impression in foreign countries from where—the final result never being understood—we will be stamped as either inefficient or dishonorable.

I wish to say, sir, that I rose merely that I might by the past experience attract the attention of the Senate and of the public to the method in which these investigations are invariably begun, not so much by the public agencies, such as the Senate, from knowledge had by themselves, but stimulated oftentimes by designs on the part of certain persons who wish to gratify their private grievances, or from the Army and Navy oftentimes through some disappointment, and to put upon others wholly innocent the imputation of a wrong that never exists. To avoid that kind of result I merely invite the Senate's attention to what has transpired about them.

Mr. President, 11 months ago England entered charges against certain officers in government. All over the United States the charges were circulated in the press that those officials of the English Government were guilty of things which in other tribunals would receive designations personal and regrettable. We have never seen what was the outcome of that investigation. Not a man of those charged has been found guilty of any offense; not one of them has been held up before the public, based upon any truth or fact, as unworthy; and yet there has never been removed from the public American mind imputations against them.

Sirs, I ask your attention that in Canada a few months ago charges were made against officials of the Government in matters of investigation, leaving to our minds and thought that criminals in the administration of Canada had perpetrated offenses for which they should go to the penitentiary, and that those were officials of the Government. From that day to this, sir, we have seen no corroboration of the charges; there has been no conviction of the men; there has been no justification for the imputations. I invite the Senate's attention to that final result.

Sir, it surely is in the mind how in France but a short while ago a cabinet went to pieces and fell as a house of cards under charges stimulated by certain persons outside that found their way to the public halls of their legislation. The cabinet went to pieces; it was succeeded by others. Up to the present day, sir, we have had no final report. The imputations against the Government rested on rumor. We now discover that one of those officials who was formerly charged was taken from what was supposed to be a political obscurity, and to vindicate his life he has been made practically the premier of the Government. It is because I wish to avoid those unnecessary imputations on our own Government at the outset, against whoever may be involved in an investigation, I beseech the Senate and warn the public that we do not fall into that offense of making reflections upon the character of officials, imputations upon his undertakings, where there has been no evidence to justify and no proof to sustain. I beseech that these investigations shall continue; that it be undertaken calmly as to facts; that the facts be divulged; that remedies, wherever they can, be applied; but that we shall withhold gratifying any man or men who have either private business grievances on the one hand or disappointed aspirations to avenge and gratify on the other, to stimulate investigations or to accept them as legitimate authority in circulating reflections and accusations that can so easily be asserted and at the end, sirs, never be proven.

Mr. President, I do not seek that any man shall be exempt; I trust none shall be; I trust there will be a full and a complete investigation of every department of this Government as to what it has done for the public, what is being done connected with the Army, what as to its supplies, what as to all officials; but that it shall be conducted with the object of disclosing the truth, the facts, and not, sir, for the purpose of using the investigating committees of Congress as a forum in which business competition, the rivalry of competitors, or the vengeance of disappointed officials may be gratified. Let the maxim be, sir, "proceed," and let the theory be that no guilty man escape, but that no innocent man suffer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I shou'd like to ask a question of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LEWIS. I am about to yield the floor, but I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Aside from any inquiry as to crime or malfeasance in office of an official, which the Senator has animadverted upon, I should like to inquire of the Senator, really for the purpose of getting his view, whether or not he objects to an inquiry, for instance, into the question as to whether or not an official or a department has used due diligence in carrying out the acts of Congress in making preparation for the war? I have read in the newspapers some reports about the investigation conducted by the Committee on Military Affairs—and I assume that that is one of the things the Senator has in mind—as creating a bad impression in the governments of Europe; but in so far as I have read in the newspapers any report of the proceedings there, it has dealt with evidence tending to show lack of diligence, undue delay; and it seemed to me that that, at least, was a proper subject of inquiry. I should like to know where the Senator would draw the line.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I answer the Senator from Washington fully—and the inquiry is a competent one—that, far from objecting to an inquiry to ascertain if there has been diligence, I would inaugurate one; I would inspire one; I would stimulate one; I would do everything I could to have one, and have the results disclosed to the public; but I would see that it was known to the public that the investigation was honestly to ascertain the diligence of service and to betray and expose to the public the full extent of its absence. On the other hand, I would do all I could to prevent an investigation that had that for its outward reason of public good but for its inward reason the real purpose of seeking in some way, by intimation and insinuation, private vengeances, and to besmirch the honor of a man or reflect upon the servants of the country.

Mr. KENDRICK obtained the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to offer some amendments to the pending bill, because I expect shortly to be called away from the Chamber. I understand the Senator who has charge of the pending bill has agreed to eliminate from the bill all reference to the naval reserves which were set aside to obtain oil for the use of the Navy. I have very carefully drawn the amendments, and, if the Senator from Wyoming will permit me, I should like to offer them and have them adopted at this time. It will take but a few moments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to unnecessarily interfere with the expedition of this bill, but this is a bill of tremendous moment to the western people. While it may be that the amendments about to be offered by the Senator from Virginia are appropriate, and at the proper time should be adopted, I do not want to consent to their adoption at this time. I want the consideration of the measure to proceed regularly, so that we may know precisely what we are doing. There is no measure before Congress, except those which have to do with the war, that is of so much concern to our people as is this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, my idea was to eliminate from the provisions of this bill all reference to naval reserves, to provide that this bill shall not touch them at all, the idea being to introduce a bill later on dealing with these lands which the Government needs. The other phases of the bill are not touched at all by the proposed amendments, but if the amendments are adopted, the provisions of the bill will apply to all lands now covered by it except naval reserves.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I dislike very much to interfere with the Senator's program, but in view of the fact that we are dealing with this bill rather unexpectedly, upon my part at least, I am not in the position to consent to the request until I know the effect of the amendments.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I withdraw the request and simply ask the Senator from Wyoming to permit me to offer the amendments at this time, which I think I have the right to do.

Mr. BORAH. If that is the purpose, I have no objection whatever. I thought it was the intention to have the amendments acted upon without debate. I have no objection whatever to having the amendments presented and having them printed; in fact, I should like to see the bill in print in its entirety before I vote on it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I merely want to say to the Senator from Virginia that he knows I am very anxious to conserve the oil lands for the Navy, but I was told that an amendment was proposed which would simply wipe out a number of people who in good faith and before the land was reserved for the Navy invested large amounts of money there, and that the amendment proposed to cut them out entirely and completely confiscate and destroy all their property. That I do not think is fair, but I have had no time to examine the amendments. I have been otherwise engaged.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the amendment does not affect their rights one way or the other. It simply eliminates from the provisions of this bill every allusion to naval reserves, leaving that matter to be brought up in a subsequent bill, by providing that nothing in the bill shall in any way affect the naval reserves which have been set aside for the use of the Navy. It is not proposed to affect the rights of any individual at all.

Mr. LODGE. But as the Senator knows—he has seen the maps, as I have—there are wells in the naval reserves that were worked in good faith before the lands were taken over by the Government. Now, we ought not to destroy those people and give them no compensation.

Mr. SWANSON. I have refused to accede to a change that will either add to or subtract from the rights of those people. Amendments have been offered to the bill to try to affect rights under existing law, but I have insisted that we ought not change existing law to perfect or detract from the rights now possessed by anybody. This bill would, to some extent, affect the rights in naval reserves of people who have entered lands there, either adding to or subtracting from their rights. So as not to interfere with the passage of this bill those in charge of the bill have agreed to leave out all reference whatever to the naval reserves, the pending bill to be followed by a subsequent bill affecting those reserves. However, I will not interfere with the speech the Senator from Wyoming has to make, but I should like to offer the amendments. I simply ask to have them filed at this time and will state that I shall offer them later.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator have them printed?

Mr. SWANSON. I offer the amendments and ask to have them printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion before the Senator from Wyoming proceeds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is it expected by the Senator in charge of the bill that we will be able to dispose of it before we recess for the holidays? I have understood that we are going to recess to-morrow. I was not present this morning, being compelled to be in the Supreme Court, but understand a resolution to adjourn was acted upon.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state, Mr. President, that I had hoped that the bill would be acted upon to-day. There is no new question involved in it except the question which the Senator has just been discussing with the Senator from Virginia, namely, the elimination of the naval reserve from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I realize, Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, there is a separate bill which the Senator from Virginia has in his possession and which he has shown to me dealing with the lands in the naval reserve, private property as well as public property. It is his intention to introduce that bill and to have it submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is for that reason that the members of the Committee on Public Lands are willing to exclude from this bill the lands in the naval reserves.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that the bill that is prepared was not such as we approved entirely, but it is to allow the Government to condemn the lands in these naval reserves, to use the oil, and to pay for them as it does when it condemns other lands. I had purposed to offer that as an amendment to this bill; but since it has not been perfected, and I desire to see all parties interested—the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Navy, and the people whose rights are involved—it was decided that it was better to let that bill go over and be prepared during vacation and be introduced and referred to a committee, to be discussed and considered. With that understanding, it has been agreed that every reference in the bill to the three naval reserves will be eliminated and a provision put in there striking out the language that applies to them, and then have a provision that nothing whatever in this bill shall be construed as referring to the naval reserves.

Mr. LODGE. And that carries with it all the private claims within the reserves.

Mr. SWANSON. All of them; so that it can not affect the private claims or the Government claims at all. All of that is to be settled by a separate bill, to be prepared and introduced later.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. KENDRICK. To the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, we have passed a joint resolution to adjourn to-morrow. The result of it will be that we will consider and pass a measure which fixes the policy for some 8 or 10 States of the Union with some 10 or 12 Members of the Senate present. It is altogether probable, I admit, that the bill will finally pass in its present form. I have reason to suppose that from inquiries and investigations which I have made; but it is rather discouraging to those who feel very sincerely that there is a fundamental wrong being done to the Western people by reason of this bill to be compelled to discuss it and consider it when those who should vote upon it are out of the city or preparing to leave the city.

While I rather admire the zeal of the Senator in charge of the bill, I do not myself think that this bill ought to pass to-day. If we can not have a consideration of such measures as this by the entire Senate, it is scarcely worth while for us to be here at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to say to the Senator from Idaho that this matter has been considered by the Committee on Public Lands for four years. I have been very violently opposed to one feature of the measure; but inasmuch as compromises have got to be made in order to get any legislation through, there was a compromise made by the members of the committee with relation to this bill, and I think the western Senators will be satisfied with it.

I feel there ought to be consideration if it is necessary, but attention has been given to it day after day and week after week, and I do believe that we have gotten a measure which will be satisfactory even to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have very great confidence in the judgment of the Senator from Colorado with reference to these matters, and I confess that I was lulled into security by the thought that the Senator from Colorado had approved this bill, but I took the bill home Saturday night. Since that time I have been reading it and studying it, and the fundamental principle in this bill—the thing which was in all former bills, I should say—is now in this bill, and that is the question of leasing all the natural resources of the public lands in the West. Now, it is said—I will detain the Senator only a moment—that in the bill there is a provision which permits of an alternative policy of sale. It is technically there, but as a matter of fact it is a dead letter except the law be executed by some one who is in favor of sale. If the Department of the Interior does not see fit to indorse the principle of sale, there need not be a single piece of this public land sold, and all of it can be reduced to a leasehold condition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, while an excessive opponent of permitting any lands to be sold might obstruct in some way the operation of this law, I take it that the officers of the United States Government will attempt to carry out the express mandates of the bill. There is a provision there that when a man makes application to purchase, the land shall be put up at auction and sold.

Mr. BORAH. I will not detain the Senator from Wyoming longer now; but when we come to discuss this bill, I should like to see the provision which compels the Secretary of the Interior to sell a single foot of land if he does not want to do it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it is in the first section there relative to coal lands. The Senator will find that it is there.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, as you have already heard, the measure now under discussion has claimed the attention of Congress for a period of at least four years. Two bills of similar character have at different times passed the House, and one, at least, has passed this body and failed in conference. The measure is practically unchanged from those that have passed, other than in the fact that, in my judgment, it provides greater protection for those who have located upon oil and coal lands than any other bill that has been presented here.

No State in the Union will be affected to a greater degree by this measure than my own State of Wyoming, and I feel that I would not be doing my full duty toward that Commonwealth or toward this body if I did not take this opportunity to give expression to the opinions on the great subject here involved which I believe are held by a large majority of the people of my State.

It has seemed to me particularly appropriate that this measure should be brought before this Congress, and that it should here receive legislative sanction, already too long delayed. It is a measure that in many ways is a radical departure from our traditional land policy, but it comes at a time when many world traditions are being broken and when the new and revolutionary practices that are being adopted as temporary expedients point the way to permanent changes in our economic and industrial life. The new method of administering the natural resources of the country outlined in this measure is, in my judgment, conservative, when compared to some of the new policies that are coming with the war. But just as the conditions of the war have taught us the need of a better system of distribution, a better system of taxation, a more equitable division of the privileges and burdens of Government, they have deepened the conviction that it is unwise and even foolish to allow the natural resources of the country to pass without restriction into private hands in which they not only may be but frequently have been manipulated and controlled to the detriment of the Nation.

Mr. President, this bill offers a plan of conservation which has unhappily been delayed for more than 100 years. Had the principles which are here laid down been adopted when our Government was first established, development of our resources might to a certain extent have been delayed in the beginning, but the eventual use of the Nation's natural wealth would have been along such broad and comprehensive lines that we would not to-day be vexed by many of those problems growing out of private and arbitrary control of natural wealth, which have occupied the attention of this body since the beginning of the war. We would not be worrying to-day over maximum and minimum prices, over production and distribution, over speculators and dictators, if the principles of this measure had guided our development from the beginning.

Do not misunderstand me as suggesting any reflection on the leaders of the past. During the early days of the Nation, while the original States were being occupied and settled, it was impossible for even the far-sighted statesmen of that time to have foreseen the enormous increase of population and the great industrial development of the present age. The statesmen of the past are not to be blamed for their failures to foresee the great growth of their country, and the serious consequences that would flow from a policy permitting the concentration in private hands of power over the Nation's resources. Theirs was a different light and theirs a different viewpoint from ours, but the legislators of to-day can plead no such excuse. From our own experience we know the powers and the evils of monopoly. The statesmen of the earlier years failed because they did not have the evidence. We have the evidence, and having it, if we fail there will be none to defend us in the future.

With this brief introduction, Mr. President, permit me to call the attention of the Senators to the resources the Nation has to conserve and to the divergent theories now advanced as to how they should be administered.

I believe that the tremendous benefits that will inure to the people and to the country from the enactment of this measure are but dimly understood, because there is a very false notion abroad with respect to the amount of our natural wealth still included in the public domain. The general assumption seems to be that the Nation is now dealing with the fragments of a once glorious heritage, and in some quarters there seems to be a disposition to cultivate the belief that so little is left as to make it scarcely worth while to draft a new policy.

A continuation in the West of the old land policy, which in the East deprived the people not only of the ownership but also of the control of the natural wealth, is urged by those who hold this view. For purely local reasons they argue that the West should be permitted to squander its resources just as the East has done. Mr. President, this argument, in my judgment, is based entirely on a misconception, and serves neither the interests of the West nor of the Nation itself. It serves only the interests of the individuals who could take advantage of the old order to establish in the West the same sort of control over the public wealth as is now exercised elsewhere in the country. It will be of no advantage to the West if by failure to meet the conditions with which we are now confronted we merely extend the opportunity of private capital to broaden its unrestricted ownership of our resources. These untouched sources of supply of the materials needed in our industrial expansion do not belong to East or West, to North or South; they belong to the whole Nation. I can not understand the point of view that conceives anything less than the welfare of the entire Nation to be involved in their disposition, nor the point of view that conceives the interests of the State to be in any sense different from the interests of the Nation. We can adopt no policy with respect to the subject matter of this measure that does not affect both alike. If the policy which experience in the East has demonstrated to be a foolish one is now followed in the West, then within a few years that whole section will be in the same position as the East is now, and we shall have invited for the country at large the same unfortunate and I may say disastrous consequences of which complaint is now justly made in the East.

Quite different from the theory that the old order should not be changed is the view of the "conservationist." The creed of conservation, at least as popularly understood, has been that private greed has not only absorbed the resources of the East but the resources of the West as well, and that it is incumbent upon the Government to prevent further development of the remainder until that which is in private control is exhausted lest future generations be forever impoverished. Not to use but to hold against use, not to conserve but to hoard, has been the aim of this faction, wholly unmindful both of the interests of the West and of the needs of the entire country.

No one would be more thoughtful than I of the rights of the future, but, on the other hand, it would be manifestly unfair to overlook the rights of the present generation. Surely no argument is needed to show that the view of the man who would prevent all use is quite as dangerous to the present as the view of the man who would continue the old policy is to the future, for it would make the whole Nation dependent upon the resources now in private control and it would thus serve only to give a new lease of life to the evils from which we are now suffering.

Both views are based upon the assumption that our natural wealth is practically exhausted. Mr. President, I feel perfectly free in saying that we are not dealing with the fragments of the public estate. We are dealing with the treasures of an empire.

The newer States of the Union, the acreage of which is fortunately still held by the Federal Government as part of the public domain, contain within their confines more natural resources than all of the States whose lands have passed to title. That territory which is included between the Missouri River on the east and the Pacific coast on the west, the entire Rocky Mountain watershed, possesses resources that are as unlimited as they are still uncharted.

I do not mean to weary you with statistics, but if there are any Senators who have believed the fable that within a hundred years the coal of the country would be exhausted, let me say to them that in 12 Western States there are to-day almost 45,000,000 acres of coal lands withdrawn from entry and development. Almost as much more, Mr. President, has been restored to entry.

Is there anyone who believes that our oil reservoirs have been drained, that one very wealthy individual and a few subsidiary corporations have gained all the advantage that is to be gained from the Nation's natural supply? Then let me say that in 8

Western States almost six and a half million acres of oil lands are to-day withdrawn from entry and development, while there are other hundreds of thousands of acres of possible oil lands which may yet be tapped to supply the Nation.

Is there anyone who believes that we must forever depend upon foreign powers for our supply of phosphate rock? Then let me say that in 4 Western States there are to-day almost two and one half million acres of phosphate land withdrawn from entry.

In this western empire to which I have referred, Mr. President, there are to-day undeveloped resources the actual value of which is beyond imagination. The reports of the Geological Survey show that there is iron enough to supply every possible need for centuries. Dr. George Otis Smith, Director of the Geological Survey, in a bulletin which he prepared shortly after the outbreak of the present war said:

> The United States is not only the world's greatest producer of mineral wealth but so far as estimates of the earth's treasures have shown it possesses greater reserves of most of the essential minerals than any other nation.

And now, Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senators to some features of the history of the last 10 years that, in my judgment, prove the necessity of early action.

Agitation for a new policy began fully 10 years ago, and this period has been one full of trials for western communities. It was gradually becoming clear that the old order could not be prolonged, but Congress could not, and seemingly has not yet quite decided what should be done. This period of transition has been one of doubt, uncertainty, and endless confusion, the hardships of which would be difficult to describe to one who has not actually experienced the results of the innumerable Executive orders withdrawing public lands from the operation of the public laws that have been issued to bridge over the gap while Congress has been trying to formulate a program.

The sum total of withdrawal orders on July 31 of the present year, Mr. President, amounted to 56,715,014 acres. Almost 57,000,000 acres of the most valuable territory in 20 States are to-day locked and barred against the settler, while legislators take their time to make up their minds as to what shall be done with it. In the list of withdrawals are found almost 45,000,000 acres of coal land, over 6,000,000 acres of oil, over 100,000 acres of oil shale, 2,500,000 acres of phosphate lands, over 100,000 acres of potash, 8,000 acres of mineral land, almost 3,000,000 acres of water-power sites, reservoirs, etc.

I shall not burden you with these figures, but I shall ask that this summary prepared by the Geological Survey of the outstanding withdrawals by States be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered, without objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Summary of outstanding withdrawals on July 31, 1917.

State.	Coal.	Oil.	Oil shale.	Phosphate.	Potash.	Mineral.	Water power.	Reservoirs.	Public water.	Total.[1]
	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.
Alabama							120			120
Alaska							60,300			60,300
Arizona	141,945	230,400				8,507	300,324	23,040	12,438	716,654
Arkansas							22,354			22,354
California	17,643	1,257,229			91,207		266,484		52,474	1,685,037
Colorado	4,503,297	87,474	45,440				276,514		480	4,913,205
Florida				119,737						119,737
Louisiana		467,030								467,030
Idaho	338,452			966,377			262,454		7,210	1,574,493
Michigan							1,240			1,240
Minnesota							12,309			12,309
Montana	10,912,205	1,346,105		119,227			164,297	9,080	3,304	12,554,218
Nebraska							761			761
Nevada	83,833				39,422		27,361		4,336	154,952
New Mexico	5,613,263						62,602		2,286	5,678,151
North Dakota	14,656,455	84,894						1,569		14,742,918
Oregon	4,361						329,723	10,619	2,482	347,185
Utah	5,326,256	1,952,326	86,584	302,465			447,424		33,827	8,148,882
Washington	827,193						114,061	35,943	40	977,237
Wyoming	2,437,723	923,182		998,592			86,903		82,831	4,529,231
Total	44,862,626	6,348,640	132,024	2,506,398	130,629	8,507	2,444,231	80,251	201,708	56,715,014

[1] The same land may be included in more than one type of withdrawal, so that some of these totals are greater than the area in fact withdrawn from entry.

Mr. KENDRICK. Do not think that I quarrel with the wise policy which has temporarily withheld these lands from improvement in order that a new and wiser policy might be developed. I am merely trying to convey to you some appreciation of the vexations which the West has had to endure. I am trying to draw a picture of what the uncertainties and delays of this period have meant to the settler. It is only proper, however, Mr. President, that I should go on record here and now as saying that during the past few years there has been an increasing disposition on the part of the people of my State and of the whole West to rely more and more implicitly not only upon the good intentions of the Department of the Interior, but also upon the wise judgment which has been displayed in interpreting the needs of the West under the able leadership of the man who is now the executive head of that department.

But no official, however wise and comprehending, could overcome the evil consequences of the absence of a national policy, and of the substitution—necessary though it may have been—of executive rulings. I need not recount to you the humiliating experiences that many of the most honorable and valuable citizens of the West were forced to endure when the Government first began to attempt to correct by Executive order the shortcomings of the law. I need only say that the wholesale attacks which were made upon coal-land patents and timber patents, based upon allegations of fraud, worked a very serious hardship on hundreds of upright men and revealed them to the public in the aspect of criminals, when, as a matter of fact, they had, in most cases, acted in complete good faith, in complete honesty, and in complete conformity to the law.

One of the great difficulties has been that prejudice has too often beclouded the vision of men who have had the responsibility of enacting and enforcing laws governing the public domain, and they have found in the actions of a few unprincipled men sufficient grounds on which to base an indictment of a whole people.

Not only did the individual suffer, but whole communities and States were forced to bear the burden in arrested development. And the industrial loss incurred by delayed development can never be quite recovered. Lost years are never regained. The man who undertook to develop Government land was always taking the hazard that though he acted under the law, his labors and his investment would be lost through some sudden Executive order or land withdrawal. The settler was deprived of what was the legitimate reward of effort. States and counties were deprived of sources of taxation of which they were in great need. It should scarcely excite wonder that conditions of this kind, indicating a wide distinction between the manner in which the resources of the East had been administered and the manner in which the resources of the West were being administered should have made the people of the West resentful of this lack of a definite policy.

But, Mr. President, I want to point out that there is a vast difference between impatience with such delay and opposition to the establishment of a practical plan of conservation. That man does not know the people of the West who believes that they want to hold for themselves alone the limitless resources I have described, or that they want the Federal Government to repeat in the present the blunders of the past. The man who believes that the West wants to exploit the wealth of the Nation understands neither the temper nor the character of the people who are laying the foundation of a great empire in the Rockies and beyond. They have vision that is national in scope, and they will give their hearty and unqualified support to a measure like this which, while permitting them to use the natural wealth of the country in which they dwell for the great constructive task that engages their attention will, at the same time, preserve the control of that wealth in the hands of the whole people, so that the time will never come in the West, as it has already come in the East, when the necessities of the many will become the opportunities of the few.

While it is clear that the West needs this measure, I believe it may also be demonstrated that the Nation at large needs it, and needs it immediately. Almost every bill that has been brought before the Senate at this session has been urged on the ground that its passage was necessary for the successful prosecution of the war. Of no measure could this be said, in my judgment, with greater accuracy than of this one. The country is in great need of an increased output of the very substances affected by this measure, not alone that an increased supply may be opened up to relieve the condition of high prices with which we are confronted, but that the country may have the fuel and the lubricant with which to carry on the present conflict. It has been well said, Mr. President, that not a train, not a naval vessel, not an aeroplane can move without oil. So great is the demand, according to the testimony of experts before the committee, that every available source of supply must be used. We have recently appropriated $640,000,000 for the construction of a vast aerial fleet. Every dollar of this sum will have been uselessly expended if we have not the oil to operate the airships. The passage of this bill will place almost immediately at the disposal of the country the oil resources of over 6,000,000 acres of withdrawn oil lands and of other millions of acres of Government land which, though not withdrawn, are believed to be rich in oil.

It is needless to dwell upon the national—yes, the world—need for the development of the natural resources of the United States. No one who is conversant with present-day conditions can fail to see it. The question to be decided, it seems to me, Mr. President, is not whether this development should be permitted, but how it should be carried on.

This brings us to the present measure and the system there outlined for encouraging the proper development of these resources.

Mr. President, let me say here, I am definitely committed to the leasing system, because it reserves to the people the right to alter the system of administration whenever new conditions arise to make new duties. One of the most farsighted and statesmanlike utterances of the able Secretary of the Interior was, in my judgment, his declaration that it would be unwise to transfer the title or to give a lease to any of the remaining natural resources in such a manner as to make it impossible for those who are to come after us to pass upon the methods of development and use at least once in every 50 years.

Although section 2 of this bill provides for the sale of coal lands to individuals and corporations under certain conditions, the measure is essentially a leasing measure, and I accept it as the best upon which all interests to be affected by such legislation can agree. I am impressed with the thought that one of the principal objects to be attained in the disposition of our coal and similar resources is to prevent the possibility of arbitrary control of the output. This end is clearly secured by the restrictions contained in this same section by which the amount of acreage to be held by any individual, corporation, or association is definitely limited, and by which any such individual or group is forbidden to hold an interest in any other association or corporation which secures such lands under the act. The industrial history of the country affords no single instance in which monopoly has been maintained in any commodity when the sources of supply of such commodity have been properly safeguarded against the accumulation of holdings. When these safeguards are provided, as they are in this section, competition can not be stifled.

This section, containing, as it does, such restrictions, is a legitimate concession to those who fear the leasing system will delay development, and particularly so because, in my judgment, it is so drawn that only a limited amount of coal lands will be sold and coal operators themselves will quickly come to the conclusion that it is better to lease than to buy. The section provides that any qualified individual, association, or corporation shall—have the right to enter * * * vacant coal lands * * * not exceeding 2,560 acres upon payment * * * of not less than $10 per acre for such lands where the same shall be situate more than 15 miles from any completed railroad and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such railroad, and the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair.

Mr. President, the average valuation placed upon the coal lands of the United States still in the public domain is not $10 or $15 per acre. It is more than $40 per acre, and even this low average is not representative of the real values, because it is affected by the extremely low appraisal of certain territory containing poor grades of lignite. The lands which will be really sought for development, the really valuable lands, are appraised at from $150 to $200 or $300 and in some cases $400 per acre. I have personal knowledge of large tracts of coal land that only a few years ago were valued at $20 and less per acre, but which are not now to be obtained for less than $200 or $300.

The Secretary of the Interior will not sacrifice these lands at the minimum price named in the bill. It would be impossible for him to do so even if he desired, for natural competition would drive the prices up to the honest mark, and the operator would then find it cheaper to lease than to buy. The business man who deals in coal will not be long in learning that it will be far more satisfactory to pay a modest royalty of not less than 2 cents per ton than to tie up in a permanent investment the large amount of capital that will have to be absorbed in the purchase of these valuable lands.

Let me refer now to the argument which has been advanced by those who advocate the application in the newer States of the old order, namely, that the leasing system will delay development just as the lack of any system has delayed it during the period of transition. Those who express the fear that the leasing plan can not be made a success base it upon the belief that capital will be disinclined to finance an industry the title of which is founded in a lease and not on a deed in fee simple. This may have been true in the past, Mr. President. It may even be true now, and for a short time after the passage of this measure when capital may to an extent still be in a position to choose to finance only those enterprises the securities of which are based on absolute title, but this attitude, in my judgment, will be immediately changed when the leasing system becomes the rule and not the exception. When it is clear that the right to develop the resources of the country may be obtained only by lease, capital will come to look upon securities based upon a lease from the United States Government as the very safest and best form of investment. There has already been experience enough in my home State with the leasing of State lands to indicate to my mind that no man need fear delayed development simply because the people, through their Government, prefer to give a lease rather than to surrender all title.

My only criticism of this measure, Mr. President, would be directed against that feature which puts it at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to lease by cooperative bidding. This plan might well apply to coal, but not to oil, for of our great natural resources none lends itself more completely to monopoly than does oil. Whether under a system of ownership or under the leasing system the business of producing oil, because of the peculiarities of transportation and for other reasons, tends readily to monopoly. This danger, I believe, was overlooked when the bidding system was authorized by the committee, which, I am constrained to believe, did not give full weight to the advantages of a flat-rate royalty system over the competitive-bidding plan.

The whole theory of this measure is that the natural resources of the country are the property of the whole people, and that the old policy of permitting these valuable lands to pass into the control of private individuals must be abandoned in order to protect the rights of those who are not in a position to acquire ownership. This is confessedly the object of the measure, yet it may be utterly defeated, so far as oil is concerned, at any rate, if the Secretary adheres to the competitive-bidding plan. Fortunately the law provides that the lands may be leased "by the Secretary of the Interior through competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may adopt by general regulations." For my part, Mr. President, I trust that the Secretary will follow the "other methods," because the bidding system works to the disadvantage of the small operator and to the advantage of the monopolist. With only a limited capital at his disposal and with a hundred operating costs drawing upon it, the small operator can not become the rival of a wealthy corporation in a bidding contest. Beyond a certain point he can not take the risk that is involved in pledging a high royalty to the Government. If for any reason the large operator finds it to his interest to acquire certain leases, the small operator must yield the point and the man of unlimited means will find it easy to secure control.

Bear in mind that ordinary restrictions which might well prevent one set of interests from dominating the coal trade, for example, will not work so well with oil. This is a product which must go to the refineries, and the interests which own the refineries can find manifold ways to control the output. Secret agreements are not altogether a thing of the past, and employees are still known to act for their principals. It would not be impossible under this law for individuals friendly to a large refinery corporation to outbid the small operators and then sell the output at a low price to the refiner. The peculiar power which the refiner exerts may be illustrated by the fact that in Wyoming, where there are only two refineries, both of which, I am informed, are controlled by the same company, oil sells at less than $1.50 a barrel, while in Ohio and Pennsylvania practically the same class of oil brings from $2.75 to $3.50. It is needless to say that the cost of transportation does not altogether account for this difference in price.

What becomes of the interests of the consumer under conditions like this? The Government by entertaining competitive bidding invites a concentrated control of the output and at the same time an increased cost of production, which will, of course, be passed on to the consumer.

While it is true that the small operator may not offer as high a royalty to the Government, he offers a much more valuable consideration by helping to reduce to the consumer the price of the commodity. The Government can not afford to discount the advantage that will accrue from a multiplicity of producers. If many small operators are engaged instead of only a few large ones, the price to the consumer will tend to be lower—and this in all justice must be considered as part of the return to the Nation for the use of the oil. A flat royalty would eliminate the danger that the control of the output might fall into the hands of a few, because it would provide a common basis for the operator of limited means and for the operator of unlimited capital. It would give wealth no advantage over energy and ability.

I shall now take an opportunity, Mr. President, to say a word with respect to section 17 of this bill, protecting the rights of present bona fide claimants of oil lands. The laws now on the statute book constitute in effect an invitation to the enterprising pioneer to enter upon the Government domain in search of oil. Hundreds of men have responded to that invitation, giving their time and labor to the development of tracts which Government geologists, after inspection, had frequently reported as nonoil bearing, and which, because of such reports, these pioneers naturally believed would not be withdrawn by the Government. In spite of the pessimistic verdicts of the Government experts, these prospectors went in upon the land in search of oil. They spent hundreds and often thousands of dollars in making preliminary surveys of the grounds, in preparing maps, in securing investigations and reports by private geologists, in the construction of rigs, the building of roads, the transportation of machinery, while near-by communities underwent the changed economic conditions that naturally accompany development work of any kind. Then, in case after case, when private initiative had demonstrated the probable existence of oil, the Government suddenly reversed itself and withdrew the lands from entry, stopping all work in a way that was often disastrous to the individuals and communities affected. Many other pioneers became operators in good faith on land that has not yet been withdrawn from entry.

No one can justly say that these men have not established an indefeasible right to the consideration of the Government. They were not responsible for the laws now on the statute books. Neither were they responsible in any degree for the absence of better laws. Members of this body who have watched with interest the struggle that has been waged for the framing of a wise policy of conservation will surely not charge these men for the delay, and no Senator, I am constrained to believe, will say that they should have waited with idle hands during the four years in which Congress was trying to make up its mind what to do, or whether, indeed, to do anything at all.

Congress has no legal or moral right to legislate such men out of their equities. It may be proper to say, "You may not have a patent," but to say "You shall not have a preferential lease to the very land you proved yourself" would not only be improper, it would be criminal. It is incumbent upon us to recognize the equities these men have established, else the Government will be placed in the position of snatching away from its citizens with one law the property it permitted them to acquire under another.

With this concession to established titles, the bill holds an even balance between the present and the future, between those who have already acquired rights under existing law and those coming after us whose rights to an inheritance we are bound to respect. By its concessions in the coal sections to those who fear that to deny patents to coal lands would be to hamper seriously the mining of coal, and in the oil sections to those who have established equities under the present law that may not be justly disregarded, the bill affords every necessary protection to those who have invested labor or money in development. By the encouragement which it extends to the prospector and the restrictions which it imposes upon capital, it protects the present from the danger of a limitation of supply, while it guards the future against the danger of the absorption of our natural wealth by monopoly. It places generous tracts of Government land at the disposal of one man, who would recover the values therein, but it requires him to exercise diligence in the prosecution of his work under pain of losing his lease. He may not obtain land and hold it in idleness. The bill provides for renewable leases at 10-year periods in the case of oil lands and for indeterminate leases in the case of coal, potassium, and sodium; but it also provides that no individual or organization may take or hold an interest in leases exceeding in the aggregate 2,560 acres except when such interest is acquired by inheritance or judgment. In such cases the interest may be held for only two years. The bill offers liberal inducements in low rentals and otherwise for the development of these deposits, but it forbids any person who has taken advantage of these inducements to hold an interest in any agency engaged in the resale of the products of the leases.

Thus, while the bill throws down the bars for the use of the great untouched deposits belonging to the Nation, it raises very effectual bars against the growth of monopoly. Under its terms there can be no concentration of control, save in the hands of the people. The Government will always retain the power to direct the use of these resources, but no private individual or corporation can ever acquire such ramifying interests in these leases as to control the output. In other words, while every provision is made to encourage use, every necessary prohibition is made to prevent abuse.

And now, in conclusion, Mr. President, let me urge the favorable consideration of the Senators for this measure. In my judgment it is one of the most important pieces of domestic legislation which will be considered by this Congress and will direct the future growth and happiness of this Republic to a greater and more favorable degree than many of us imagine. It marks the passing of an old system, the tendency of which was to produce great wealth and extreme poverty side by side. It is the herald of a new era; it reveals a new vision of national responsibility which, while providing for the welfare of the present, protects and safeguards the interests of future generations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not prepared to discuss the pending bill. I really did not expect that this measure would come up for consideration before the holidays. Other matters have engaged my attention, so that I have not had the time to prepare for a discussion of the measure such as I should like to have made.

As I said a few moments ago, it is a matter of unusual concern to our Western States. It fixes the policy for all the public-land States. It fixes a policy which, in my judgment, is not in harmony with the best interest of those States or conducive to their development and growth. I do not question at all the good faith of those who are urging it, nor do I doubt that they are of the opinion that if it is not the best thing that could be done it is the best thing that can be done under the circumstances. There is a great deal, of course, in that argument. We can not always have what we want in legislation. So sometimes we are compelled to take what the other party wants, or what no one wants, in the nature of a compromise.

The objection which I have to the bill as a whole and fundamentally is that it commits the Western States to the policy of the leasing system. I am aware that those who have been opposed to the leasing system believe that there is sufficient in the bill to enable settlers of the West, those who are building up those Western States, to have the advantage of a sales system if they desire. My hasty reading of the bill since Saturday night and my study of it lead me to believe that in its practical operation it is a leasing bill, and will never be construed in any other manner, and in its operation will effectuate no other result. Therefore, I am not content, as some others of the West are, to permit the bill to go to enactment without at least stating some of my objections.

But, as I said a few moments ago, I have not had the opportunity to collect my data, and I shall not therefore be able to discuss this measure. So I desire to discuss another matter for a few moments, which I think is of equal concern, and as we are to adjourn to-morrow it is perhaps the only opportunity I shall have. I hope that at least the measure will not pass to-day, so that those of us who want to make some remarks upon it will have this evening to prepare to do so.

Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senate and of the country, if I may say so, to a most extraordinary situation, which, it seems to me, ought to be dealt with finally and conclusively before this Congress adjourns for the holidays. Last spring the Government called upon the producers, the agriculturists, the farmers of the West—and when I say "West" I mean the great West lying west of Chicago—to speed up production and to make every effort to produce to the fullest extent of their acreage in order that we might not suffer a breakdown in food products. Everyone realized, of course, that the production of food was just as essential to the successful prosecution of the war as was any other particular element in its prosecution. Therefore the Government very promptly and properly called upon the farmers of the West to do their utmost to prepare to feed not only the people of their own country but those of the allied nations, particularly those of the allied nations who were engaged in the actual military prosecution of the war. It was understood that the burden of feeding the forces upon the allied side would rest very largely upon the people of the United States; and it was understood, of course, that the granary of the United States lies west of the Mississippi River. So the farmers and producers of the West, understanding that situation, fully alive to the responsibility which rested upon them, and being at all times willing and anxious to do their part, proceeded to the cultivation of their acreage to the fullest possible extent. They purchased their seed at a very high price in many instances; they paid a very liberal wage; and in every way they exerted their energies to respond to the call of the Government, and they did so. They produced crops to the fullest extent of their ability.

When the time came, Mr. President, to transport those crops to the points where they could be of service to the people of the United States and to the allies the transportation system of the country was not equal to the exigency. I say this without any criticism upon the transportation companies. I assume they simply found themselves in a position where the demands exceeded anything that they had anticipated or anything that they had been able to prepare for. They were not able to move the crops which the farmers in the West had produced. Who was at fault or wherein the default lay I do not now discuss.

What was the result? The result was that a very large portion of those crops was entirely lost; that is to say, the crops were either not garnered for lack of labor, or, being garnered, they were not sent to market for want of transportation facilities. Hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes have been utterly lost, and other products of like nature which the country stood in need of, and now stands in great need of, were lost by reason of the fact that it was impossible to find means of transporting such products to the market. Cars were not to be had. The demand on the transportation systems seemed to exceed all expectation.

I have seen, Mr. President, in print statements to the effect that this condition of affairs has been exaggerated in the West, but I beg to state to those who so view the situation that they are greatly in error. It has not been exaggerated. The loss has not been overstated and the discouragement to the producers in no sense overdrawn. The loss of crops of this year and the want of a market not only affects the present situation but it is going to have a tremendous effect upon the next year's planting and the next year's crop. No one, I presume, anticipates at this time that this war will close before another crop's demands shall have been called for; no one, I presume, anticipates that we shall get through until there shall be dire need of the utmost productive capacity of the western producers.

Mr. President, unless we are prepared speedily, without any delay, to assure the western producers that that condition of affairs shall again happen, it is bound, out of the very necessities of the situation, to reduce the acreage and the crop production throughout the entire West. To what extent I would not undertake to say, but I venture to say to a sufficient extent to materially affect the situation.

There can be no reason for producing if one has no means of getting his products to the market. Under present conditions the farmer is warned of the fact that there will be repeated during the next year the experience which he has suffered during the present year.

Another fact, Mr. President. We are just now entering what seems to be a very severe winter. Already throughout the United States we hear upon every hand a call for fuel and for food. We are advised by the great dailies of the cities that many people are suffering and that many deaths are being caused by reason of exposure to cold and by reason of an insufficient supply of food. This is at the very beginning of the winter. Heaven only knows what it will be before spring comes. Here in our own country, Mr. President, before we are actually in the war, before we have actually participated in the true sense of the word, we are suffering for want of fuel and for want of food, neither of which, as an actual fact, is in any sense scarce. In other words, the question of transportation again arises, and demands attention, compels a solution. The transportation companies are unable to respond to the demands and the fuel is not transported, and people are cold. Products which the people need are rotting or being destroyed. All this not only affects the present situation, but will have an unquestioned bearing upon the progress which we hope to make during the coming year in the successful prosecution of the war.

I venture to say, Mr. President, that you can not successfully carry on this war with discontent and want at home. Especially is that true when there is believed to be a remedy for that condition of affairs. I do not know, Mr. President, myself to what extent this situation arises by reason of inefficiency of the transportation facilities of the country; but I think it is conceded upon every hand that that is a very large portion of the difficulty.

We are about to take a holiday recess to-morrow, so I am told. I was not present when the resolution was passed. We shall recess without any transportation policy whatever. We leave this cloud of gloom upon the country and go home to our respective places to enjoy the holidays. We go for two weeks, and the amount of suffering, the business distress which may characterize the country during that time will be wide-reaching and most serious. And, sir, the very fact that Congress adjourns for two weeks without any apparent concern as to the situation will of itself add greater anxiety to the country. A willingness upon our part to remain at our post and work out a solution of this difficult problem will be encouraging and helpful. Besides it is not to be presumed that we can not find a remedy if we give our attention to the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, while I appreciate what the Senator from Idaho is suggesting, the question which arises in my mind is, how are we by keeping in session to put another engine on a railroad or how are we to pass a law between now and the end of the ordinary Christmas holidays which would relieve the situation of which the Senator from Idaho complains and of which the country is complaining? If we could do that, I should very much oppose any adjournment.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that there is no balm in Gilead? Is the situation hopeless?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not know Gilead, and I do not know much about balm. [Laughter.] The balm of Gilead, however, does not come from talking in the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. No; I am aware of that fact; but does the Senator think that there is no remedy for this situation? If he does not want to talk, will he stay to vote?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There may be a remedy; but what is the use of complaining about the Christmas holiday adjournment unless the Senator can show that that adjournment affects the application of the remedy?

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. I think if we remain and do our duty we will find a remedy.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not myself a railroad expert, and I do not know that I could suggest a remedy out of hand, but I venture to say that when the remedy comes it will require some aid or legislation from Congress. I venture to say that there will not be a substantial and effective change in the situation until Congress acts upon this matter, because that which the railroads need must necessarily come to some extent from this body. It is our business to confer among ourselves and to determine precisely what we must do, and then proceed to do it. We certainly will not determine it and certainly will not arrive at a conclusion as to what we should do if we are not in session and are not undertaking to do it. It is no answer to the situation to ask if we stay here could we do anything. If we stay here, we can undertake to do something, and I feel, in conjunction with the President, we will effectuate a change of conditions.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Has the Senator from Idaho introduced a resolution looking to that end?

Mr. BORAH. No; I have not; I had supposed we would cooperate with the administrative department; I had been led to believe the President would soon ask us to act.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I agree with the Senator from Idaho. I myself would not ask an adjournment; I should rather we would not adjourn; but it seems to be the sense of the two bodies that we should do so. I desire to ask, however, has the Senator introduced a resolution or has he any remedy to propose to meet these conditions? Has he anything to suggest in the shape of legislation? Has he introduced a resolution that will relieve this condition by our action? If he has, I shall certainly join with him in opposing any thought of adjournment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have been advised for several days that we were to have a message upon this subject from the President. Naturally, we have awaited that message, and I am sure we ought to be here to receive it when the President is ready. I have introduced no bill. If nothing is to be done by others, I shall certainly try my hand.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. By whom have we been so advised?

Mr. BORAH. We have been so advised by the press. I do not myself have any other source of information.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should judge so.

Mr. BORAH. I have to rely upon the public press for such information. I am not so fortunately situated as the Senator; therefore not so wise.

I have no doubt that the President is dealing with this matter and is applying his time and his energy and his ability to the subject; but I also have no doubt that the President will not be able to do what is necessary to be done in order to change the situation without some help upon the part of Congress. I do not believe that all can be done which will be necessary without the aid of Congress. I certainly do not want Congress to be away in case its help should be required.

I can not conceive of the fact that the President will not need any assistance upon the part of Congress upon this subject for two weeks; that it is going to be permitted to remain here without any action upon our part at all for the next two weeks and then for another two weeks for debate and consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Two months of debate, the Senator probably means, if we ever get it here.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. Fairfax Harrison, in discussing this matter, and he is an expert upon the subject, I presume, if there are any, says:

WHAT THE RAILROADS DO ASK.

3. The immediate appointment of a traffic officer to represent all important Government departments in transportation matters, with whom the railroads can deal, to secure active Government cooperation, the prompt and orderly transportation of Government traffic, and avoid the excessive use of preference orders, which congest traffic instead of facilitating it.

4. Most of the railroads need locomotives immediately, and enough new cars to replace those worn out. There are approximately 3,800 locomotives and 33,000 cars still on order undelivered for American railroads. The railroads expect to provide the capital. Priority orders are essential for prompt delivery of such equipment.

5. Approximately 2,000 locomotives and 150,000 cars, in addition to those now on order, are necessary for early construction to meet the requirements of next year. This is no more than the railroads usually require every year, and at present prices represent a cost of approximately $500,000,000.

While a number of railroads are able to purchase their quotas of such equipment without aid, it is apparent that because the United States has necessarily occupied the investment market for war loans, as evidenced by the recent request of the Secretary of the Treasury that no new private financing shall be undertaken without conference with him, the railroads can not next year provide through their usual channels for the requirement of capital, for the acquisition of equipment, and other possible additions to plant. They invoke therefore the cooperation and aid of the Government through the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board to secure for them, on their own individual credit, the new capital found by the Government to be necessary not only for enlargement of plant but for renewing maturing obligations.

6. Immediate increases in rates, as defined by the Interstate Commerce Commission's special report, to meet increasing operating expenses and strengthen credit are necessary in eastern territory, and may become necessary in other territories.

It is apparent that if those things are to be done there will have to be legislation in order to effectuate them. There may be some other program which will not call for legislation, but if so, it has not yet been suggested. For myself, however, I do not see how this situation is to be remedied without some kind of legislation, and certainly that legislation is essential to be had at as early a date as possible.

It is not my business, and I would not do so under any circumstances now, to criticize any department of the Government, because I assume that every department of the Government is speeding ahead as fast as it can, but I am sure in my own mind that without the aid of Congress no plan which the President will submit will be effectual to remedy the situation. If we are to take over the roads by the Government, will there not be need of legislation? If we are not to take them over, but to aid them in getting cars and engines, it seems to me we will be needed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Granting that, as I understand—I may be very much misinformed about it; I have no expert knowledge or any other definite knowledge about the situation in connection with the transportation of this country—the railroads are asking the United States Government to extend enormous loans to the railroads for the purpose of meeting the present situation. The only legislation, as I understand, that the railroads want in this connection—and I say I gather the opinion from the press—is that the Congress of the United States empower the President to guarantee to the railroads for the balance of time the amount of dividends and money that they made last year and the year before; in other words, they ask Congress to protect the railroads from any loss in case the Government issues an order for the moving of this train or that train or this locomotive or that locomotive over this road instead of that.

They only want to have Congress say that in all these changes the railroads shall be safe against loss and that their roadbeds shall be kept in repair. Now, if that is all we can do in the present emergency it is a question of whether or not we are going to vote to do that, even if we stay here, and on that question I can conceive that a very long debate would naturally arise.

Mr. BORAH. If Congress does not loan large sums of money—and I am not yet favorable to any such program—then it may conclude to operate the roads, I presume, in conjunction with the owners, all of which will require legislation. But I did not rise to discuss specific remedies, but to urge that Congress either await the President's message or, if that is not coming, then take up the matter itself.

I do not indorse any particular program, because we have not even considered the subject yet as a Senate. Certainly there must be some means by which we can remedy the situation. One thing is certain, that there must somewhere be found a remedy or we are going to break down in the entire question of production and of supplying foods and fuel to the people of this country.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That does not follow.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says that does not follow. Well, we have already broken down to a great extent. True, the railroads are moving more stuff than ever before, but the exigency has not been met.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; we have not broken down.

Mr. BORAH. There are several cities in my State that are without coal and without any fuel whatever; there are hundreds of thousands of people throughout the country that are now cold for the want of coal, and there are people who are hungry for the want of food, and yet the food is to be had if it can be transported. If that is not a breakdown, what is a breakdown?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is a breakdown that has occurred in times past, though perhaps not very often, and it is one that might be expected in the transformation of an army of from 35,000 to 50,000 men to an army of a million and a half or 2,000,000 men. That is the condition that faces the country, and it has to be met. The railroads have not the power to do it, but there is certainly somewhere somebody doing something to retard matters, and it is certainly not the Federal Government nor Congress nor any agency of the Federal Government. Lurking behind it or somewhere is a sinister purpose that neither the Senator nor I can locate, whether we stay here until Christmas Day or not.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I utterly disagree with that statement. There is not, in my judgment, the slightest foundation for any such statement.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, let us see. I came through the town of Harpers Ferry a short time ago. How many loaded cars of coal were at Harpers Ferry last week, and how many at every other railroad junction in the United States? Enough to supply the United States.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator is correct in his statement, then that is all the more reason why the Congress should stay in session here. I do not believe, Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We can not manufacture an engine by staying in session.

Mr. BORAH. I do not believe, Mr. President, that there is any sinister purpose on the part of the transportation companies of this country to break down transportation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I did not say that there was on the part of the transportation companies.

Mr. BORAH. And I do not believe that there is any sinister motive on the part of anyone who has power to affect the situation. There are undoubtedly men in this country who would like to see the situation break, but they are few and far between, and fortunately they are not in a position to affect the situation. This condition of affairs arises not out of a desire to impede the progress of the war, but out of a lack of policy or a system to meet this emergency or exigency——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, will the Senator suggest how we can meet it?

Mr. BORAH. And the Congress of the United States is one part of the Government which may have to do with the determining of that policy.

Now the Senator from Arizona asks me to suggest at once and out of hand how we shall meet that situation. The Senator calls upon me for something which would require some consideration by both railroad and military experts. I would not undertake to say out of hand what should be done. I am of the opinion, however, that until substantial aid in the way of legislation is had there will be no real and substantial relief. I have an opinion as to what should be done, but I frankly state that I should want to hear from men who have given more study to the question and who have had more experience.

Mr. SMITH or Arizona. Does the Senator think that the railroad trains will stand with the coal undelivered until Congress shall have acted? Does he think that there is no earthly way out of it except by the action of Congress? If that be true, we ought to take action right now.

Mr. BORAH. The Congress is here and is the lawmaking body for the people, and as a body having to do with these things, I think it is the duty of Congress to remain here and undertake to deal with them, and not to go away and leave the situation wholly undiscussed and wholly unattended to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will pardon me, I will not interrupt him any more.

Mr. BORAH. I do not object to interruptions by the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. My only suggestion is that when Senators rise to make complaint of conditions they should have thought the matter out before they commence their criticisms. Having risen to criticize the question of adjournment over the holidays, I would suggest to the Senator the propriety of submitting something worthy of the consideration of Congress. It is easy merely to criticize a condition when perhaps ten thousand different things enter into the problem; it is easy to say that we ought not to adjourn without suggesting in the remotest degree what we ought to do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am very sorry if my remarks have so heavily pressed upon the highly wrought and sensitive soul of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator is mistaken if he thinks he is worrying my soul by any of his remarks.

Mr. BORAH. But, Mr. President, I did not rise here to criticize. I think a Senator may rise here and discuss a serious situation without being placed in the rôle merely of a critic. He certainly will not be placed in that rôle by anyone who has commensurate knowledge of the situation or who appreciates the conditions of the country; he will only be placed in that rôle by some one who is sufficiently self-complacent to take care of his personal interests and let the general interests go over.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wonder if the suggestion the Senator makes is not in a measure the one that I made. If I criticized at all, it was his possession of such an enormous amount of that commodity to which he refers that he imposed a mere criticism without any suggestion whatever of meeting the conditions. The suggestion of egotism and self-importance may be based on the Senator's speech rather than on my criticism of it.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator will not leave the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will not.

Mr. BORAH. I did not appreciate the fact until I was advised by the Senator that I was indulging in any criticism. My only suggestion was that the Congress ought to remain here until we could determine as a Congress what was to be done and how we should do it. The Senator objects—further comment on that phase of the matter seems unnecessary.

I am accredited here by one of the States of the Union, and I had supposed that without the consent or permission of other Senators, so long as I kept within the rules, I might rise in my place and make suggestions with reference to these questions without being brought under a schoolmastership from a Member of the Senate.

Mr. President, I suggest again that here is a condition which everyone recognizes to exist and that it demands a remedy. I have no doubt at all but that a portion of that remedy must come from Congress. I have no doubt but that if we adjourn and go home, not only will it be postponed these two weeks, but it will be postponed another two weeks after we return, and a month will have been lost. Sometime or other, I opine, we have got to deal with it. Sometime or other we have got to discuss it and consider it, and, as the Representatives of the different States of the Union, come to a conclusion. It is my judgment that we must do that speedily in order to relieve the suffering which now exists in this country, not by reason of anyone's fault in particular, but by reason of the fact that, generally speaking, we have not arrived at a policy with reference to the transportation system.

It might take weeks, it might take a month to work it out, but sometime or other we will have to do it; and when it comes it will not come as the result of a suggestion from any single Senator in the Chamber. It will come as a result of the consideration of the committees and the different Members of the Congress, and finally, I hope, result in something which will be satisfactory and effective with regard to the entire situation.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. May I ask a question of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. The talk in the press has almost universally been that the President would take over the railroads under the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, which provides that in time of war the President may, through the Secretary of War, take charge of the railroads. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is nothing in that act providing for compensation to the railroads or any means of ascertaining compensation to the railroads; and if the Senator is willing to express his opinion, I should like to ask him if he believes that that act can be enforced until Congress provides for compensation, or the means of ascertaining compensation?

Mr. BORAH. My opinion, offhand, would be that there would have to be some provision for compensation; indeed I have no doubt about it; but all this brings us back to the proposition, Mr. President, that of course Congress will have to have a part in this matter. If it amounts to anything more than appointing merely an administrator—which act alone, in my judgment, will not be satisfactory to the President—Congress will necessarily have to have a part in it. The matter which the Senator from Pennsylvania has suggested will be one of the things which Congress undoubtedly will have to consider, and there will be other matters coming up for the consideration of Congress.

We all know that we can not arrive at a conclusion upon these matters without consideration, and in all probability no program will be suggested which will be so clear and conclusive in its effect and in its wisdom that it can be passed out of hand and without consideration. At some time or other we shall have to deal with it. There is no time like the present to deal with this situation, because it is not only resulting in suffering but it is one of the discouragements of the progress which we are making in this war. It is one of the things which inhere in the entire situation and while the President is dealing with this matter and working with the situation we ought not ourselves to place the Congress beyond the reach of the President when the time comes to deal with it effectually.

I insist that it is the duty of Congress to rescind the resolution of adjournment and remain right here until there is a practical, clear, and unquestioned solution of this question presented to the country and to the people of the United States. You will not revive industry, you will not again energize the business of the country, you will not bring into play the hopes and the aspirations of the business of the country and the producers of the country until there goes out to the country a clear and definite and decisive policy with reference to our transportation facilities. If it could go out before Christmas Day it would be altogether the most magnificent Christmas present which the Congress has ever presented to the American people in one single act.

Therefore, without assuming to criticize anybody or desiring to be placed in the rôle of a critic, I simply say that our duty is here until a policy with reference to transportation is settled upon and becomes the established policy of the Government until this war shall have closed, unless experience discloses the necessity of some change.

While I am on my feet I desire to give notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution to adjourn for the holidays was passed.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like to proceed with the consideration of the first amendment, the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I should like to have that amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment is on page 12, line 15, where it is proposed to strike out the words "or within naval petroleum reserve numbered 2."

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Lands have for many months been discussing the question of relief for the owners of oil land claims in naval reserve No. 2 in the State of California, and I learned from the amendment just offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], whereby he attempts to eliminate naval reserve No. 2 from the relief afforded by this bill, that there was possibly some understanding by which the measure, with the exception of the relief afforded claimants in naval reserve No. 2, might be passed before the holidays, and that after the holidays the consideration of naval reserve No. 2 and the rights and equities involved in that naval reserve might be considered in a separate measure.

This change has occurred so suddenly that I have had no opportunity to examine very closely the effect which the eliminations provided in the Senator's amendment would have upon the general subject of relief. I do know, however, that a representative oil company, the Honolulu Consolidated Oil Co., having claims to something like 3,000 acres out of the 30,000 acres in naval reserve No. 2, has expressed dissatisfaction at any attempt on the part of the California representatives to give consent to this change. The Honolulu Consolidated Oil Co. has had most of its claims adjudicated in its favor by the courts so far as the courts have passed upon the claims, but there are still a number of acres, aggregating, I believe, six or seven hundred, which have not been yet adjudicated, and the company naturally does not want to lose the benefits proposed by this act. It desires the opportunity of benefiting by the provisions of this bill, because it was among the earliest pioneers in oil development in California and has complied with the law, but that fact is disputed by the Department of the Navy, but not by the Department of the Interior.

A telegram which I have received reads as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, December 15.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Understand amendment is proposed to prevent relief provisions of Walsh oil bill, now up in the Senate, from applying to lands within naval reserve No. 2. This would be unfair and unjust discrimination against those having legitimate claims within the reservation. Strongly urge you to oppose the amendment.

HONOLULU OIL CO.

Therefore, I do not wish the Senate to go uninformed as to the lack of unanimity among the oil developers of California. Many of them who apparently were not seriously affected have given their acquiescence, I am informed, in some change which might eliminate not so much section 16 as the opposition of the Navy Department. The Oil Producers' Association have written a letter to that effect. That is to say, they are so timorous, however, about the opposition of the Navy Department, which would deprive the State and Nation of the benefit of increased development under the leasing system, that they are willing to lay aside temporarily the consideration of those rights which we in committee have carefully studied and provided for as a matter of justice and equity in section 16 of the bill. Now, it is proposed by the Senator from Virginia, speaking largely for the Navy Department, to eliminate petroleum reserves No. 1 and No. 2 in California and No. 3 in the State of Wyoming, but naval reserve No. 2 in the State of California is the only one that interests the department.

There are 30,000 acres of land there, and the Government has only a slender interest in them, because most of the land has passed to patent except about 7,000 acres, and the Southern Pacific claims are outside the purview of the bill. It is of very small consequence in a broad view compared to the vast acreages of oil lands outside the naval reserve; but I do not think that we should suffer injustice to be done or, at any rate, refuse justice to the men who have a legitimate claim. The section which I have before me protects and safeguards in every possible manner the Government of the United States, providing for leasing lands and the payment of royalties. The oil or sums derived from the royalties shall go to the Navy Department, and that no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil claims or gas-bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section.

If it were a mere question of development it is possibly wiser for the Government to produce oil under the royalty and leasing system. But there was an intimation here the other day that in withdrawing naval reserve No. 2 it was the intention of the Navy Department not to conserve the oil, to make it a reservoir for future use in some great emergency, if there can possibly be a greater emergency than there is to-day, but to develop it, to extract the oil from the ground.

I submit that the Government has never engaged in mining oil or in mining gold or in mining copper; and if it had from the beginning, instead of providing a system by which individual incentive and enterprise is encouraged, it would have been greatly out of pocket, because more money has been spent in developing than has been extracted from the ground. The unfortunate pioneers of the West, many of them wrecks of their hopes and aspirations, testify eloquently to that, but we only hear of the successful. It is a matter of statistical fact that more money has been expended in the discovery and in the development of mines of every character in the West than has been extracted from the ground, so the Government would have lost money if it had originally gone into the business of mining.

Now, it is thought by the administration of the Navy Department, if I am correctly informed, that the work of development can be taken up more profitably by the Government than by leaving it in the hands of the operators. I think the Government is correct in that, especially in regard to naval reserve No. 2, because the pioneers, under the protection of the placer-mining law, the laws of the United States and of Congress, have proved the existence of oil in naval reserve No. 2; so that the Navy Department will take very little risk. It is like appropriating a man's property after he has accumulated it. I do not care whether it is under the forms of law or otherwise; it can be described as nothing less than burglary unless prompt compensation be made. But why not let the established law and practice of the Government from the beginning of the Republic prevail, and the Government allow the owners to operate and pay a fixed royalty rather than force them to sell their property?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PHELAN. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that with a fight on this bill from the Naval Committee and from the Navy Department it will be impossible to get any legislation whatever through at this session of Congress? Therefore, had we not better leave that question to be determined by a separate bill as to the rights of any of the parties under it?

I am in favor of a provision similar to the provision that is in this bill. I thought the committee carefully considered it; but if you take the consensus of opinion in this body, you will find that when it comes to the proposition of passing this bill with the provision with relation to the naval reserve we will not be able to get the bill through; and even if we were to get it through, it would be only after a long debate, probably, of six weeks or two months. We will also have a contention over it in the House.

While I should like to have something of this kind done, some determination of the rights of the parties such as we have referred to and determined in this bill, yet I recognize the impossibility of getting any measure whatever through, and thereby we will not be able to develop public lands, the development of which is so necessary for coal, oil, and other of the natural resources of the United States. For that reason I hope the Senator will not object to the motion of the Senator from Virginia to leave this to an entirely new bill, by which we will fight with him, when it comes to that, in determining and fixing the rights of the parties that, in my judgment, should be respected and which, it seems to me, is wrong upon the part of the Government as to the lands that were taken up by persons under the existing law at that time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from California permit me to ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. KING. As I understand from the statement which has just been made by the Senator having this bill in charge and the report of the committee, and as I understand the statement of the Senator from Colorado, there are certain bona fide claimants of oil lands within this naval reserve No. 2 who have vested rights—rights which are recognized by the courts; not only by the local courts but by the Federal courts.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to answer that question.

Mr. KING. Let me complete it. As I understand, the Navy Department, or some executive of the Government, is standing here now, and has been standing here in the past, with a bludgeon threatening Congress, preventing the passage of legislation that Congress believes to be just and fair and right, and the committee of which the Senator is a member has been coerced by the threats of the Navy Department into reporting a bill which confiscates property, and it has done that because of the attitude of the Navy Department. Is that correct?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no, Mr. President; it is directly the contrary of that. We have reported a bill which provides for the determination of the rights of these parties, and that determination seems to me to be just and fair. Notwithstanding the Secretary of Navy and other officials that appeared before our committee, we were of the opinion that these rights should be respected. Now, the proposition comes up as to whether we are going to mix that proposition with a proposition of entering upon the public domain and taking up land for coal, for oil, and for phosphates, and whether or not we are going to absolutely lose the entire bill by bringing on a contention of this kind and putting too many propositions in our bill. That is the proposition as I see it.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, if the Senator will permit—does the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. Since the Navy Department has come in, and certain reflections have been made on it, I will submit a statement as to what its contention is.

These very men in this naval reserve came to Congress and got through what is known as the Pickett Act. They say that all they ask is to be allowed to take care of their cases under existing law. They are not satisfied with existing law, however. They come here and want the law changed so as to give about $100,000,000, the value of this property, to whom? The Standard Oil Co.; the Honolulu Co. They want to change existing law. The Navy Department has not asked to have the law changed. The Navy Department has not asked them to do anything but go into the law courts and contend for what is right and just. This bill comes in here and changes the law, and gives these people rights to which they are not entitled under existing law; and they try to connect what they want with the general policy, hoping to put it through by attaching it to a bill for general relief outside of that.

We are not afraid of any discussion of this measure, in Congress or elsewhere. We are willing to have it investigated. It was heard by the Naval Affairs Committee. All we ask is that these people may have the rights to which they are entitled under existing law. Do not change the law. Let them go to the courts and contend for their rights. This bill comes in here and changes the law, and I will tell you how in one case it will change it.

It is in evidence here before the Naval Affairs Committee that a prospector or prospectors from San Francisco, Cal., went to the stockyards in Chicago and got 39 men, I believe, to file claims under the law as it then stood—all fraudulent claims, mere dummies. After that title was obtained it was sold to these people. The title to nearly two or three thousand acres of the land under this reserve is in fraudulent dummies, entered by men in the stockyards, who came and testified that they thought they were signing an election petition.

The Navy Department does not ask any relief. It says, "Let these people have what they are entitled to under the law when it was settled years ago." Finding that they can not get what they claim to be their rights under the law, they come in here and want the law changed so as to turn over rights worth about $100,000,000 to a few private individuals that we say under the law, in justice and equity, are not entitled to it. Thank God, you have got a Secretary of the Navy who has the nerve and the zeal and the patriotism to stand here for the public interest!

We have not asked that this bill be delayed. We simply say that we are not going to consent to any unanimous-consent agreement by which this bill will be hurried through without a full discussion of this matter, to the people and to the Senate, as to its provisions and the beneficiaries of the proposed relief. All we ask is to let this naval reserve go out, so as not to retard and delay this bill in other phases. We will introduce a bill here to bring relief and give these people every opportunity to have every right, in court or elsewhere, to which they are entitled.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am delighted to hear the zeal with which the Senator from Virginia relegates the claimants to the existing law for relief, and he does that to exonerate the Navy Department from blame. The Senator in his zeal for the enforcement of the existing law must have overlooked that provision of the law of 1914 which gave discretion to the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary leases with the claimants whose claims were in dispute, and he so exercised his discretion in many cases; and when about to exercise it in naval reserve No. 2 in order to provide for continuous development of oil, what happened?

The Secretary of the Navy interfered to the extent of requesting the Secretary of the Interior, invested with this discretionary power, to grant no leases for development or any other purpose in naval reserve No. 2. So the benefit of the law which Congress had carefully provided for in matters of dispute was set aside by the interference of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. It was left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and Congress appropriated money to defend the titles to these lands that were sought to be taken away from them by large interests in California and elsewhere. The Secretary of the Navy was the guardian of the land in this naval reserve. He requested the Secretary of the Interior to exercise that discretion and not lease lands that were of great value to the Navy and needed for the Navy until the right and title was established. He exercised his discretion. It could not have been gotten through the Senate unless the expression had been put there to take care of cases where wrong might be perpetrated on the Government. The discretion is left to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Navy was left to defend these lands and look after the interests of the Government, to see that they were not taken away, and he would have been derelict in duty if he had not done so. He is a faithful, earnest, efficient public servant, and I am glad the Secretary of the Navy has insisted that the Government should not be deprived of these valuable oil lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from California?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the very temper of the discussion which is going on it is manifest that no bill can be passed if we are going to permit this amendment to remain in it. I want to say that there is a question of dispute, and a bona fide question of dispute, between the parties. I understand the reserve was made after men had gone there and had sunk wells but had not been able to get the discovery of the oil which the law required, and that by reason of that, in the midst of that development where thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars were spent, there followed a proclamation of a reserve over that land, and now the question is whether or not the person who expended that money would have a right to have a patent issued to him or to have a lease by the Government of the lands so entered.

Mr. PHELAN. I did not desire to precipitate the discussion of the merits of this question, and if I am allowed to hold the floor without interruption I will presently conclude.

Of course there is not involved in this question at all the patriotic purpose of the Secretary of the Navy. The Senator said that he would relegate the claimants to the law. I simply pointed out that Congress enacted a law in 1914, and it was vetoed by the Secretary of the Navy. We have a Government which is topsy-turvy. The rights of Congress have not been vindicated on this floor, and it is a fruitful topic, and I should like, if it did not interfere with the passage of this bill, to go into that subject. But certainly the Secretary of the Navy can not, in view of the fact, claim that, great as his zeal for the law enacted by Congress for relief, he would allow it to take its way unheeded if it contained his own views.

Now, so far as the Secretary of the Navy is concerned, I am willing to concede that he is conscientious in believing that the enactment of such legislation in some way impairs the rights of the United States. That is his view, and that has been a matter of elaborate discussion in the hearings and in taking the testimony, and the committee have come to the conclusion that the Secretary of the Navy is in error. As he is not infallible, I assume that with Congress against him in the act of 1914 and the committee of the Senate and recent decisions of the Federal courts against him there is a reasonable presumption, at any rate, that he may be wrong.

Now, the Senator from Virginia has imported into the discussion the question of fraud. It is perfectly safe to say that your committee would not countenance the acquisition of property by fraud, and as I have already pointed out there is a special provision in this bill that "no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil claims or gas-bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of the section." So I do not know what the stockyards case to which the Senator from Virginia refers has to do with this discussion. We desire to protect the Government and protect the citizen as well.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PHELAN. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. What the stockyards case has to do with it is this: The men who entered were not the claimants. These dummy interests were sold to others. They were sold to the Standard Oil Co. They are the claims of the Standard Oil. We have letters to prove that the Standard Oil knew of this fraud. This amendment is so drawn that unless you can carry knowledge that the Standard Oil Co. claimed this property the fraud could not be used to protect the interests of the Government. If that is the intention it ought to have been put there that no individual or dummy entries——

Mr. PHELAN. Why specify the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. SWANSON. Because the Standard Oil, I understand, is one of the beneficiaries of these dummy entries. So I have been informed by the attorney in this letter. I have not looked into it thoroughly.

Mr. PHELAN. Of course the Standard Oil has an interest everywhere, wherever there is oil; but ordinarily on the hustings it is customary to mention specific corporations as malefactors in order to give color to the discussion. But in this instance the charge that the legislation is in favor of the Standard Oil appears to be rather lame and impotent, because I have before me a statement of the companies that are interested in naval reserve No. 2 printed from the Hearings of the Public Lands Committee of the House, Sixty-third Congress, second session; and it appears that the Standard Oil has an interest in 230 acres out of a total acreage in this particular naval reserve of 30,000 acres. So I do not believe that the interests of the Standard Oil are particularly concerned except in the general question of development in any of this legislation. Whoever developes oil land in any part of the world may be invited by the Standard Oil to contribute its supply for a consideration to the Standard's stock of oil.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to say here of the Standard Oil that Mr. Frankfurter, representing the Secretary of Labor, on a very recent visit to California sent for the manager of the Standard Oil Co. to ascertain what was the result of the voluntary increase of wages given by the Standard Oil of California to men in the field and the diminution of hours, because the Standard Oil, like perhaps a benevolent despot, a benevolent employer, fixed the standard of hours at eight and the minimum standard of wages at $4 a day. As a result, Mr. Frankfurter, representing the Secretary of Labor, was informed that the Standard Oil over a period of 9 months on which they made observations actually increased its output at less cost. There was a greater efficiency by having three shorter shifts by better paid men—the oil wells were worked for the entire 24 hours, having three shifts of 8 hours each—than by having but two longer shifts; and the increase of wages has well justified the change that they made improving their own condition, bettering the condition likewise of the worker. It gave the Standard Oil of California a position in the eyes of the Secretary of Labor, who is so devoted to the interests of labor, of an employer worthy of example. These facts were ascertained during the investigation just had last month in California for the purpose of inducing other corporations to go and do likewise.

Now, I am told by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] that as a matter of practical statesmanship it would be very much better not to discuss at this time the provision of section 16, and to allow all questions relating to naval reserve No. 2 to go over until after the holidays, when the question will be discussed calmly and on its merits, whether the claimants shall be allowed rights as we provide here, whether the Government shall appropriate money for the purpose of the purchase or the condemnation of these several claims, whether the Government shall preserve it as a reserve or develop it in order to meet the extraordinary crisis which is upon us because we are running behind to-day at a portentous rapidity in the production of oil as compared to its use and consumption, or whether it shall be developed by leasing.

The Senator seems to know the minds of the other Senators, which indicate that a discussion now would be futile and I am quite willing, as a matter of practical statesmanship, to give away with the express understanding that the whole question of the rights of these gentlemen in naval reserve No. 2 and in No. 1, No. 3, in the States of California and Wyoming, shall receive under the form of a new bill that careful attention of Congress to which their claims are entitled, and to have a settlement of the oil question in these western States on a high, patriotic plane to meet the exigencies of the Government and the necessities of the Navy.

If the Navy needed the oil of the oil reserves there is not a man holding an adverse claim but would surrender it if the substantial and real interests of the Government were concerned. They only contend that they can better produce oil than the Navy, and we all contend in the committee, and we can, I am sure, convince the Senate that reserve No. 2 can not be maintained as a reserve for use 10, 20, 30, 40, or 50 years from now, nor do I believe in this changed view it is the intention of the Navy Department that it be retained as a reserve, because they need all the resources of the Government at this fateful time. The crisis has come, the hour has arrived, when the mobilized resources of the United States, wherever they may be, shall be utilized to win this war.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to state that the Navy Department has never desired to deprive anybody in any of these reserves of any right that he has to any of this land. All that they have done is an effort to change the laws which would give relief to people that the Navy Department thought were not entitled in right, in law, or in equity and justice to lands.

Now, as to the Standard Oil Co., the Senator from California is entirely mistaken. I have here an estimate made by the Navy Department. They contend that 2,240 acres is the amount involved in the suit against the Standard Oil Co., estimated to be worth anywhere from ten, twenty, or thirty million dollars. It is hard to tell what oil lands are worth. The only contention the Navy Department has ever made is the people's right to fix it under the Pickett Act. The desire now is to get possession of this land for the Navy and to work these wells. They desire to come in and to have this land condemned and pay for all the rights that anybody has, to pay the value of it and have it settled.

Now, as to the contention of the Navy Department, whether the Standard Oil or the Honolulu, or any company, large or small, it is to give what they are entitled to receive under the law. They went in under the Pickett Act. The Navy Department think they could do nothing more and nothing less. They never contended that any law should be changed or any effort made to increase or decrease the rights of these people which was fixed by legislation and which they themselves favored. The only contention they ever made was an opportunity to discuss this matter when it came up in this bill. They thought it ought not to be included in the general bill. The bill as it passed the House did not include it, as I understand it, but it was put on in the Senate, and they also thought it ought to go out and come up as a separate measure.

I shall introduce a bill and try to carry out what the Attorney General and what the Navy Department think is right between these people and the Government, and have it referred to the committee, giving these people an opportunity to be heard. I am satisfied that no Senator wants, nor does the Navy Department, want to injure anybody, to either increase or decrease the right of anybody, however strong or however poor. They have insisted that the right as fixed when the legislation was passed, known as the Pickett Act, be sustained. They do not think it ought to be increased or decreased since that time.

Mr. PHELAN. May I ask the Senator, does he recall the date of the Pickett Act?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not recall it exactly.

Mr. PHELAN. In the year 1907 it passed. I referred to the legislation passed in 1914, the most recent expression of the Congress.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, take 1914. A bill was passed leaving it discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior to lease these lands. The Secretary of the Interior presented the case to the Government against leasing lands through the Navy Department. After presenting that, after giving the views of the Navy as to what would occur and the necessities of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior refused to exercise that discretion. According to the act, if the discretion had not been given to him, I do not believe the bill would have passed the Senate. How is it in violation of law? How is there any injustice done? Here is a statement made by the Secretary of the Interior regarding the leasing of this land in the exercise of his discretion. He refused to make a lease of the naval lands. Is that an injustice? Is that wrong? Is not that carrying out the very language and purpose of the act?

Mr. PHELAN. It was not the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy; it was the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior that Congress provided for; and it was an inference, and there is a controversy, which it is needless to bring up here, between the two departments, showing that one has interfered in the operation of the other department, and for purposes of harmony it is better that we do not bring that up now. But I can not consider it an exercise of one's discretion when a man holding a coordinate office comes to your office and says you shall exercise your discretion this way. There was no voluntary exercise of discretion, and I am quite satisfied that there was duress of a mild character, because, after all, it would be a painful exhibition if the officers of the President's Cabinet can not agree upon matters of such vast importance as to the right of humble claimants in a remote district in California.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know what restrained the Secretary of the Interior from exercising his discretion and bringing these oil lands in the naval reserve. All I know is that Congress asked that the discretion be given him. Congress directed the Secretary of the Navy to take care of this reserve and appropriated money to defend that. What prevented the Secretary of the Navy from leasing this naval reserve? The Secretary of the Interior refused to do it. Now, can you say that the Secretary of the Interior is coerced, is bulldozed, and that improper influence was exercised by the Secretary of the Navy over the Secretary of the Interior. I think the Senator from California does not know the nerve, the backbone, and the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior; but it is patent to Congress that neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Secretary of the Navy was willing to lease the lands and let them be disposed of in that way. and it came here for Congress to dispose of it. The Secretary of the Navy has never asked that the law be changed. He has never sought to deprive these people of any of their rights. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I think, told me that when the Pickett bill was passed the very claimants, the people interested, came here and the bill was prepared by the people asking for relief. Was it not prepared by the oil people?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the so-called Pickett bill passed the Congress it was distinctly understood at that time that relief was to be given to the oil people. They were in Washington and agreed to the bill, thinking the bill covered their case. But the construction placed upon it by the Interior Department prevented the relief intended. Those same people have been coming to Congress ever since 1912 asking for remedial legislation. Such legislation has passed the Senate once or twice, but it never yet passed the House, or if it has passed the House it has failed in the Senate, and the oil people located within Naval Reserve No. 2 did not have the relief that they anticipated at the time of the passage of the Pickett Act.

Mr. SWANSON. A great many people got relief under that act, all that Congress would have given at that time, but they had a great deal of money made. Some cases were left out. Some cases of dummy interests could not be covered by it. Some cases of what are called constructive development. A man building a pipe line said he had in contemplation 5, 8, or 10 interests as well and the construction if carried out might cover all. There was, they said, not a liberal enough construction to say whether you were working all the time, but all these cases are cases to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior under the law. The law was broader than the general law at that time. Other people had mined under it and it seemed to me the law ought not to be changed. The only contention we have had is that we ought not in this bill giving general relief to take care of special cases which have been a subject of litigation. The people had notice not to go on this naval reserve. They had notice at that time that the Government proposed to take these lands and consequently we said that the naval reserve should be treated differently from other oil or public lands mentioned.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the Honolulu Oil Co. cases have been before the Secretary of the Interior for a number of years. There is a dispute between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy as to the rights of the company bill. If I understand it aright, the Honolulu Oil Co. is perfectly willing to have all its claims adjudicated by the Secretary of the Interior the same as most of them have already been. But the Secretary of the Navy does not want the claims of the company located in naval reserve No. 2 to pass to a patent. There is that difference between the heads of the two departments, and there is a conflict between them to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, the Senator wishes to be heard on this question of the transfer of construction work from one claim to another, and whether to continue or whether a man can stop for three or four years, going to Paris, London, and New York trying to get money to operate or whether he has to work on the claim or not. All that is involved. He has asked to be heard on this before it went to final passage; but this bill the Secretary of the Navy sent to me and asked me to introduce. I have not introduced it yet, because I want to look it over more myself and confer with those interested previous to introducing it, so that the final title shall be passed on by the Secretary of the Interior. This bill did not propose to change the law one iota in reference to that. I see no dereliction on the part of the Secretary of the Navy, who wants to protect the interests of the Government in this regard, who asked for opportunity for counsel to be heard, and the facts to be ascertained before the matter is definitely settled.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that the Commitee on Public Lands have held hearings two or three times within the last four or five years at which both the Interior Department and the Navy Department have represented their side of this very case. The Secretary of the Navy has appeared before that committee several times. I have not the testimony here, but I could secure it in a very few moments.

Mr. SWANSON. I have the testimony.

Mr. SMOOT. The attorneys of the Navy Department have also appeared and gave testimony before the committee, and also the attorney for the Secretary of the Interior, who testified as well, I think, as the Secretary himself, although I do not remember the Secretary testifying in this particular as to the dispute between the two. But if he did not testify it is because he did not want to testify, because every chance in the world was given the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy or any representative that they might want to have heard.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to remind the Senator from Utah that recent decisions in the controversy between the two Secretaries sustained the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I just told the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. What is the recent decision?

Mr. PHELAN. The recent decision of the Federal court.

Mr. SWANSON. You mean the circuit court?

Mr. PHELAN. The circuit court.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not have reference to the decision of the court.

Mr. SWANSON. The Secretary of the Navy and his counsel have insisted that what they did in the Honolulu case is a proper construction of the law. A man says he is going to extend his pipe line, which simply proves that, in his mind, he expected to extend it as much as the law will permit, and simply nullified the requirement of the man who worked on the section. As I understand, in the Honolulu case and in some of these cases as soon as the patent is issued it can not be rejected in the courts; that is final, I understand. Consequently, he has asked that in some of these cases before the patents were issued he should have an opportunity to investigate the facts and see whether there is any fraud and get the facts and have an opportunity to have the law construed in the courts, because it could not be construed in the courts if a patent was issued in any of these cases. I do not know whether he has asked that or not, but if he did, that would be the only purpose he would have where the court construed the Pickett Act as the law.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that under the law it is the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to look up all those questions, and if I am correctly informed the Secretary of the Interior has done all that work, and the reports are in from the department in which every patent that is there, every claim for not only homestead but mining claims and oil claims of all kinds, have to pass through before a patent can be issued.

Mr. SWANSON. That is true, but Congress has passed an appropriation—I do not know the amount of money—directing the Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney General to look especially to this naval reserve and protect the interests of the Government. Under that authorization and direction of Congress both have felt that they were obligated and ought to do so. As I was saying, the bill that was drawn by the Navy Department provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall pass finally on all these claims, as the present law provides. After that is done, then these oil lands will be condemned and the value ascertained, the Government paying for them.

I thought such a provision should be included in the bill as was embodied in the legislation under which the Government commandeered steel and other things; that there should be an opportunity for the Secretary of the Navy or the Attorney General to compromise cases which might be in dispute, and that claimants should not be required to go through the slow process of having condemnation proceedings determine the matter. Such provision was made in other war measures, including the naval law of 1916. Let the Government pay three-fourths of the price, and if the party is not willing to take what the Government ascertains to be right, let him have an opportunity, as he has in other cases, to go into the Court of Claims or elsewhere, as might be thought best, litigate the matter, and ascertain the value. That is what was done as to steel, and that is what has been done as to everything which the Navy and the Shipping Board have taken for construction. I think the same procedure ought to be followed as to these oil lands—nothing more and nothing less; that these parties should be given no more and no less. Give them the same privileges and the same rights regardless of to whom the property belongs. That is the purpose of the bill which I have in view and which I contemplate preparing and introducing when Congress reassembles after the holidays.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, inasmuch as the discussion on this particular subject has gone on, I should like to know whether or not the Senator from California is willing to accept the assurance of the Senator from Virginia in regard to his intention to introduce a special bill?

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, as I stated in the few remarks which I have heretofore made, I am quite willing to conditionally accept the assurance of the Senator from Virginia that the matter shall be brought up after the holidays for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the Senator from California takes his seat I should like to have an understanding in relation to his attitude on this amendment. Am I to understand the Senator from California to say that he is perfectly willing to accept the suggested amendment; that the provision shall go out of the bill, and that he is willing to take his chances, on behalf of the oil producers of California, who own claims within naval reserve No. 2, to secure the legislation which they desire and the relief for which they have asked so long by the bill that the Senator from Virginia shall hereafter offer?

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Utah, I desire to say that there are circumstances under which one must accept less than one desires. Such is the situation to-day. There is such a thing as the Oil Producers' Association of California, composed of nearly all the oil men, who are interested in the protection of their rights. That association does not include the Honolulu Oil Co. and one or two others. The only protest which I have received has been from the Honolulu Oil Co. The Oil Association, as well as the Honolulu company, would much prefer to have section 16 of this bill enacted and settle this question for all time. I am told, however, by Senators of greater experience that it is impracticable, in view of the fact that this bill has to be passed by both the Senate and the other House, if we expect this legislation to be enacted before the holiday recess, to insist upon the consideration of that matter now. I therefore accept in good faith the promise of the Senator from Virginia that the matter shall be taken up and discussed after the holidays, and therefore I will not object now to the Senator's amendment eliminating naval reserves No. 2 and No. 1 and No. 3 from the provisions of this bill, in order that the bill may pass without serious objection, and the vast lands outside the reserve be developed on the plan of the leasing system.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from California is satisfied that the proposed amendment shall be accepted, I shall certainly not interpose any objection to naval reserve No. 2 being located in that State; but I wish to say, in order that there shall be no misunderstanding about the matter, that the Honolulu Oil Co. is not the only company which objects to this provision going out of the bill. I have received a number of telegrams from California and I have seen a number of oil people from California, and they are not satisfied with this program. Of course, I can not say whether the parties to whom I refer have seen the Senator from California and have finally decided that it is best to agree to this program rather than the legislation for which they have fought during so many years and which, it seems, might be consummated at this time. Therefore, I am going to rely upon what the Senator from California says as expressing the opinion of the oil people of that State and shall make no further objection.

I did intend, Mr. President, to have something to say upon the amendment proposing to eliminate this feature from the pending bill, but I shall content myself by now saying that some years ago these parties came to Congress asking for relief. It was shortly after it was decided that the so-called Pickett bill did not give them the relief we all thought it did. I think we have passed this same provision—or substantially the same—some three times through the Senate since that time. I remember once we put it upon an appropriation bill, if I am not mistaken, and it would have remained there but for the fact that at the last moment there was a disagreement as to what the wording of the amendment really meant. Some felt that it did not cover all the cases and would be construed by the Interior Department as not covering the cases which they desired covered. So it was finally decided to allow the matter to die in the last hours of the session.

The Senator from California may be right—that it is the best policy now to adopt this amendment and rely upon the promise which has been given that some relief will be granted in a bill yet to be introduced and acted upon which will be acceptable to the Secretary of the Navy. I know that the Secretary of the Interior and all of the officials of the Interior Department have been in favor of this legislation. They believe that the locations made in naval oil reserve No. 2 are mostly regular and were made in good faith; that there was no fraud connected with the greater part of them. Many of those titles, as the Senator knows, have been passed upon.

Mr. President, I will say nothing more about this amendment, so far as I am concerned, upon the assurance of the Senator from California that it is the best policy for the people of California that the amendment should be adopted. I shall not even object to its being voted upon at this time.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, just one word. The Senator from Utah should clearly understand my position. I believe that this relief should be given, but it seems impracticable that it should be passed at this time for this reason: Outside naval reserve No. 2, which contains 30,000 acres, there are 1,000,000 acres of public land containing oil. This bill provides for the development under a leasing system of 1,000,000 acres of oil-bearing land. The oil men of California do not wish to stand in the way of the general development of oil-bearing land, and are therefore willing to wait until after the holiday recess for the consideration of their special rights in naval reserve No. 2. I have been in communication with the attorney in Washington of the Oil Producers' Association of California, and he says that the attitude of that association is by all means to get provision for relief; but if insistence upon such a provision should defeat the larger measure providing for the development of 1,000,000 acres of land so needed in the country at this time, that association would not stand in the way. So I say the only protest I have had has been from the Honolulu Oil Co., which is outside the association. I am, therefore, willing to accept, as I said in good faith, the promise of the Senator from Virginia and let the matter go over until after the holiday recess.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, living, as I do, on the Atlantic seacoast, I have never claimed any special knowledge of the questions which concern Senators particularly from the Western and the Pacific Coast States, but I recall with a good deal of interest the excited debates we have had on this question at former sessions of the Senate. I recall particularly the vehemence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] whenever the word "lease" was uttered. Then the Senator was instantly on his feet and denounced it as not being in the public interest. The Senator from Colorado seems to be silent in this debate. For some reason or other he has apparently changed his mind, and I should like to know exactly upon what ground that change of mind has been brought about on the part of the Senator from Colorado, and perhaps on the part of other Senators.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like exactly to explain the situation to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield for that purpose, for I want information.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have an antipathy to a leasing system; I do not believe it is right; I do not believe that it is expedient; I do not believe that it is practicable; but there has come a proposition which is an alternative; which permits the man who makes the entry to buy or to lease. Inasmuch as that proposition comes to us I feel that it is wise that the legislation shall be accepted, even if it does permit a lease under some circumstances.

I have always felt that no man would lease a piece of property on the public domain if he had the ability to buy it and my opponent, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who is the author of the other bill, was always of the opinion that nobody would buy and invest the amount of capital that would be required, but that he would lease, my position being that nobody would lend any money on a lease. So far as I am concerned I hope this development will take place; and I hope it will take place under a purchase system; but in the event that it does not, if the other system is more acceptable to the entryman, if a leasing system is not forced onto the entryman, I do not see why it is not a wise thing to let this alternative proposition be presented to him. Then we shall surely get the development to which we in the West think we are entitled. It is for that reason that I am supporting this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been told by at least one Senator that that alternative proposition is not actually contained in the bill in the shape in which the Senator from Colorado states it. But, however that may be, under the alternative proposition leases can be made. The Senator from Colorado will not deny that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; leases can be made under it, but I am satisfied that no leases will be made under it. We have had experience along this line in Alaska. I made the prediction that there would not be a single lease taken out in Alaska. Nobody is going to lend money for the purpose of buying great machinery costing probably a half million or a million dollars and have for security only a lease which may be forfeited to the Government. That has been true in Alaska with respect to the leasing system. For that reason I believe that giving this alternative proposition would produce a development of the West.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to section 7, the portion of the bill relating to phosphates, which reads:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease or sell to any person qualified under this act any lands belonging to the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado will agree with me that if the Secretary of the Interior should, as a matter of policy, be opposed to the sales system, there would be no opportunity whatever for a man to purchase under that clause. The land would never be offered for sale at all. Tender of the land to the public for sale could not be forced. The Secretary of the Interior may authorize leasing or he may authorize selling, but if he sees fit not to offer the land for sale there is no way by which the public can enforce a sale or compel the Secretary of the Interior to tender the land to the public for sale.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will examine the first——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield, briefly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator from Idaho will examine the first part of the bill, in section 2, he will find that there is a provision that the Secretary of the Interior, if application is made for the purchase, "shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding," just as he is authorized to call for competitive bids for a lease. That is, as to coal lands. It is true that the wording is not exactly the same as to other lands; but I take it that the Secretary of the Interior wants development; and I take it that he is not going, when this power is given to him to sell or lease, to say, "I will not sell, but will lease," when, in my judgment, he will not get a single bidder under a leasing proposition.

There has been no development whatever in Alaska; and yet the prediction was made that men were in Washington at the time that legislation was passed for the purposes of entering into leases with the Government. Men will not enter into leases, for under them they can not raise money to finance their enterprises.

For these reasons, this bill being based upon an alternative proposition, I am willing to risk the fact that men will not take land under the leasing system; and not only that, but, if they do not, that the Secretary of the Interior will be in duty bound, under this very bill, to offer it for sale. Under these circumstances, I am certain that we are going to get development.

I have not changed my mind one particle as to the wisdom of the sales system. I am satisfied that we can not secure development under a leasing system. We have had a wonderful success in this country under the sales system, and it seems to me that it would be very unwise to change to a leasing system; but I recognize the fact that the House of Representatives particularly are insisting upon a leasing system and nothing else. We have got to make some concessions if we are going to have this great domain developed; and when the proposition comes to me from the Senator from Montana, that he is willing to take the alternative, I feel that it is wisdom on the part of the Congress of the United States to accept it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that Senators may know what kind of coal land will be for sale, I want to call attention to the following provision of section 2 of the bill:

SEC. 2. That any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State, or any municipality of any State, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State of the Union—not otherwise appropriated or reserved by competent authority.

Now note—

Coal land in the United States is reserved already and withdrawn from entry.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator knows that the coal lands were reserved at one time——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have the floor——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to answer the statement just made by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Utah wishes to yield, and has the right to yield under the circumstances, I have no objection; but I want about one minute more and I will be through.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I want to say right here that there was a time when all of these coal lands were reserved. The Secretary of the Interior knew years ago that the law relating to reservations contemplated temporary reservations, and every act provided that they should be temporary; he knew that holding coal lands under a reservation order lasting for a long time would be illegal. So, in order to overcome that, under the classification clause, it was concluded 10 years ago to classify these lands and to place a value upon them, because the act of Congress provided that they should be sold for not less than $10 an acre if more than 15 miles from a railroad and for not less than $20 an acre if within 15 miles of a railroad. The secretary had valuations made, and as high as $500 an acre value was placed on these lands. While in effect that keeps these lands from being taken up, it is not a reservation which would come within the operation of the exception.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to add just a word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Most of the western lands, Mr. President, that have been classified have never been by proclamation of the President made open to entry and, therefore, we will find them "reserved by competent authority." What the Senator says about withdrawals being temporary, of course, is true. The Pickett Act itself specifically states that the withdrawals shall be temporary, but since the passage of the Pickett Act in 1910 no attention has been paid to the word temporary, and there are withdrawn to-day millions of acres of land that were withdrawn immediately after the passage of the Pickett Act and some years before. It may be that if some one would go into court and have the word "temporary" construed, it would be decided that 7 to 15 years would be long enough to constitute a temporary withdrawal; but I doubt very much whether anybody wants to undertake the expense of such a contest, particularly after the lesson which has been taught in the past that in going to court upon any of these withdrawals very little success has attended the effort.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observed that the Senator from Colorado suggested that a price as high as $500 per acre had been fixed upon some of these lands. In this bill the price is fixed at from $10 to $20.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; if the Senator will read the provisions of the bill he will find that it is not less than $10 or not less than $20 an acre.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And then the land is to be put up and sold at auction, so that the actual value of the land can be ascertained and paid to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I have been here too long to be deceived, not by any suggestion of that kind, but by any argument that when a price is fixed in a bill of not less than a certain amount it is going to cost any more. These lands are going to be sold at from $10 to $20 an acre beyond a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the law at the present time, and one has a right to enter the land right now, except as to the restriction upon the amount of land, 160 acres being the maximum that can be taken up now. The valuation has been changed. The department has said, "The law provides for a price of not less than $10 an acre," so the Secretary has put it at $50 or $100 an acre, and where it says that a price shall be charged of not less than $20 an acre he has put it at $400 or $300 an acre.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why did you not have that put in the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the way it is now, and we did not want it to be framed in that way. We want the provision so shaped that the fair value of the land will be paid. We have been protesting against that very thing, because nobody would take up land with any such valuation, and consequently it was a barrier to any development whatever.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not laboring under any illusions regarding this matter. I am satisfied that somebody is going to make a very handsome profit out of this transaction. I hope that it will be men who deserve consideration, and not men who are simply engaged in speculation at the expense of the Government. But what I particularly wanted to add to the observation I made a few moments ago was that inasmuch as the Secretary of the Interior is in favor of leasing, and has made that known on all occasions and at all times, it seems to me absurd to suppose that the leasing system will be abandoned and that the system of selling these lands will be adopted.

The Secretary of the Interior has great influence in all these matters, and it will be found, in my judgment, when this bill goes on the statute books and is being administered, that the leasing system will be in vogue to an extent that would have horrified the Senator from Colorado a few months ago, but which I think he is going to accept with complacency at the present time.

Mr. President, I was converted in a debate that was held here on a former occasion to the belief that the leasing system was an abomination. I did not entertain that view until the debate commenced. I had not examined the matter very carefully, but having heard the eloquent appeals of the Senator from Colorado in favor of a different system from that of leasing made on this floor day after day with a vehemence that did him credit, because I believed he was honest and sincere in it, I confess that I am more than astounded to learn to-day that the Senator from Colorado has yielded his convictions and is now in favor of a system that he so earnestly condemned a few months ago. I was then converted particularly to the belief that the leasing system was wrong. I have not changed my mind, and while my vote probably will be in a very large minority when this bill is passed, I shall continue to hold that belief just as I entertained it during that memorable debate and shall vote against the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say in answer to the Senator that I am sorry that he believes that I have changed my position in any particular. I have recognized the fact that the leasing system is an evil, and I recognize the fact that it was never contemplated by our Government that we should have a leasing system, yet we are confronted with the fact that a leasing bill has been brought over to the Senate of the United States several times nearly unanimously from the House of Representatives; we are confronted with the fact that in the absence of some legislation these lands are not going to be developed at all. The Ferris leasing bill came over from the House not once but three times, with an enormous majority in the House. My contention is that we want development. I do not want it to be had under a leasing system, but I do want it to be had under a selling system. We have a provision in this bill that permits the man who is to develop the country to determine for himself which he will do; in other words, whether he will buy or whether he will lease, and it seems to me, inasmuch as compromises have got to be made at some time, that it was wise to have made it in this instance.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 193) authorizing the payment of salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1917, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to give a notice which I gave in part a few moments ago without looking at the rules. I wish to amplify it. I give notice that on to-morrow morning I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution providing for a recess of Congress over the holidays was agreed to, and I shall also make a separate motion to recall the resolution from the House of Representatives for further consideration in the Senate.

MINING OF COAL, ETC., ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, owing to pressing duties of a public character, I have had but limited opportunity to examine the provisions of the bill under consideration; but as I interpret its provisions I am compelled to state that I am opposed to it, to its fundamental principles, as well as to the details relating to its execution. I stated to the Senator having the bill in charge that the bill was repugnant to my ideas and that before a vote was taken I should seek an opportunity to discuss some of its provisions. I had not intended making any observations to-day, but at the time amendments were being considered I expected to discuss some phases of the questions involved.

A few moments ago I asked the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] a question with respect to the naval oil reserves, and he with knightly courage rushed to the defense of the Secretary of the Navy. My knowledge of the situation in California, so far as it is affected or may be affected by this bill, is not extensive and consists largely of what I have learned from hastily reading the report submitted by the Senator from Nevada accompanying the bill which we are now considering. I have also hurriedly read a number of the decisions referred to in the report just mentioned.

I regret that the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] has assented to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Nevada. As I view the facts in the matter, I regard it as the part of wisdom, as well as a legislative duty, for Congress to dispose of the questions involved in the oil fields and in the oil locations in California, so far as this may be done by legislative enactment. As I understand the situation, in brief it is this: A number of years ago a large number of qualified locators entered upon unoccupied public domain of the United States which contained oil, and under the placer laws made locations. They went into possession of their respective claims and began the necessary work for the discovery of oil. Proper locations were filed and the laws in all respects were complied with. While they were in possession and were diligently engaged in digging and boring for oil President Taft, on September 29, 1909, issued a proclamation reading as follows:

> Temporary petroleum withdrawal No. 5.—In aid of proposed legislation affecting the use and disposition of the petroleum deposits on the public domain, all public lands in the accompanying lists are hereby temporarily withdrawn from all forms of location, settlement, selection, filing, entry, or disposal under the mineral or nonmineral public-land laws. All locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination.

Many of those in possession had spent large sums of money in their efforts to discover oil and were acting in the utmost good faith. The geology of the district indicated that oil was present at depth and that in due season the oil sands would be reached. It was the view of most of the eminent lawyers of the United States who gave the question consideration that the power to dispose of public lands rested in Congress alone and that the act of the President was an act of usurpation. Indeed, as I am advised, President Taft himself had serious doubts as to the legality of his position. Acting under the advice of counsel, many of the locators continued their expenditures, as a result of which upon various claims oil was discovered. Still other locators construed the words of the proclamation "all locations and claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination" to mean that, where they had made their locations in harmony with the law, even though there had been no actual discovery of oil, there was no intention to include such locations within the proclamation; or, in other words, that the proclamation, were it valid, specifically excluded from its provisions those locations which in all respects complied with the statute except that oil or gas had not actually been discovered at the date of the proclamation.

Of course, if the act of the President in issuing the proclamation was without authority, it could in no way affect the rights of the locators or those in possession as their successors; and if they continued in possession and made discovery of oil at any time thereafter, if there were no intervening rights, the validity of their locations could not be questioned. They would have vested rights of which they could not be deprived by Executive or legislative enactment.

It is a matter of common knowledge that under the mining laws of the United States those who are qualified to make entry and who enter upon the public domain and locate under the mining laws acquire property of which they can not be deprived. The claims held by them were property and are the subject of devise and alienation as other real estate might be. Of course, if the locator fails to comply with the law, he may forfeit his rights to the located claims. The Supreme Court of the United States finally upheld the action of the President. I hope it will not be considered as gravely improper to remark that the opinion of the dissenting justices more nearly represents the views of the bar and voices practically the unanimous opinion of the West. The majority opinion rests upon the theory of estoppel. The view seems to be that if an executive department of the Government violates the law and is guilty of usurpations, if the violations and usurpations are continued sufficiently long, they are sanctified into a right.

However, Congress, desiring to fully protect the bona fide locators upon the lands embraced within the Executive proclamation of withdrawal, passed what is known as the Pickett Act on the 25th of June, 1910. This act provided:

That the rights of any person who, at the date of any order of withdrawal heretofore or hereafter made, is a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands, and who at such date is in diligent prosecution of work leading to discovery of oil or gas, shall not be affected or impaired by such order so long as such occupant or claimant shall continue in diligent prosecution of said work.

These locators, fortified by the Pickett Act, continued in possession, made further improvements and additional expenditures, and produced oil in abundance. Notwithstanding these facts and notwithstanding the further fact that many of the locators had applied for patents and the Interior Department had ruled that they were entitled to patents, the Secretary of the Navy, or officers within his department, acting through the Department of Justice, brought suits against the locators or their successors in interest, and in many instances had receivers appointed. The litigation thus commenced and the threatening attitude of the Interior Department and the Department of Justice in other instances where suits were not brought resulted in great loss, damage, and injury to persons rightfully in possession of oil claims. In the suits brought the contention, as I understand the situation, was made that the Executive act of withdrawal deprived locators of any rights they may have had in the claims located by them, because at the time of such act of withdrawal no discovery of oil within the contemplation of the statute had actually been made.

The contention was further made that even though oil had been discovered and expenditures aggregating many thousands of dollars had been made by individuals the locators or their successors had no rights because they had not been "diligent in the prosecution of work leading to the discovery of oil or gas." A narrow, inequitable, and unlawful construction was placed upon the law and upon the acts of the occupants of the mining claims by the representatives of the Navy Department and the Department of Justice.

I submit that many of these suits exhibit a cynical contempt for the law and a brutal disregard for justice and fair dealing. Many locators were wronged and robbed by the cruel and unwarranted proceedings of the department just referred to. That some locations were fraudulent and invalid may be true, but that many of them were valid is apparent from the decision of the court in the Mutual Oil Co. case recently decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals. In the decision just referred to the contentions of the Government were swept aside.

I might say in passing that the record in these cases show the vexatious and oppressive conduct of the Government and the tyrannous bureaucracy to which the West has been subjected under the system that has grown up and is fast being developed in our Government. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has just stated that he regrets to learn that the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], who has been for many years the conspicuous opponent of the encroachments and tyrannies of the Interior Department, and who has stood against any scheme which involved the leasing of the public domain by the Federal Government, had abandoned that position and announced his support of this bill. The Senator from Colorado knows perhaps more than any other man the evils of a paternalistic policy by the Government and is cognizant of the wrongs which have been inflicted upon the West, as a result of which its development has been hindered and its prosperity greatly interfered with. It is apparent that by this bill an iniquitious leasing system is to be fastened upon the West. We have been able to defeat it in the past, but it appears that the triumph of this vicious policy is about to be realized and that the West must bow in humiliation to this undeserved and shameful servitude. Before concluding my remarks I shall discuss with more or less detail the mineral policy of our Government and the evils of a leasing system, and call attention to this radical departure from what I feel justified in denominating a historic policy which has been productive of such beneficent results not only to the West but to the Nation.

But first I desire to briefly comment upon the provisions of the bill dealing with what are called "naval oil reserves," and particularly the oil reserves in California. I think that it is unwise and unjust to fail to effectually dispose of this entire question here and now if the general provisions of this bill are to be enacted into law. I am not sure that any legislation upon our part is required in order to protect the rights of the locators to whom I have referred. However, it would not be inappropriate to enact some legislation that will protect bona fide locators from vexatious, unfounded, and oppressive litigation. As I interpret this bill it states that if certain locators or claimants will abandon their claims they will be permitted to obtain title to a portion of the same. At any rate, the situation calls for additional legislation to protect the rights of bona fide locators within the oil reserves, or further enactment to restrain executive departments from inaugurating crusades to harass and oppress individuals. I am of opinion that the facts disclosed with respect to the subject of this legislation call for a stern rebuke of the unprecedented and unwarranted usurpations upon the part of the Navy Department. It is astonishing to hear the statements openly made in the Senate by distinguished Senators that Congress is unable to pass any other bill than the one under consideration because of the opposition of the Navy Department.

It should be humiliating for the Senate to confess that some executive branch of the Government is so puissant that it can compel legislation desired by it and prevent legislation desired by a majority of the Members of Congress.

I desire to briefly call attention to a few of the provisions of the bill under consideration before discussing the fundamental and basic theory and policy upon which it rests.

Section 2 provides that any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation, and so forth, shall have the right to enter by legal subdivisions, vacant coal lands of the United States not "otherwise appropriated or reserved by competent authority." As I understand, millions of acres of coal lands have been withdrawn from entry by the Government and are therefore "otherwise appropriated or reserved by competent authority," and accordingly would not be subject to entry. These acts of withdrawal of coal lands by Executive order have been numerous in the past, as a result, as stated, millions of acres of coal lands have been withddrawn from entry and locked under the seal of Federal control. Lands still remaining within these reserves are not subject to entry under this act. The same section further provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands—that is, those that are subject to entry—"through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair."

The able Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has announced as one of the reasons why he will support this bill, that it permits the purchase by individuals or corporations of coal lands, and does not submit a leasing bill exclusively.

Mr. President, I respectfully insist that this provision just referred to nullifies the terms of the section providing for vacant coal lands to be entered. First, the land must be "advertised," and there must be "competitive bidding." Second, the Secretary of the Interior may reject all bids if they are deemed to be "unfair."

It is a matter of common knowledge that the Interior Department has classified large areas of coal lands and offered them for sale at prices which the department fixed, and which presumably the Secretary of the Interior considered to be "fair." A price lower than that fixed for these lands manifestly would be deemed by the Secretary of the Interior to be too low, and therefore "unfair." Under the policy which now obtains in the Interior Department, but a very limited number of sales of coal lands have been made since the inauguration of this practice. If the opening up of the coal lands upon the public domain is desired, then it is clear that this bill will not accomplish that desirable result. The coal lands upon the public domain have been subject, for years, to entry under prices fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, but we have awakened to the fact that these prices have not been paid by the public and the coal lands therefore have not been sought by the public.

What price will be deemed "unfair" or what figure will be regarded as "fair" by the Secretary of the Interior? There is no restriction or limitation upon his discretion. This bill with greater propriety could be denominated "a bill to prevent the sale of coal lands, to increase the power of the Interior Department, to foster bureaucracy, to destroy the mining system which has brought prosperity to the West and to the Nation, and to seal up a portion of the mineral lands of the United States."

The system of competitive bidding is obnoxious to those who are familiar with our public-land system and must prove highly objectionable to those who desire the development of the West and the general prosperity of all classes. It has never been the policy of our Government to treat the public lands as a commodity to be sold in a competitive market.

The statesmen of our Nation who have addressed themselves to the question of the method of disposing of the public lands have with practical unanimity taken the view that the public lands, whether agricultural or mineral, should be freely disposed of to the people; that the smallest possible charge should be made therefor, because the Government and the Nation generally would be compensated ultimately in the increase in national wealth and taxable property and in the development and general prosperity that would result to all the people.

A competitive system will put the lands in the hands of those possessing wealth; it will deny to the poor man or the man of small means an opportunity to acquire coal lands. This provision of the bill is discriminatory and is legislation in the interest of the rich and against the man of small means. In my opinion it is unwise, undemocratic, and un-American.

Of course it is obvious that whatever additional price is paid to the Government for the lands must be added to the price for which the coal is sold, so that in the end the consumer is the one who will bear the burden.

Section 2 is also objectionable because it prevents individuals or associations owning separate parcels of land from cooperating in any manner to produce economies or for the public good. This section would prevent the owners of two or more properties from establishing a selling agency, no matter the advantages to the public in the way of reduced prices that would result therefrom. If the coal of each company was different and it would be mutually advantageous to each to have one agency sell the same, such act is prohibited. Two or more companies could not unite or cooperate in the construction of coal bins or switches or railroad tracks or in the operation of any form of transportation. It compels each corporation or individual to operate in "splendid," though destructive, isolation. All persons familiar with the development of coal lands know that the initial outlay required to produce coal is considerable. Railroads, switches, bins, tipples, and many other improvements costing large sums are indispensable. Two properties adjoining could unite or cooperate in the construction of yards, bins, and tracks with mutual advantage and in such a way as to benefit the public.

This is an age of cooperation and unity of action. Industrially it is essential that there should be cooperation for the purpose of producing economies which will result in reducing the cost of production, thus benefiting the consuming public. There can be cooperation and unity of effort without monopoly. It is a mistaken policy that prompts the proposed legislation found in section 2 of this bill.

In the same section is the further provision that any ownership or interest forbidden by the section which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer. Under this provision if an individual by descent obtained a share of stock in one coal company from his father and another share in a different company from his mother, he would be unable to retain both for a longer period than two years, and this notwithstanding both companies were engaged in purely intrastate business. The Federal Government by this bill is entering the domain belonging to the State. It seeks to control the ownership of property, the right of descent, the procedure of probate courts, and the sovereign powers of sovereign States. To those who believe that the States are sovereign and that they have delegated to the Federal Government certain of their sovereign powers, the proposition will come as a rude surprise that the Federal Government in a matter, which is so unquestionably local and domestic as that involved in the question under discussion, is charged with control of the same.

It is further provided that if any association or stockholder of a corporation violates any of the provisions of the section, it or he shall be guilty of a felony, and punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding two years, or both. If two or more corporations are interested in one track or pipe line or power house, or in a common agency for the sale of their products, or unite in any way for the public welfare, the stockholders of both corporations are guilty of a felony and subject to the penalties just referred to. The Federal Government by this bill is put into the States and enforces penal statutes with respect to acts and conduct of a purely local and domestic character. It was never intended by the framers of the Constitution that the Federal Government should enact a general penal code. Its functions are national, not local. It is not invested with municipal power, nor should it be clothed with authority to provide and enforce police regulations within the States.

Section 5 of the bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease deposits of coal or lignite through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, in blocks or tracts of 40 acres each or multiples thereof.

This provision must be repugnant to any person who understands the genius of our institutions and is familiar with the moral and spiritual qualities of the American people, from which have sprung the inspiration that has vitalized this Republic and produced the vigorous, alert, and progressive business men of this Nation.

It has been frequently said that Congress no longer legislates; that it delegates its legislative powers to some bureau, department, or agency, and clothes the same with plenary power to deal with the entire subject committed to its care. Of course, there are matters that can not be fully covered by legislation, and authority in some instances must be conferred upon agencies or instrumentalities of the Government to discharge functions that apparently are legislative. But the distinctions have been repeatedly pointed out by the courts and it is not necessary or proper that I should pause to discuss them now. It is, however, a regrettable tendency upon the part of the National Legislature to delegate power which it should exercise to subordinate and inferior executive tribunals. Nothing so makes for an offensive and autocratic bureaucracy as the unlimited power of regulation and control. The appetite for power increases with the exercise of power. The history of all nations furnishes indubitable proof of the fact that executive departments constantly reach out for increased power. A department as it grows takes on new authority and seeks executive aggrandizement. It creates a multitude of bureaus, and they in turn seek for entrance into new fields and reach out for additional authority. And the bureaus in time divide and each division enters into another field, and it there seeks exploitation and power. An examination of any of the departments of our Government conclusively proves the truth of what I have stated.

An illustration occurs to my mind in support of this statement. A few years ago the Interior Department created the Bureau of Mines. This department has enlarged its field of operations and its jurisdiction until it has reached almost the stature of a Cabinet department.

It is unwise to give unlimited power to inferior tribunals to "regulate and control." The West has suffered from the exercise of this regulatory power exercised by the Interior Department and in some instances by the Department of Agriculture. Great abuses have been perpetrated in the administration of the forest reserve, and wrongs and injustice have been suffered by the people by the narrow, iniquitous, and oppressive rules and regulations promulgated and enforced by the Interior and Agricultural Departments.

In the section just referred to the Secretary of the Interior is empowered to adopt whatever general regulations he may desire with respect to the leasing of the lands mentioned therein. He may adopt any method he pleases for the purpose of leasing such lands. I submit that such a provision is unwise and dangerous; that it commits too much power to a department.

If every Secretary of the Interior were familiar with the West, had broad and comprehensive vision as to the future of the West, understood the policies most conducive to the public welfare, and should surround himself with wise and just subordinates, the consequences might not be serious. But human experience demonstrates that ideal persons are seldom found and that legislation should be shaped with a knowledge that finite, infirm, and often despotic and dishonest persons will be intrusted with power and be called upon to administer the law.

Section 5 provides that leases shall be for "indeterminate" periods, conditioned upon "continued operation of the mine or mines," and that there shall be "readjustment" of terms and conditions at the end of 20 years. It is not clear that the lease shall be for 20 years or for an "indeterminate" period. When a "readjustment" of the terms and conditions occurs there is no limitation upon the power or authority of the Secretary of the Interior in respect thereto. What the terms and conditions in the "readjustment" may be, we are unable to determine. All power in the matter is left with the Interior Department.

Section 5 provides that for the privilege of mining, extracting, and disposing of the coal in the lands covered by his lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, and that in addition there shall be an annual rental, payable at the beginning of each year. The bill does not provide what the terms of the lease shall be or the amount of royalties that may be charged. The Interior Department determines all these questions. Unlimited, unrestrained power and authority and discretion are conferred. It is obvious that coal lands will not be developed under this bill. Under the hysterical demands of the country a leasing bill was enacted by Congress with respect to the coal lands of Alaska. It was jubilantly affirmed that such legislation would destroy monopoly and result in producing coal in such abundance as to satisfy all the demands of the people and at prices greatly below the existing market. This legislation called for additional governmental machinery, which necessitated additional appropriations. It fastened more firmly bureaucracy with its barnacles upon the country. It called for investigations and surveys and classifications and agents and inspectors and employees; but all this machinery produced no coal. I understand that a few leases were executed, but the whole scheme was an ignominious and wretched failure.

Capital will not invest in leases that are held by such a precarious tenure that they may be forfeited at the whim and caprice of some subordinate, or the tenure of which will be effected by the report of some narrow, prejudiced, and incompetent employee, fastened upon the Government in many instances by a civil-service system, which under the law can only result in making incompetency a fine art, and which devotes a portion of its energies in carrying on a propaganda in favor of pensioning those who are in office under its terms.

Section 7 deals with phosphates and is subject to the same criticism I have urged against the provisions of the bill relating to coal lands. Sections 11 to 17, inclusive, deal with oil and gas. Section 11 provides that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe to grant a prospecting permit for oil or gas, which is good for two years; but the permittee is limited to prospecting upon 640 acres of land if the same is situated within 20 miles of a producing oil and gas well, and to 2,560 acres if the land is over 20 miles from any producing oil or gas well.

My first criticism of this section is that the Secretary of the Interior is vested with unlimited power and may prescribe whatever "rules and regulations" he desires in regard to the leasing of the land. The fixing arbitrarily of the 20-mile limit, to determine whether the permit shall extend to 640 acres or 2,560 acres, is not scientific or logical. The purpose, I assume, is to encourage the development of oil and to induce explorations within fields where oil has not yet been discovered. If there is to be a limitation in the permit, it should be governed or determined rather by the question as to whether the explorations are to be within the geological structure of a producing well or outside of such structure or formation. There are far greater risks and hazards in operating in a field with entirely dissimilar geological formations, though distant only 2 or 3 miles from a producing well, than if the explorations are 20 miles or more away, but within the same geological structure or formation as that within which the producing well is located.

Section 12 provides that if upon "establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered" within the lands embraced within such permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced within the prospecting permit. I submit that this section confers too much discretion and power upon the Secretary of the Interior. In providing that the value of the deposits shall be "established to the satisfaction" of the Secretary of the Interior, it means, of course, to the "satisfaction" of the agents, inspectors, and subordinates who will go into the operating fields and make investigation. The Secretary of the Interior must depend largely upon their reports and their investigations. The experience of those who have sought patents for mining claims or agricultural lands has brought convincing proof that these agents and subordinates of the Interior Department are unsympathetic with the efforts to procure title, and regard with distrust, which they do not conceal, all who are seeking to obtain patent from the Government. The prevailing spirit is that those who locate upon public lands and seek to initiate any right therein or obtain title thereto are enemies of the Government and are archconspirators with some one to defraud the United States.

How will it be established to the "satisfaction" of the Secretary of the Interior that the deposits of oil or gas are "valuable," and what quantum of proof is required? What are "valuable" deposits of oil or gas? Examples are numerous where Government officials have held that mining locations were invalid because the minerals thereon were "not valuable." Yet in many of such cases the properties were operated and with profit to the owner and with benefit and advantage to the community and to the Nation. A few years ago porphyritic ores containing 1 or 2 per cent, or even a higher per cent, of copper were regarded as being valueless. Yet those same "valueless" properties are producing millions of tons of copper per annum and yielding large returns upon the investment. There has always been a conflict between the courts, interpreting the statutes in a fair and liberal manner, and the agents, inspectors, and employees of the Interior Department in regard to the question of whether a discovery was valid or not. The agents of the Interior Department are constantly holding discoveries to be invalid because some ignorant subaltern or inspector determines that the ledge or vein upon which the discovery is made does not contain a "valuable deposit." The provision I am now discussing can be made the instrument of great wrong and injustice to a permittee who has expended thousands of dollars in his efforts to find a producing well. To surround a permittee with uncertainties and to subject him to the whims and caprices of employees of the Government, most if not all of whom will be antagonistic to him and seek for some pretext to cancel the permit or to restrict his rights thereunder, will not be conducive to the development of oil fields.

It is urged in support of this measure that it is a war measure; that the needs of the Government and its allies are so imperative that every possible inducement should be offered to increase the oil production. Of course, everyone knows that the sensible and sure way to increase the output of oil is to restore the withdrawn oil lands to public entry and to remove the clammy, oppressive hand of the Government from the adventuresome persons who are willing to go upon the public domain and hazard their money in the costly efforts to find producing wells. The development of the mineral wealth as well as the agricultural sections of our country has always followed a liberal policy by the Government. If it were known that tomorrow any qualified locator could enter upon public lands of the United States containing oil or gas and make entries under the placer law of the United States, thousands of energetic, adventuresome American citizens would be in readiness to make locations, and with the utmost enthusiasm and intelligent effort would prosecute the work of developing their locations, and within a short time streams of crude oil would be pouring from the ground, filling the refineries, and passing into the hands of the Government and the people for necessary consumption.

Section 12 offers further impediments to the development of oil lands and also contains a provision that appears to me to be unjustified. The permittee who may be compelled to spend many thousands of dollars to discover oil is entitled to patent only one-fourth of the land embraced in his prospecting permit. The residue of the tract covered by the permit is to be disposed of "by the Secretary of the Interior through compensation paid or such other methods as he may adopt by general regulation." No preference right is given to the permittee. It is a matter of common knowledge that most of the oil fields have been discovered by some person who has gone into an unknown region and at great expense and after suffering incredible hardships discovered oil. It would seem that a person who was a pioneer and was successful in opening up an oil field should have the preference right to acquire the entire tract embraced within his permit.

Section 15 provides that he has no preferential right but is limited to 640 acres, and if he acquires more he must go into an open market and bid against those who may enter the lists against him. Besides being unjust, this section is calculated to place the oil lands in the hands of corporations or individuals of wealth. No man of limited means could successfully enter the contest and bid for the possession of a tract upon which a well had been discovered. The result is apparent, that this legislation will force into the hands of the rich corporations or individuals of great resources the oil properties of our country. The provision is objectionable because of the indefinite and uncertain terms that will be or may be exacted by the Secretary of the Interior. He may adopt "other methods" in making disposition of the land. What those "other methods" are no one can determine or conjecture. No two Senators could agree as to what terms might be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior in dealing with these lands. One Secretary might adopt one method and another Secretary of the Interior might prescribe an entirely different method of handling or disposing of or dealing with oil lands. The section further provides that the Secretary of the Interior may provide general "rules and regulations" concerning leasing and other conditions, but what the regulations and rules are no one can determine. Senators are as much in the dark in regard to what they may or will be as they are with respect to the methods that may be adopted concerning the leasing.

Section 28 of the bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to incorporate in every lease a provision giving the President the right to "regulate the price of such mineral extracted and sold from the leased premises." And a further provision that the lease shall provide that the President shall have the right to "regulate the disposal of such mineral procured under such lease as to secure its distribution and use wholly within the limits of the United States or its possessions." It would be, perhaps, an act of folly to prophesy what result this section will have upon the development of the mineral lands mentioned in this bill. But it would seem that such provisions must have a deterrent effect upon energetic development. This section goes further in its effects and consequences than would at first appear possible. It is hateful enough in time of war and in an imperial and autocratic government, such as Germany, to grant authority to the chief executive to fix prices of products. In this free land, where the economic forces have such general free and unrestricted play, the authority to fix prices by the Executive will, in my opinion, be regarded with great apprehension.

The great world conflict in which our Nation is now engaged will doubtless call for departure from the traditional policy of our Nation. Price fixing is an old governmental policy. It is not within the purview of this discussion, nor have I the time to enter into a discussion of this important question. I will say, however, that Adam Smith dealt a mortal blow to the economic doctrine that prevailed in his day and had governed the world for centuries. I think there can be no doubt but that the philosophy of Adam Smith is sound. The individual left alone develops better than under governmental control. The law of supply and demand has been the basis of our industrial and economic development. Of course, conditions may arise which demand governmental interposition and the regulation of prices. But, generally speaking, I believe that industry owned and operated by government means the establishment of a bureaucracy and in the end destruction of individual initiative and the dwarfing of that vital spirit so essential to individual and national progress and a high and progressive civilization.

This section calls for more governmental machinery and takes the Government into the business activities of individuals. Men of prudence and business sagacity will hesitate to invest large sums of money in hazardous undertakings, such as the sinking of oil wells in untried fields must be, and in the opening up of coal mines, if they are still to be subject to the uncertain, conjectural, and unfathomable policy of the executive department of the Government. The section provides that a "fair and reasonable return to the lessee upon his investment" shall be yielded, but the consumer is to secure the product at the "least price reasonable and consistent with the foregoing." This means, if it means anything, national regulation and control of his business.

Some agency provided by the President will order hearings, investigations, and trials to ascertain what is a "fair and reasonable return upon the investment" of the lessee. That will mean, of course, delays, costs, and embarrassments. Then the same or some other agency is to determine what price will be fixed in order to insure to the consumer the "least price reasonable and consistent" with the conditions of the bill. This involves an examination of the entire subject of production and consumption and, incidentally, the question of transportation, with its complications and endless ramifications.

Moreover, the fixing of prices for the operators under leases from the Government inevitably will result in effecting and determining the prices of other oil producers, as well as the price generally in the country to the consumer. It seems axiomatic that if the power is lodged in the President to fix the price of a considerable portion of the oil products his act will fix the price of all oil products in all parts of the country, which in turn will effect and indeed fix the price of oil to all consumers in the Nation. I am not willing in a bill of this character to give such tremendous powers to the executive department. It may be that under existing law the President has the power to fix the prices of coal and oil. But a measure which seeks to fix the prices of a commodity as a war measure may not only be justified, but may be imperative. Such a bill is entirely different from general and permanent legislation of this character.

Section 32 possesses features that must be deemed objectionable. The Secretary of the Interior is given authority to insert in permits provided by the bill provisions for their cancellation in the event that the permittee or leasee fails to exercise "due diligence in the prosecution of the work." As I interpret this section there is no restriction upon the Secretary of the Interior in the exercise of this power. He determines whether "due diligence" has been exercised, and he defines what "due diligence" is. As already suggested, investigation of the work done and the diligence shown in the prosecution of the work must necessarily be committed to subordinates, investigators, agents, and clerks of this great department. There ought to be a judicial determination of a matter so important or at least an appeal to a court of competent jurisdiction from the adverse action of the Secretary.

Sections 33 and 34 contain provisions that are menacing and dangerous. Under these provisions if a person were to hold one share of stock in two corporations or leases, where the aggregate acreage exceeded 2,560 acres, he would be guilty of a felony. Not only is his interest in the property forfeited but he is guilty of a criminal offense and may be punished by imprisonment not more than three years and by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

Section 34 prevents two corporations, no matter how small the holdings of each may be, and also prevents two individuals or associations holding leases under the act, from creating any selling agency or any transportation or refining company to handle the product of the mines. Two individuals or corporations mining side by side, neither of which is financially able to lay the necessary pipe line to carry the oil to the refinery or to erect a refinery, could not cooperate for that purpose.

A study of the oil industry in the United States reveals the fact that there has been no monopoly in oil production. The monopoly has been in transportation and in the refining of the oil. There are thousands of individual oil producers, but the number of corporations engaged in transportation or in refining oil is very limited. The Standard Oil Co. produces but a small percentage of the oil consumed in our country, but it refines more than 70 per cent of the oil produced in the United States.

This bill will foster monopolies in transportation and in refining. Under section 34 it is a felony to purchase stock in two or more corporations or in a corporation having an interest in two or more leases; it is also a felony to handle, sell, or transfer any stock to a person or corporation that may own one or more shares of stock in a different corporation. This bill will prevent the development of oil claims. It shuts the door to the sale or purchase of oil stocks. A broker would be guilty of a felony if he should sell one share of stock to a client in a lease or property or corporation held by A and a share of stock in a lease or property or corporation held by B; and any person who desired to purchase stock, who desired to buy stock as an investment or for speculative purposes, must restrict his purchases to the stock issued by one corporation or company or be guilty of a felony.

There are many other objectionable features to the provisions and form and structure of this bill. I have hastily examined a few of the provisions that, to my mind, render the bill impracticable and call for its defeat. But another and stronger objection to this measure rests upon the ground that it destroys our mining system, in part at least, and inaugurates a vicious, paternalistic, and bureaucratic leasing system, which will be repugnant to those who are compelled to operate under it and which is not in harmony with our institutions and our national policies.

The history of the world is a history of the struggles of the people to emancipate themselves from autocracy and bureaucratic rule. The monarch or petty feudal rulers have claimed the soil and imposed oppressive burdens upon the people. This Republic was a protest against ancient forms of government and the tyrannies under which the peoples had existed. Autocratic government may exist without a monarch. No government can be more obnoxious and oppressive than one which subjects people to the arbitrary control of bureaus, departments, governmental agencies, and a myriad of irresponsible subalterns and hirelings of an executive department. It were far better to have an enlightened monarch who came in contact with his subjects than to have a form of government, though it be called a republic, where the people were subject to control by departments, bureaus, agents, subordinates, and a cloud of governmental flunkies and parasites, who seek to enforce rules and regulations and orders and decrees and edicts emanating from some bureau or head of a department, and where discretion and arbitrary power could be exercised without restraint. Of course, under such circumstances property would be unsafe and the liberty of individuals would be jeopardized. Civilization is the product of liberty, and liberty results from wise and humane laws and the imposition upon the people of as few burdens as possible. Self-initiative is the characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon race. Orderly progress under wise and humane laws has been the chief characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon race for a thousand years, and as the mile posts in the struggle out of darkness and absolutism have been passed, it has been observed that the people were freer from arbitrary power, unbridled, and unrestrained discretion upon the part of rulers, and that the power and authority of the bureaus which were a part of the contrivance of human institutions have diminished to the point of extinction. But as absolutism in the rulers and despotic power upon the part of kings and executive authorities have diminished, the realtionary spirit represented by the vanishing figures referred to reappears in the efforts by governments to control, through bureaus, commissioners, departments, and divisions, which deny responsibility to the people and grow in power and authority with the passage of time.

The Roman Government, where it came in immediate contact with the people, was in the main a liberal form of government and developed personal independence and liberty; but where it governed through commissioners and satraps and agencies, particularly at points remote from the central authority, then abuses resulted, and the most despotic and oppressive rules, regulations, and measures were imposed upon the people. It is a dangerous experiment to govern by rules and regulations to be promulgated by some executive or department or bureau. Certainty in law and in the forces of government is essential to security of property, of life, and of person. If rights, whether of person or of property, rest in the discretion of individuals, singly or in groups, they are tenuous and precarious.

The bill which is under consideration disregards salutary lessons of the past and the philosophy finding expression in the history of governments and in the experiences of life. It is a profound concept of modern philosophy that the law of evolution applies to governments as well as to the animal kingdom and in the field of biology. Spencer in his synthetic philosophy has unfolded the great laws of progress and development and shown their application in the industrial, economic, and political world.

Government is not an exotic growth and a democracy is not a hothouse plant. The clammy hand of religious superstition or the despotic authority of a tyrant or the benumbing influence of medieval philosophies, whether in government or in any other field of mental activity, are the banalities against which humanity has had to contend as it has struggled from darkness into the light.

These observations may be deemed irrelevant, but I am insisting that this legislation belongs to the category of obsolete enactments and exploded theories of government. This bill seeks to establish an autocratic system that has been rejected by the Anglo-Saxon race and by the accepted canons of governmental philosophy. This bill proposes to control and govern through bureaus, and agencies and departments and subalterns and governmental hirelings, who shall have unrestricted power and unlicensed discretion. The public lands are diminishing in quantity, but the officials provided by the Federal Government to handle and control them are increasing in numbers. The expenses also of the Interior Department are being multiplied, though the territory controlled by it is being narrowed in area. More bureaus and departments and officials and agents and instrumentalities and clerks and experts and accountants and engineers and foremen and supervisors and appraisers and classifiers are being added to the department annually, and more rules and regulations and orders are constantly being promulgated. A division is organized, and that again divides into numerous divisions, and a bureau is created, and that divides and more bureaus result. The fecundity of a department is astounding and, indeed, miraculous. And this bill proposes a scheme that demands more bureaus and divisions and departments and employees and subalterns and inspectors, and additional rules and regulations and orders and edicts and proclamations. And, of course, this machinery thus created and the regulations and orders and rules promulgated, which are to have the force of statute, will call for more courts and marshals and deputy marshals and inspectors and investigators and a never ending but constantly increasing force of employees and agents that harass and annoy the people within the regions where they operate. This will, of course, retard development and rest like a dark and heavy cloud upon the people. It will lead to resentments, passions, and complaints and disgust, and finally hatred, for the parent Government, with its bureaucratic methods and its tyrannous paternalism.

This legislation is not all that may be expected. Bills of like character doubtless will soon be offered. There seems to be a purpose upon the part of some to destroy every vestige of local self-government possessed by the people and to reduce the States to mere lifeless forms. Under the pretext that bills are war measures, I am afraid that the vigor and, indeed, the very life of the States will be destroyed. No one would hamper, of course, the Federal Government in the stupendous task which lies before it. Every patriotic citizen in this broad land is behind the Government in every effort to protect our national honor and provide for the national defense to make the future of this Nation and the world safe and secure. But even under the specious guise of a war necessity, this bill can not be defended. Indeed, as I have stated, if the desire is to have additional coal and additional oil and to increase the phosphate output, this bill will prove a great disappointment. I do not deny but what oil fields will be developed under this bill, notwithstanding its vicious, tyrannous, and medieval provisions, but I do assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that the output of oil and coal would be very greatly increased over any possible results that will flow from this bill if the reactionary policies provided in this measure were abandoned and the coal lands and the oil lands and the phosphate lands were thrown open under existing law for occupancy and private ownership.

An hysterical movement, a number of years ago, was inaugurated in this country which loudly proclaimed that the public domain was being squandered and wasted, and that there must be a policy of national conservation. At various periods in the history of the Republic foolish and impractical and frenzied persons have sought to prevent the Government from parting with the lands which it held as trustee. Narrow and illiberal persons at various times have demanded that the Government domain should be held intact for the benefit of the Federal Government, or, if any portion were alienated, that the act of alienation should be accompanied by such restrictions, limitations, and impediments as necessarily would close the door to any further private acquisition. This same class of people have insisted upon the Government entering upon the public domain and engaging in various kinds of private enterprise. In other words, the theory was that the Government should be a landlord or a proprietor. It should engage in mining operations, dig the ore from the ground, erect the smelters and the mills, and derive the supposed great profits flowing from this class of business. It was deemed to be the duty of the Government by these same individuals to build power plants, construct railroads, open up coal mines, build telephone and telegraph lines, construct oil refineries, prospect for oil, construct pipe and other transportation lines, and, indeed, engage in the multitudinous undertakings to which the American people are giving their attention.

In line with this crusade, a demand was made a few years ago that the Government should withdraw all radium lands from location and that it should then employ prospectors and miners and develop the carnotite ores, erect smelters, mills, and plants to reduce the ores, and manufacture radium. And some of these evangelists, whose knowledge of the West and of the functions of the Government had never exceeded an "irreducible minimum," strenuously demanded that the Government as to those lands and resources which it did not operate itself and as a proprietor, should be, under rules and regulations, leased to individuals. In other words, the Government was to become a landlord; the title to mineral and other lands was to be reserved and held by the Government; the West was to be held in tutelage and bondage and a nation of tenants was to be developed. Of course, such a scheme as this is preposterous and repugnant to every true American. But an echo, and, indeed, a part of this plan finds expression in this bill. We are now to withdraw potash, coal, oil, and gas lands from the operation of existing laws. We are to repeal the splendid mineral system pro tanto. We are to govern by bureaus and rules and regulations. We are to crown the Federal Government with the approbrious title of landlord and embark upon a policy which has been repudiated by the statesmen of our country and reverse a policy under which not only the West but the Nation has prospered and developed a strong, virile, and independent people.

A few weeks ago a bill was passed putting the streams under the power of the Federal Government, and authorizing the leasing of the water power under rules and regulations and the authority of executive branches of the Government.

Some time ago a bill was passed providing for the leasing of coal lands in Alaska. I say it is apparent that there is a determination to make the Federal Government a gigantic leasing machine. Lands which it holds only in trust for the people are now to be held by the Federal Government as a proprietor. The very framework of the Republic is to be changed. The fundamental conceptions of the fathers of the Republic as to the functions and powers of the Federal Government are to be revolutionized. There is no question but what the United States holds the public domain as a trustee for the people, but the new scheme is to transmute title held by a mere trustee, held by it as a mere naked trust, into an indefeasible, perfect, fee-simple title.

I am afraid that many who look with favor upon this bill, and others who merely tolerate it because, while they regard it as unsatisfactory, they think it is the best that can be obtained, will very shortly awaken to the realization that they are giving away the people's patrimony, ravaging the States, encroaching upon their sovereignty, fastening the chains of a debasing servitude upon the people, and ministering to the growing appetite of a voracious Federal authority. I warn

Senators against this tendency and the wrong which this legislation will work upon your country.

Of course, with this bill enacted into law, the executive branches of the Government and this school of paternalistic centralization will demand that the residue of the public domain be held by bureaus and departments and divisions and subordinates, to be leased and controlled by rules and regulations and orders and edicts and pronunciamentos. In the public-land States from 50 to 80 per cent of the territory is held by the Federal Government. With the triumph of this reactionary and medieval program, I beg to inquire, what will become of the States? They can not tax these governmental instrumentalities, agencies, properties; they can not successfully compete in business with the Government and those who are its lessees and protégés and pampered ones. Already it is being said that copper and lead and antimony and silver are commodities which the Government should control; and I look for some bill to withdraw the mineral lands from location or entry or private ownership, to be followed, as suggested a moment ago, by another bill in harmony with this condemned and benighted policy, withdrawing from entry all lands the title to which is in the Government of the United States. This bill is a dark and dangerous precedent.

A number of years ago, when I had the honor to represent my State in the House of Representatives, a bill was offered to establish a leasing system upon the part of the Government with respect to the gilsonite lands in the State of Utah. I made a speech in opposition to it, and desire to place in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, excerpts from the speech which I then delivered:

There are to be "rules and regulations," which mean circumlocution and red tape, and petitions and orders, and declarations and files, and memoranda and writings, and notations and briefs, and legal opinions, and heads of departments and bureaus, and surveys, and plats and maps, and reports, and the thousand nameless, dilatory, never-ending proceedings which prevent action, destroy hope and bring ruin. Then there is the fixing of the royalty to be paid by the operators of the property, the preparation of more rules, providing for classifying the material mined and for the time and manner of measuring and regulating the output; regulations as to when the mines shall be worked and timbered and drained and the improvements to be made.

To enforce and execute these regulations there must be more agents, and inspectors and experts, and accountants and weighers, and engineers and foremen, and supervisors and keen, lynx-eyed deputies, and gaugers and appraisers and classifiers. But this is merely the background to the charming picture presented for our consideration. Regulations and orders and laws are futile without penal provisions; so there must be the fines and forfeitures and misdemeanors and perhaps felonies. The occupant, if he is not the creature of a favoritism which this system creates, would vainly consume his time in attempting to comply with the regulations and repelling or placating the horde of officials enforcing the shameful system of espionage and surveillance. But to enforce the criminal features there must be marshals and deputies, and commissioners and judges, and jurors and lawyers, and courthouses and jails, and so on adinfinitum.

What a splendid spectacle such legislation presents! The mere enumeration of some of its workings causes one to wonder whether this plan is not the emanation of a Spanish grandee in the time of Philip II. Instinctively we look to see the dark-visaged soldier, representing the thieving scoundrelly officer of the Crown, that hounded and harassed the miners of Mexico and other Spanish Provinces and robbed and plundered while ostensibly enforcing the "regulations" which were so essential to secure the "royalty" due the king.

It would certainly be a quixotic effort if this vast machinery, which will be constructed if the committee's amendment is adopted, were only designed for this occasion. I sincerely believe, if this becomes a law, it will be the death knell to our mining laws and be regarded as a precedent for the withdrawal of all mineral lands from location and for the enactment of a measure the avowed object of which will be to obtain revenue for the Government, or the still more absurd and preposterous reason, to preserve the mineral wealth from becoming the subject of monopoly. Because of this belief I shall do all within my power to defeat the committee's recommendation.

Unpleasant and wearisome as this struggle has been, it will be continued, so far as I am concerned, as long as the mineral-land system of the United States is assailed and efforts made to yoke us to the iniquitous and intolerable system of leasing and landlordism. While upon its face the matter under consideration may appear insignificant, it is nevertheless one of great importance. The question is not merely whether a small tract of land in Utah shall be opened to occupancy with or without restrictions, but the real question is: Shall the wise and beneficent mineral policy which has contributed so immeasurably to our country's welfare and development be repealed, and one the history of which is indissolubly connected with the tyrannies of monarchies and the doctrine of the sovereignty of kings be fastened upon us?

Neither words nor rhetoric nor subtle arguments can disguise the issue. If the report of the conference committee is adopted, or the amendment just offered by my friend from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] is approved, this Congress will have raised its voice against the West and declared that the view so long maintained that the mineral wealth was the free inheritance of all, and open to the explorations of the poorest and humblest in the land is no longer to prevail, and the paternalism of Spain is to become the policy of this Republic. It is no sufficient answer to this question to disclaim opposition to the mining laws of the Government and to say that the only design is to withhold the application of the mineral laws from the Uncompahgre Reservation. It is seldom that the opponents of a policy or system which is strongly intrenched openly attack it or advocate its complete destruction. Occasionally a legislator unmasks his batteries upon an existing law and demands its repeal and the overthrow of everything founded upon it.

But more frequently the destruction of a system is quietly compassed. No protestation of affection for the magnificent juridical system relating to the mining industry of the United States will avail, because the course proposed will ultimately destroy it. It can not seriously be contended that the perpetuity of the system is not menaced when exceptions are made and the universality of the laws' application denied.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Sherman] frankly admits that the adoption of the report introduces a change in our mineral laws, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] confesses that his amendment is a repeal of the law of 1866, so far as gilsonite upon the reservation is concerned. But it is contended gilsonite is a new mineral, and therefore a different law should be applied. It is new in the sense that the chemical formation is somewhat different from other hydrocarbons, but as a bituminous hydrocarbon is not new. It is a mineral, and is governed by the general mining laws.

I stated a few moments ago that the Federal Government held only the legal title to the public domain and that it held such title in trust for the people. The Federal Government is one of enumerated and delegated powers. The thirteen original States owned all the public domain within their respective boundaries and did not grant or cede any portion thereof, except the District of Columbia, and perhaps such as was in use by the Government for military and naval purposes, to the Federal Government. Nor did the latter acquire title to any of the public lands within the States of Vermont, Kentucky, Maine, West Virginia, Tennessee, and Texas. In the enabling acts of each of the States admitted into the Union there was a provision to the effect that "the State when formed shall be admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever."

The original States owned the public lands within their borders, and wisely adopted the view that they were held in trust for the use and benefit of those who would enter thereon. The Federal Government did not become a landlord in either the original thirteen States or those carved out of territory ceded by them and from which cession the States of Tennessee, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, and portions of Alabama, Mississippi, and Minnesota were formed. If this bill becomes a law, the States affected by it will be denied what is expressly provided in the enabling act of each, namely, "admission into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States." This bill, if not unconstitutional, is certainly in violation of solemn compacts between the Federal Government and the States, and is violative of the spirit and genius of our form of government.

In the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hogan (13 How., 212) the doctrine is announced that the public domain shall be held as a temporary trust by the United States. This language is used by the court:

We think a proper examination of this subject will show that the United States never held any municipal sovereignty, jurisdiction, or right or soil in and to the territory of which Alabama or any of the new States were formed, except for temporary purposes, and to execute the trusts created by the acts of the Virginia and Georgia Legislatures, and the deeds of cession executed by them to the United States, and the trust created by the treaty with the French Republic of the 30th of April, 1803, ceding Louisiana.

* * * * * * *

When Alabama was admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States she succeeded to all the rights of sovereignty, jurisdiction, and eminent domain which Georgia possessed at the date of the cession, except so far as this right was diminished by the public lands remaining in the possession and under the control of the United States for the temporary purposes provided for in the deed of cession and the legislative act connected with it. Nothing remained to the United States, according to the terms of the agreement, but the public lands. And if an express stipulation had been inserted in the agreement granting the municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain to the United States such stipulation would have been void and inoperative, because the United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain within the limits of a State or elsewhere, except in the cases in which it is expressly granted.

To the same effect is the language of the court in the case of Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46), wherein the court states:

That the Government of the United States is one of enumerated powers; that it has no inherent powers of sovereignty; that the enumeration of the powers granted is to be found in the Constitution of the United States, and in that alone; that all powers not granted are reserved to the people. While Congress has general legislative jurisdiction over the Territories and may control the flow of waters in their streams, it has no power to control a like flow within the limits of a State, except to preserve or improve the navigability of the stream; that the full control over those waters is vested in the State.

I insist that it was not within the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution that the Federal Government would exercise a proprietary interest or ownership of the soil within any of the territory which is found within a sovereign State. The provision of the Constitution wherein Congress is given power "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States" did not empower the Federal Government to become a landlord or assume a proprietary interest in the public domain. They understood that the Federal Government had no proprietary interest in the soil of any of the States existing when the Constitution was adopted; and the history of the debates of that memorable convention clearly indicates that there was no intention that other States that might be admitted into the Union should be treated in any different manner. President Jackson in a message to Congress December 4, 1833, states:

By the facts here collected from the early history of our Republic it appears that the subject of the public lands entered into the elements of its institutions. It was only upon condition that those lands should be considered as common property to be disposed of for the benefit of the United States, that some of the States agreed to come into a "perpetual union." The States claiming those lands acceded to those views and transferred their claims to the United States upon certain specific conditions, and on those conditions the grants were accepted. These solemn compacts, invited by Congress in a resolution declaring the purposes to which the proceeds of these lands should be applied, originating before the Constitution and forming the basis on which it was made, bound the United States to a particular course of policy in relation to them by ties as strong as can be invented to secure the faith of nations.

The Constitution did not delegate to Congress the power to abrogate these compacts. On the contrary, by declaring that "nothing in it shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State," it virtually provides that these compacts and the rights they secure shall remain untouched by the legislative power, which shall only make all needful rules and regulations for carrying them into effect. All beyond this would seem to be an assumption of undelegated power.

This view is supported by the provision in section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States, which reads:

Nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

This language was a recognition that the obligation rested upon the Federal Government to enforce the conditions contained in the cession made to the United States by the original States, and that the duty rested upon Congress to dispose of the territory coming to it for the purpose of creating new States in such manner as that they would have the same rights and same sovereignty as the original thirteen States. Mr. Randolph uses this language:

Congress has pledged the public faith to new States that they would be admitted on equal terms. They never would or ought to accede on any other.

The language of the great Chief Justice Marshall, it seems to me, is pertinent to the discussion upon this point. In the Gibbons-Ogden case he says:

The genius and character of the whole Government seems to be that its action is to be applied to all external concerns of the Nation and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally, but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect other States, and with which it is not necessary to interfere for the purpose of executing some of the general powers of government.

Mr. Madison, in No. 18 of the Federalist, supports this view in the following language:

The local or municipal authorities form distinct and independent portions of the supremacy, no more subject within their respective spheres to the general authority than the general authority is subject to them within its own sphere. In this relation, then, the proposed government can not be deemed a national one, since its jurisdiction extends to certain enumerated objects only and leaves to the several States a residuary and inviolable sovereignty over all other objects.

And in his paper No. 45 he states his views as follows:

The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects, as war, peace, negotiation, and foreign commerce, with which last the power of taxation will, for the most part, be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects which, in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties, and properties of the people and the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the State.

The founders of the Republic were jealous of the rights of the States and framed an instrument which preserved their autonomy. They did not design to give the Federal Government authority to legislate generally for, and to treat as a proprietor of, the public lands within the States. The Constitution, I insist, limited the exercise of the power of Congress with respect to lands within the States to those tracts which are used exclusively for governmental purposes—lands which have been purchased with the consent of the States. Justice Brewer, in the case of Kansas against Colorado, states:

While arid lands are to be found mainly, if not only, in the western and newer States, yet the powers of the National Government within the limits of those States are the same (no greater and no less) than those within the limits of the original thirteen.

Of course in Territories Congress has dominion and sovereignty, national and local, and full legislative power over the subjects as to which the legislature of a State might legislate within the State, and may intrust this power to a legislative assembly of a Territory. (Simms v. Simms, 175 U. S., 162.)

However, a different situation is presented when the Territory becomes a State. Then the sovereignty or governmental power formerly exercised by the Federal Government passes to the State. Congress then holds the naked, legal title to the public domain as a trustee, not as a proprietor, not as an owner nor as a landlord, not for the purpose of profiting by it, but for the purpose of disposing of it to the people in the interest of the Commonwealth and for the general benefit of the Nation. In harmony with this view, Congress has regarded the public lands as the patrimony of the people, and has enacted the most liberal laws under which title might be acquired thereto.

As already stated, there were occasions when efforts were made to make profit out of the public lands. In the days of Clay and Calhoun the disposition to be made of the public lands made and unmade political parties and determined the political careers of statesmen. Calhoun regarded the question of the public lands "as the most dangerous and difficult of all which demanded the attention of the country."

So opposed was he to the scheme of selling the public lands with a view to realizing profit that he offered a bill on February 5, 1838, for a cession of the public lands within the limits of the new States to the respective States. He contended that this measure would remove Federal patronage, counteract centralization, relieve Congress from a tedious and troublesome problem, and remove the friction between the new and old States. In his speech in support of his measure he stated:

I have always seen that there was a period coming when this country must cede to the new States the possession of their own soil.

The history of the laws passed by Congress relating to public lands demonstrates that in the main Congress regarded itself as a trustee and felt that a wise, sound, and just policy was to open the public domain to settlers with as few restrictions and impediments as possible. It was always felt that even if the Federal Government had the power to exact large sums for the public domain and vend and dispose of them as a private proprietor might do, ultimately the Government would be profited and benefited in the development and progress that would inevitably follow a policy which placed the public lands in private ownership at as early a date as possible. The wisdom of this course is attested by the rapid development of almost unknown regions. The brave and hardy pioneers pushed beyond the Alleghenies; beyond the Ohio and Mississippi; far beyond the desolate plains and prairies of the great West; entered into and passed over the Rocky Mountain heights; and never rested until the great Pacific was reached.

The same liberal policy that has characterized the Government in dealing with agricultural lands has also been followed in handling the mineral lands. Of course, as stated, the National Government claims no mineral rights in the original States, nor in Vermont, Kentucky, Maine, West Virginia, Tennessee, or Texas. The original States and those carved out of the area claimed by them were not, of course, subject to the laws of Congress, and these States, being the paramount proprietors, disposed of the mineral lands, in the main, in the same manner as the agricultural lands were disposed of. A few of the States enacted police regulations with respect to coal mining, but New York and Texas were the only ones that made any pretense of enacting a mining code. I might add that Alabama, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, and Wisconsin, by acts of Congress passed at various times, were exempted from the operation of any Federal mining statutes, and Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and Ohio were not subject to the general mineral statutes of the United States for the reason that substantially all of the land within their borders and owned by the Government had been disposed of prior to the enactment of such statutes.

So it may be stated broadly that those States owning the public domain within their respective limits dealt with the mineral lands much in the same way as they disposed of the agricultural lands. There was no attempt to assert by virtue of their respective sovereignties the doctrine of jura regalia, which found expression in the common law. They felt that it was for the best interests of the people and of the States that the mineral lands reach the hands of private parties without impediment or difficulty, because under private ownership they would be more rapidly and advantageously developed and such development would tend to the enrichment of the State and the people. This liberal policy, as stated, with but slight variation, has been followed by the Federal Government. In the ordinance of 1785, which dealt with the lands in the Western Territory, it was provided that one-third part of gold, silver, lead, and copper mines to be sold or otherwise disposed of as Congress shall hereafter direct shall be reserved. However, at that time but little was known of the mineral resources of the territory embraced within this enactment. In 1800 the President, by resolution of Congress, was authorized to collect information concerning the copper mines in the Northwest Territory and to ascertain whether the Indian title had been extinguished. In 1807 Congress enacted that the lead mines of Indiana and such contiguous sections to each as the President might deem necessary should be reserved for future disposal by the United States. This enactment also contained this provision:

Any grant which may hereafter be made for a tract of land containing a lead mine which has been discovered previous to the purchase of such tract from the United States shall be considered fraudulent and null; and the President of the United States shall be, and is hereby, authorized to lease any lead mine which has been or may hereafter be discovered in the Indian Territory for a term not exceeding five years.

This statute inaugurated a policy of leasing the mineral lands. Investigation of the debates at this time and the character of the discussion demonstrates that but slight attention was given to the subject. The view was expressed by some that the Government, in the event of war, would require the lead produced, and therefore it should maintain control of the mineral lands producing lead; and in 1816 an act was passed relating to settlers on the public lands of the United States which contained a provision that—

In all cases where the tract of land applied for includes either a lead mine or salt spring no permission to work the same shall be granted without the approbation of the President of the United States.

In 1823 a resolution was adopted by Congress requesting information concerning the mineral regions of the West. The President transmitted the information which had come to his possession, but this related only to lands containing lead and iron. In 1829 authority was given the President to "expose to a sale as other public lands the reserved lead mines and contiguous lands in the State of Missouri." In 1839 the House of Representatives adopted a resolution which is as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be prepared a plan for disposal of the public mineral lands, having reference as well to the amount of revenue to be derived from them and their value as public property as to the equitable claims of individuals upon them; and that he communicate to Congress all the information in the possession of the Treasury Department relative to their location, value, productiveness, and occupancy, and that he cause such further information to be collected and surveys to be made as may be necessary for this purpose.

With respect to some of the legislation just referred to, Hon. Abram S. Hewitt makes the following interesting observations:

No leases were issued under the law until 1822, and but a small quantity of lead was raised previous to 1826, from which time the production began to increase rapidly.

For a few years the rents were paid with tolerable regularity, but after 1834, in consequence of the immense number of illegal entries of mineral land at the Wisconsin land office, the smelters and miners refused to make any further payments and the Government was entirely unable to collect them. After much trouble and expense it was, in 1847, finally concluded that the only way was to sell the mineral land and do away with all reserves of lead or any other metal since they had only been a source of embarrassment to the department.

Meanwhile, by a forced construction (afterwards declared invalid) of the same act, hundreds of leases were granted to speculators in the Lake Superior copper region, which was from 1843 to 1846 the scene of wild and baseless excitement. The bubble burst during the latter year; the issue of permits and leases was suspended as illegal, and the act of 1847 authorizing the sale of the mineral lands and a geological survey of the district laid the foundation of a more substantial prosperity.

On January 30, 1828, the Committee on Public Lands in the House, in obedience to a resolution which required an inquiry "into the expedience of repealing such laws of Congress as prohibit the sale of public lands in the State of Missouri which contain or are supposed to contain lead mines," submitted a report, in which it was stated that it had been the policy of the Government since the acquisition of Louisiana to retain under its immediate control the lead mines of Missouri by withholding from sale the public lands in which those mines existed. "The original motives which led to the adoption of this policy, as it believes, can not be traced to any documentary source."

After referring to the report of the War Department, in which it was stated that the product of the public lands had not increased and that the veins, though existing, were abandoned for the hope of more accessible veins at different points, the committee stated:

This, the committee supposed, must ever be the case so long as those who work the mines have only a limited and temporary interest in them and are under the necessity of receiving an immediate remuneration from the capital vested in and the labor bestowed upon their mining operations. The ore will remain in its natural bed and never be drawn forth to mingle with and increase the aggregate mass of national wealth until subjected to the unimpeded action of exclusive individual interest.

There is another view of the subject which the committee believe entitled to great consideration. If all these (mining lands) are to be occupied by tenants of the Government there would be created a numerous band of dependents, who, however they may affect the General Government, can not but be viewed by the local authorities with distrust and jealousy. A population thus dependent upon the Federal Government and its officers for the continuance of their vocations must of necessity be unsettled and fluctuating, and the products of their temporary and irregular labors will afford a limited compensation for the exclusion from so large a portion of the State of a more settled, permanent, and useful class of citizens. Believing that the laws prohibiting the sale of public lands in Missouri which contain lead mines should be repealed, the committee report a bill.

In the first annual message of President Polk, December 2, 1845, it was shown that the leasing system was unprofitable; that the entire amount received by the Government from 1841 to 1844, both years inclusive, was $6,354.74, and that to collect this amount $26,111.11 was expended in salaries, clerk hire, agents, superintendents, bureaus, and so forth. The President then adds:

To this pecuniary loss may be added the injury sustained by the public in consequence of the destruction of timber and the careless and wasteful manner of working the mines. The system has given rise to much litigation between the United States and individual citizens, producing agitation and excitement in the mineral regions and involving the Government in heavy additional expenditures.

It is believed that similar losses and embarrassment will continue to occur while the present system of leasing these lands remains unchanged. * * * The present system is believed to be radically defective. More than a million acres of the public lands supposed to contain lead and other minerals have been reserved from sale and numerous leases upon them have been granted to individuals upon a stipulated rent. The system of granting leases has proven to be not only unprofitable to the Government but unsatisfactory to the citizens who have gone upon the lands, and must, if continued, lay the foundation of much future difficulty between the Government and the lessees.

President Fillmore, in his annual message of December 2, 1849, recommended extending the generous land laws of the Government to California, Utah, and New Mexico. Referring to the manner of disposing of the mineral lands of California, he declared that he was at first favorable to leasing them in order to obtain revenue, but that a recollection of the "experience in leasing lead mines and selling lands upon credit" had convinced him that great difficulty would ensue in collecting rents, "and that the relation of debtor and creditor between the citizens and the Government would be attended with many mischievous consequences."

The questions of leasing and royalty received earnest attention in the Senate in 1850. Senator Fremont, of California, had introduced a measure providing for certain police regulations for mining districts. (Congressional Globe, 31st Cong., p. 1362.) Some Senators advocated a policy which would yield revenue to the Government, and Senator Ewing proposed an amendment, which introduced a system of seigniorage, the product of the mine going to the Government, from which a portion was returned to the miner.

Senator Benton eloquently pleaded for a system of free exploration upon the mineral lands, and said:

I am of the opinion that the United States ought not to undertake to make a revenue out of the miners; that the United States ought to content herself with getting the wealth out of the bowels of the earth itself, which is now lying so useless; that she ought to content herself with receiving what will pay the expenses of the administration of such a system, and that system ought to be just as simple as it can be made and at the same time preserve order among the miners. * * * I do not believe in nations working gold mines at all.

I believe in individuals managing things of this kind, but not nations. I believe the true treasure of every government is the affections of the people, and that the true riches of every nation is the people first and the wealth afterwards that flows from that industry. * * *. I therefore wholly object to the whole idea of deriving revenue from these mines. I am in favor of getting what revenue we do get from the gold mines through the secretions of commerce, with no superintendence over the man as to what he digs and no accountability of the digger for what he gets; with nobody to stand over him and say how much he gets and no one to call him to account and tell him what he gets.

And have we not had experience in the attempt of our Government to raise revenue from mines? Have we forgotten the lead mines and salt springs we reserved in Missouri and Illinois? And have we forgotten that when we acquired these countries and heard of the salt springs and lead mines there we were inflamed with the idea of the United States deriving revenue from boiling salt water and digging lead mines? Under that excitement these salt springs and these lead mines were reserved to be leased. What was the result of it? It turned out that the Federal Government was never made for the purpose of boiling salt water or digging lead.

When I first came here the first legislative duty I had to perform was to endeavor to free the State of Missouri of the incumbrance of the landlordship of the United States over the lead mines and salt springs which was harassing the people. I was then joined by some of the fathers of the Republic—by such men as Macon—went against the whole idea of the Government working mines and making money out of it. We succeeded. The system was broken down in Missouri. The salt springs were given to the State. The lead mines, which had been reserved for lease, were thrown into market and sold, as other public lands, at $1.25 per acre. So we got rid of these things in Missouri.

Then came on the lead mines of upper Mississippi. Our imagination were inflamed again with the belief that we were to make a great deal of money by leasing out these lead mines. This scheme was adopted. I voted against it. * * * I told the Senate then, as it happened to lead mines of the State of Missouri, so it would happen to the lead mines of upper Mississippi; that this system would be harassing to the people and cramping industry would end with bringing the United States in debt. That turned out to be the fact, for one of the last messages sent to us by President Polk was to recommend the breaking of this system. He showed the amounts requisite to keep up the system, which were enormous, and he recommended the abolition of the system.

During the discussion Senator Seward stated:

I will add now only this, that the objects of the United States in regard to the gold mines in California ought to be, in the first place, to bring to the general public use of the people of the United States the largest possible acquisition of national wealth from their newly discovered fountains, and, secondly, to render the mining operations conducive to the best and speediest possible settlement of our vast countries on the Pacific which are so soon to exercise boundless commercial, social, and political influences over the eastern world.

The pecuniary wealth and political power then to be obtained will be obtained just in proportion to the number and assiduity of the persons who shall be engaged in working the mines of California. That number and that assiduity will be in exact proportion to the liberty of the terms upon which the mines shall be opened. It was on this ground that I voted against the proposition of my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. Ewing], which contemplated seigniorage and revenue to the Government from these mines, and in favor of the provision contained in the bill which stipulates for nothing in the way of revenue but enough to pay the expenses of regulating the operations of the mines.

The remarks of Senator Felch, of Michigan, upon the occasion so completely cover the subject that I submit them for the consideration of Senators:

In the first place we reserved the lands which had been sold by prior governments, but we have since abolished that system, because it was found impossible to manage these mines. We have lead mines in Missouri and Wisconsin and Illinois, and we commenced upon a system * * * first by granting permits to work these mines, and then by reserving to the Government the right of mining where the title to the land was sold. In each of these instances we have found it necessary to abolish this system, because it has been found impracticable to carry it out and unprofitable to the Government.

When the discovery of the copper mines was made on Lake Superior we reserved to ourselves the right of working them, and that right was afterwards abandoned, because it was supposed to be a right held in derogation of the right of the State, and also because it was building up a leasing system and placing a tenantry upon these lands and holding them from local taxation, compelling the authorities of the State to preserve order among these tenants, while not an acre of these lands was taxed to pay for the expenses incurred by the State. In the year 1845 the matter underwent an investigation in the Land Office and in Congress.

The agents were all dismissed except one, and a recommendation has been made that he should be dismissed also. In all these cases everything shows that we have never made anything under the mining system and that it is one which must be abandoned.

The Senator then proceeded to argue in favor of the freedom of entry upon the mineral lands and against Government machinery, agents, and so forth, to control them.

During the discussion of the mining law of 1866 (Congressional Globe, 39th Cong., p. 3236), Senator Sherman approved the policy of free entry upon mineral lands. He stated:

I think it is the interest of the United States to get rid of the mineral lands of the United States, to give them into the hands of private individuals, to give them the title by patents in the ordinary way, so that the United States will be divested of all proprietary right over the mines. * * * I might produce the opinions of Mr. Benton, Mr. Clay, and many of the most eminent statesmen of America to show that the title of mineral lands is of no benefit to the United States. From time to time the principle of disposing of mineral lands, salt mines, iron mines, etc., has been adopted, so that now, I believe, we have no proprietary title in the United States to any but the gold and silver mines. This bill gives the mineral lands to the people where they are, in Nevada and in the other mineral States. * * * It gives them the lands for probably less than it will cost to lay them out, survey them, locate them, plat them, and sell them, so that it is substantially a grant of all the mineral lands to the settlers in the mineral regions; and that policy I am in favor of adopting; while, on the other hand, if you should adopt the proposition now made by the Senator from Oregon, the United States would retain possession and control of these lands, would be subject to expenses, and there would be no legal right, no legal title, to the improvements made on these lands. A settler going upon a claim and building his improvements on the land there has no title whatever; the title to the improvements is in the United States; he has nothing but a possessory title, a customary right, which the United States at any time may destroy, and it seems to me that nothing could be more injurious to the people who go to our mineral lands than this system of affairs, no title, no right to a man's improvements, at any time subject to the legislation of Congress, no inducements to make improvements, no fixed and permanent settlement.

On July 14, 1866, a proposition was submitted to the Senate by which the Secretary of the Interior was to be authorized to lease certain saline lands containing mineral springs. The scheme was severely condemned by Senators and the evils which have resulted from such a policy clearly indicated.

Senator Grimes said (Congressional Globe, 39th Cong., p. 3805):

This Government never has and it never ought to become the landlord of a portion of the people of this country. That is not the relation that is encouraged by any of the laws of our States to any considerable extent, and it should not be encouraged by the Government of the United States.

The true liberty, understand, in a republican government is that, so far as possible, every man shall be the owner of his own soil, the owner of his own tools, the owner of his own labor and his own machinery. * * * But so long as you undertake to maintain the relation of landlord and tenant to the persons who are going to carry on these salting works, so long they will remain in an undeveloped state and the country will never realize a tenth part of the advantage from the salt springs that we would realize if they were conducted by private enterprise alone. That is the experience of this Government; it has been from its foundation; it is the experience of every government on the face of the earth. All such enterprises as these should be carried on by private energy and by private means, and so long as you allow the man who conducts it to be the owner of the property, so long he will be willing to invest more and more means in the appliances that may be necessary to conduct his business to a successful result.

Senator Conness declared that the leasing system was founded upon the monarchial idea that the most valuable things belong to the sovereign, but that he believed that nothing was of too great value for American citizens, and that, being the sovereigns themselves, it would be an act of supererogation and folly to lease the lands to themselves. Continuing, he said:

Why should not the ownership of that thing pass into the hands of the citizen? Is there anybody in the world, is there any power on earth, which can find the value or develop the value of a thing faster and more certain than its owner, and can there be any ownership of a higher character than of the American citizen? The whole system seems to me to be wrong. You are going to institute in one of your departments a power to lease and let a part of the public property to your own citizens, and no such lease, the bill provides, shall be for a longer period than 25 years, and then during the 25 years the lease is to be subjected to readjustment every 5 years by "disinterested referees."

The Interior Department or the Land Office is to appoint referees every five years. Where shall they go? Shall they act in regard to a piece of property that they know nothing about except as they get information from the Land Office, the information coming through a bureau that perhaps knows nothing about it? It appears to me to be very small business for this Government to engage in. It is especially provided, it will be observed, that this bill shall not apply to the section of the country from which I came. We are not to be made tenants. For one I am very much obliged to the committee for releasing us from such a vassalage.

If the saline lands and the mineral springs belonging to the Government are to be leased, why not lease the gold and silver mines? They are of infinitely greater value; they attract the attention of mankind to a greater extent and concentrate the effort of man and the capital that man can bring to the development of natural resources to a greater extent than these more ordinary classes of property.

And so the modified and limited leasing system adopted by the United States was swept away as being inexpedient and against the best interests of the Republic.

The question of congressional legislation with respect to mineral lands was brought to the attention of Congress after the discovery of gold in California. The excitement following this important event resulted in a mighty tide of emigration to the Pacific coast. There were some controversies growing out of the interpretation of the treaty of Quadalupe Hidalgo and the extent of grants therein recognized. For years there was no legislation of Congress which dealt with these mineral lands or determined the relations of occupants thereon. It is to the credit of the sturdy and courageous men who settled in these mining districts that their love of order and respect for law led them to the adoption of a system of customs and regulations which protected property rights and conduced to the development of the West and the production of the precious metals in great abundance. Speaking of this situation, Senator Stewart uses this language:

The reason and justice of the laws they formed challenge the admiration of all who investigate them. * * * These regulations were thoroughly democratic in their character, guarding against every form of monopoly and requiring continued work and occupation in good faith to constitute a valid possession. * * * The miner's law is a part of the miner's nature; he made it and he loves it, trusts it and obeys it. He has given the toil of his life to discover wealth, which, when found, is protected by no higher law than that enacted by himself under the implied sanction of a just and generous Government.

These rules produced a system of free mining. There were no royalties, no leasing, no interference by the Government, but a declaration of the fact that the lands of our country were the patrimony of a free people. Protected in their location, feeling as secure as if buttressed by courts and juries and the laws of our modern civilization, they toiled on, hopeful of success, achieving victories and encountering defeats, giving their lives and their all to the enrichment of the Nation.

These rules were approved by the United States Supreme Court.

In every district which they occupied they framed certain rules for their government. * * * They all recognized discovery followed by possession as the foundation of the possessor's title, and development by working as the condition of its retention. And they were so framed as to secure to all comers within practicable limits absolute equality of right and privilege of working the mines. Nothing but such equality would have been tolerated by the miners, who were emphatically the lawmakers as respects mining upon the public lands. * * * During the 18 years from 1848 to 1866 the regulations and customs of miners as enforced and molded by the courts and sanctioned by the legislature of the State constituted the law governing property in mines and in water on the public mineral lands. (Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S., 456.)

The Legislature of California recognized these mining regulations and customs, and Judge Field and other eminent jurists so applied and molded them that a wise, comprehensive "common law" was produced which will forever be a source of pride.

The system thus originating has been taken up and adopted by the States and Territories west of the Missouri River. And that is not all. This system, founded in the necessity of the hour, in man's sense of justice and love of right, became by adoption the child of our Government. In 1866 Congress declared:

That the mineral lands of the public domain, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and occupation by all citizens of the United States, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and subject to the local customs and rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same may not be in conflict with the laws of the United States.

The discussions in Congress prior to the passage of the act, including that which occurred in 1850, conclusively established the fact that free entrance upon the mineral lands and unrestricted occupancy of the same for mining purposes were regarded as a right. The act of 1866—was rather a voluntary recognition of a preexisting right of possession constituting a valid claim to its continued use than the establishment of a new one. (Broder v. Water Company, 106 U. S., 296.)

And further, to show how the Supreme Court regarded the encouragement offered by the Government to the people to freely enter and occupy the mineral lands, and in support of the view that it would be mala fides to now depart from a policy not only approved but adopted, let me quote from the statements of the court:

> The Government, by its silent acquiescence, assented to the general occupation of the public lands for mining, and to encourage their free and unrestricted use for that purpose reserved such lands as were mineral from sale and the acquisition of title by settlement. (Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall., 512.)
>
> Before 1866 mining claims upon the public lands were held under regulations adopted by the miners themselves. * * * These regulations were framed with such just regard for the rights of all and afforded such complete protection that they soon received the sanction of the local legislatures and tribunals. * * * In all the legislation, whether of Congress or of State or Territory, and by all mining regulations and rules discovery and appropriation are recognized as the sources of title to mining claims, and development by working as the continued ownership until patent is obtained. (Erhardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S., 535.)

In the most solemn manner Congress has declared the right of American citizens to occupy the mineral lands and procure title. The highest judicial tribunal has repeatedly affirmed the wisdom of free mining and the comprehensiveness and justice of the mining regulations and has enforced them as the rule of property.

The attention of Congress was repeatedly called to the situation in the West, and particularly with regard to mining lands between the discovery of gold and the passage of the law of 1866. President Lincoln in 1864 directed the attention of Congress to the subject and also to the report of the Secretary of the Interior relating to this important matter.

Notwithstanding the necessity of some legislation by the Federal Government dealing with the mineral lands of the United States, no comprehensive measure was passed until July 4, 1866. It is true there was considerable agitation in favor of a leasing system by which the mineral lands were to be controlled and as a result of which it was hoped revenue might be derived by the Federal Government. The Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Caleb B. Smith, in his annual report for 1861, stated that there were valuable and extensive mineral lands owned by the Government in California and New Mexico; that those who wished had been permitted to work the lands without limitation. He insisted that the lands belonged to the whole people, and that it would only be just and proper for those developing the mining properties to pay "a reasonable amount as a consideration for the advantages enjoyed." The same official the following year called attention to the same subject, as he did in 1863. In his last recommendation he suggested that the mines and minerals of the public domain should be opened and subjected to the occupancy of all loyal citizens, subject, as far as compatible with moderate seigniorage, to existing customs and usages, conceding to the discoverer for a small sum a right to one mine, placer or lead (quartz), with a preemptive right in the same district to an additional claim, both to be held for the term of one year, for testing the value.

Again, in 1865 the Secretary of the Interior in his report to Congress stated that the mineral lands which do not contain the precious metals should be brought into the market and placed under the guardianship of private owners. He further stated:

> Individual proprietorship, it is conceded, would stimulate the development of coal fields, petroleum, deposits of iron, lead, and of other gross metals, and mineral formations. There can therefore be no sufficient reason for withholding such mineral lands from market. Congress has not legislated with a view to securing an income from the product of the precious metals from the public domain. It is estimated that two or three hundred thousand able-bodied men are engaged in such mining operations on the public lands, without authority of law, who pay nothing to the Government for the privilege or for the permanent possession of property worth, in many instances, millions to the claimant.
>
> The existing financial condition of the Nation obviously requires that all our national resources and the product of every industrial pursuit should contribute to the payment of the public debt. The wisdom of Congress must decide whether the public interest would be better promoted by a sale in fee of these mineral lands or by raising a revenue from their annual product.

Notwithstanding the frequent appeals to Congress from various sources to establish a leasing system no favorable response was accorded.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Ivanhoe Mining Co. v. Consolidated Mining Co. (102 U. S., 167), stated that Congress—

> Passed a law [the law of 1866] by which title to mineral lands might be acquired from the Government at nominal prices, and by which the idea of a royalty in the product of the mines was forever relinquished.

Mr. Lindley, in his most excellent work on Mines, speaking of this legislation, says:

> What had theretofore been technically a trespass became thenceforward a licensed privilege, untrammeled by governmental surveillance or the exaction of burdensome conditions. Such conditions as were imposed were no more onerous than those which the miners had imposed upon themselves by their local systems. That such a declaration of governmental policy stimulated and encouraged the development of the mining industry in the West is a matter of public history.

This Congress, speaking for the Nation, set its seal of disapproval upon all attempts to collect rents or royalties from mines upon the public lands, and in effect disapproved of the policy of attempting to govern and control, work, operate, or develop mining properties on the public domain by bureaus or executive departments.

Prof. R. W. Raymond, one of the ablest investigators of this and cognate questions, published a strong and able article which presents the reasons for the policy adopted by the Government in its legislation of 1866. A portion of the article is as follows:

> Its object has been to encourage the development of the mineral resources of the public lands and to transfer the ownership of both land and mineral rights to individual citizens. That this course is wisest in itself and best adapted to the spirit of our institutions scarcely admits of question. The policy of administering the public lands as a means of producing revenue through mines, timber, agriculture, or rents is one which a highly centralized or despotic government may perhaps pursue, but certainly is not suited to democratic or representative government, and even in monarchical States it has not proved advantageous, as may be inferred from the general tendency in all enlightened nations at the present day toward the transfer of governmental enterprises to private hands. It may be questioned, perhaps, whether a system by which the Government, as in Spain, Portugal, and Mexico, retains the ownership of mines and leases them upon conditions involving their continuous working is not calculated to secure a more active and steady mining industry than a system which, conferring individual ownership, permits mines to lie idle at the will of their owners. But I think no one can fail to perceive, upon thorough consideration, that the advantages of the Spanish system are delusive, and that its disadvantages in the expense of administration and the inducements which it offers to the "robbing" of mines are greater than its advantages, even if these were real. The tenant of the Government mine will work it if it be profitable, of course. He would do the same if he owned it. When it ceases to be profitable, he may continue operations for a while, rather than lose his lease. But there is no economic gain to the State in forcing its citizens to unremunerative labor. On the contrary, if a mine does not pay, it is best that it should be closed, while labor turns to more productive enterprises; and if a mine is to be closed, it is far better that this should be done by an owner than by a tenant, for the owner may hope to resume operations under more favorable circumstances, while it is the interest of the tenant, whose abandonment of the property is final, to rob it of all accessible value and leave it in ruins. As for the revenue to be derived from renting mines, two things may be confidently asserted: First, if it were wise to burden the industry of mining with a tax not laid upon other forms of production, this could be done more effectively, conveniently, and equitably by a bullion tax; and, secondly, it is not wise to do anything of the kind. * * * It is quite sufficient at present to say that the obvious policy of the Government is to treat mining like any other industry, and to administer the mineral lands, like the agricultural lands, with as little machinery and as little interference with private enterprise as possible.
>
> We come, then, to this proposition: The United States is the holder, as the trustee of the people, of a vast area of mineral land. On the whole, it is best to sell this land as fast as possible, not looking for large revenue from its sale, but rather transferring it to private owners at prices that will repay the cost of the surveys and other necessary proceedings, and under conditions that will favor the exploration of its resources. To encourage mining, or at all events to lay no unnecessary burdens upon it, and to get rid of the unproductive property in mineral lands which can not under our system be made productive by the Government—these are the objects to be attained by Federal legislation. In selling the mineral lands should the Government make any distinctions as to price? It would have a perfect right to do so; and it seems at first glance a wrong to the people that public property worth many millions of dollars should be given away to those who have no other claim than that of discovery. This point deserves careful consideration. There are three ways in which the Government might derive pecuniary benefit from the developed value of the mines on the public domain. It might provide for an estimate of value by its own officers, and a price based on such an estimate. It might sell the mining locations at public auction, thus leaving the estimate of value to competing purchasers. Or, it might reserve a certain percentage of the gross or net product of a mine—an unassessable interest in the property—which, in case of a large and profitable development, would amount to a considerable sum. These three alternatives cover substantially all that could be done in this direction, apart from the actual retention of ownership by the Government, and the collection of mine rents. As to the first of these it is evident that in most cases no Government officer could possibly make a just estimate of the value of a mine before it had been worked; and no intending purchaser would spend money in developing it, without knowing at what price he could buy it; nor would it be for the interest of any intending purchaser to develop the real value of the property and thereby enhance its price. The sale of locations at auction is open to similar objections. Nobody will explore and develop a piece of mining ground, with the knowledge that every proof of value which he may expose will make its acquisition more costly and more doubtful. But if such sales are to be held without previous exploration of the claims, then the chances are that the prices to be obtained by this method will not exceed the ordinary rates sufficiently to pay for the extra trouble and cost of administration.
>
> The third alternative—the reservation of a portion of the proceeds of a mine—would prove in practice, I think, difficult, odious, and unremunerative. It would be really a special tax. If levied upon gross production, it would bear severely on struggling enterprises. If levied upon profits, it would involve an inquisition into private business, a premium on deceit and concealment, and a vast amount of official labor for comparatively small return. It would be like the revenue tax on spirits in difficulty of enforcement, but not in resulting revenue. We may conclude, then, that the true policy of the Government is to sell the mineral lands outright at uniform prices and with as little trouble and cost to itself and the purchaser as possible, seeking its profit, not in the direct proceeds of sale but in the rapid development of natural resources and the establishment of prosperous communities. It remains to be considered whether the present system of Federal mining law, as construed by the courts and administered by the General Land Office, effectively executes this policy; whether it needs reform; and if so, whether that reform should be of the nature of moderate amendment or radical change. In the discussion of these questions I shall strive rather to present an impartial statement of both sides than to advocate a definite scheme. No scheme suggested by individual study or experience can claim to be the best under the circumstances, because it is of the very essence of the problem that the system adopted by the Government shall be acceptable to the mining communities. The present arrangement, whatever may be its defects, has the positive recommendation that it will work, is working; that it is a growth and, like all growths, possesses vitality, which mere symmetry without vitality can not replace; that its evils are known, while those of a new system are unknown.

The act of 1866 was defective in failing to provide for obtaining title to placer claims. So in July, 1870, the act of 1866 was amended, and in May, 1872, an act was passed entitled "An act to protect the development of the mining resources of the United States." This act was broad and comprehensive and reaffirmed the policy of the Government announced in the act of 1866. It declared that "all mineral deposits in land belonging to the United States are hereby open to exploration and purchase, and the lands in which they are found to occupation and purchase."

It is not my purpose to analyze these various acts of Congress, but attention is called to them merely to prove that after full investigation and with full knowledge of the mineral resources of our Government Congress deliberately chose a policy permitting free entry upon the mineral lands and offered the most liberal terms under which title to the same might be obtained. There was no fear of monopoly or that too much mineral wealth would be produced, or that the bold prospector who went out upon the public domain and, after difficulties and hardships, discovered and developed a mine would obtain too great a reward for his efforts and toil. Everyone knows that the policy was right, sound, and rational. The wealth produced, whether from gold or silver or coal or oil claims, flows into the veins and arteries of commerce and trade and enriches the Nation as a whole. A different policy would have sealed the mineral wealth of our country. The more mines open to development the more people obtain employment. The mountains and the canyons and the sterile wastes of the West have produced cities and towns and Commonwealths because of this generous and wise national policy.

The coal mines and the oil fields of the States east of the Mississippi Valley would never have reached the stage of development which has characterized them if a hateful, oppressive State or National leasing policy had prevailed.

It is true that some men have made large fortunes in the production of coal and in developing oil fields, but the greater gain has come to the entire people.

And this policy has not produced a monopoly in production of coal or oil. Wherever there has been monopoly of oil it has been in the field of transportation and refinement. There have been no monopolies in the public-land States by reason of the liberal policy pursued by the Government with respect to its mineral lands. The hundreds of millions of dollars in gold and silver produced in Nevada preceding and immediately following the Civil War were not held by a few individuals. This great wealth found its way into the channels of trade and commerce. And so it can be said with respect to all of the mineral products obtained from the public lands. Their development has made the West and strengthened and enriched the Nation.

The leasing system which was attempted in the early portion of the last century was a failure and was repealed. Executive departments of the Government in recent years in connection with the forest reserves have adopted a modified leasing policy. This has been obnoxious and has resulted in increased expenses upon the part of the Government. Personally, I think the public lands within the respective States should be ceded to the States. A number of years ago I offered a measure looking to a cession of the public lands to the States, and several months ago I introduced a bill in this body providing for a cession of the public lands to the respective States. At the proper time I shall offer this bill as a substitute for the measure which we are now considering.

In support of the proposition that Federal leasing is of no advantage to the people or to the Government, I call attention to Senate Document No. 482, published during the Sixty-third Congress, containing an article on the leasing of coal lands, by Thomas P. McDonald. He there admits that the plan for leasing coal lands in this country was a radical departure from our established system of disposing of public lands. He calls attention to the fact that Colorado had been leasing its school lands containing coal for 12 years, and that in 1912 only 13 coal mines were under lease; that the aggregate production of the leased properties during the year was 485,971 tons, while the total production of the State for the same year was 10,157,383 tons, and in conclusion he states that "after 12 years' experience in leasing coal lands Colorado has just one coal mine of commercial importance under operation under lease from the State.

It will be conceded that there is greater propriety in a State leasing lands owned by it to its own inhabitants, where it is directly in contact with them, than for the Federal Government to lease lands 3,000 miles distant from the seat of government. Mr. McDonald states that though Montana has a law leasing State lands, with no limit to the acreage leased, and with a royalty of only 10 cents per ton, eight leases only have been given, and that in 1912 the total production from leased properties was 25,668 tons.

The same year Montana produced more than 3,000,000 tons of coal. In the same document the writer states that North Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Idaho, New Mexico, and Wyoming all have laws for leasing coal on State lands, but that no lands have been leased by either of those States. As stated, there is far less objection to the leasing policy by a State. It occupies with respect to lands owned by it an entirely different position than that occupied by the Federal Government with respect to the public domain, held in trust for the benefit of the people. Mr. McDonald in the same document states that for the year 1909 there were mined by the owners of coal lands within the United States 334,669,298 tons, and that owners also leased adjoining land and produced therefrom 42,929,197 tons. The same year all of the lessees in the United States mined only 82,943,651 tons. It is manifest that even as between private individuals where there are not rules and regulations promulgated by the Government, and where the parties may deal with each other in any way they please, the leasing of mining properties does not appeal very strongly to the American people.

While I am referring to Mr. McDonald's publication I would like to call attention to the prices of coal in the United States and in other countries for the purpose of in part, at least, answering the constantly reiterated charge that the coal producers in the United States have a monopoly and have been charging extortionate prices.

In New Zealand 2,066,073 tons were produced in 1911. Coal was sold at the mine at a price in excess of $2 per ton, and the author states that the State mine which sold coal for that price made no profit. In Nova Scotia the output of coal in 1910 was 6,208,244 tons. The sale price at the mine was $2.01 per ton. Figures taken from the report of the United States Geological Survey for 1911 show that Illinois mined that year 53,679,118 tons, and that the price at the mine was $1.11. Indiana's production for the same year was sold at the mine at $1.08 per ton. Pennsylvania's output was sold at the mine of $1.01. Ohio's coal production was sold at the mine for $1.03, and the price at the mine for the West Virginia output was 90 cents. It is apparent that coal has been produced and sold at the mines in this country at a price less than that charged in other countries, notwithstanding the higher wages paid in the United States. It conclusively demonstrates that free competition existed in the United States, and that under this rule the competitive prices were not only fair to the consumer but were exceedingly low.

Mr. McDonald admits that experience of the coal producers in the bituminous coal fields for 20 years has resulted in cheap coal, but insists that the conditions demonstrate the necessity of some power to prevent what he calls "destructive competition." In the same paragraph the author states:

> In Australia, New Zealand, and Nova Scotia the price of coal at the pit mouth during the past 20 years has ranged from $1.75 to $2.25 per ton, while in our great bituminous coal districts the price of coal at pit mouth has ranged from 90 cents to $1.11 per ton.

I repeat that if cheaper coal and cheaper oil are desired and greater quantities are required the demands of the Nation and the people will be better satisfied by unlocking the coal and the oil and gas fields found upon the public domain. The profits from leasing of governments have never paid the expense of administering the law.

Mr. Fremont declares that with all the machinery of the Spanish monarchy, Spain never received in any year more than $60,000 as royalties from all her mineral properties. Gambo, the great Spanish historian, makes clear not only the imperfections but the injustices and wrong resulting from a national leasing policy. When Mexico threw off the Spanish yoke mining had practically ceased because of the blighting effects of Spain's mineral land policy. Mexico attempted to revive this languishing industry and accordingly abolished all of the taxes and royalties provided by Spanish law and substituted a duty of 3 per cent. Quicksilver mines were freely granted to all who would engage in development, and miners were relieved from personal contributions as well as military service. A reward of $25,000 was decreed to be paid to each of the first four operators who would extract a certain stated amount of quicksilver.

I submit that the statement of the Secretary of the Interior contained in his report for the year ending June 30, 1917, supports the view for which I am contending, that the leasing system is not proper conservation and does not inure to the advantage of the people or the Government. His statement is as follows:

> The statement that the people of Alaska have borne more handicaps than any other people who have pioneered new, undeveloped territory, at least on the North American Continent, has been so often made that it has become trite. Nevertheless it is true. If the best portions of the far West had been reserved, if the pioneers had been forbidden to make use of those natural resources which they found at hand, and penalized if they attempted to use them, is it reasonable to suppose that the Middle West and the far West would have produced many great Commonwealths within a comparatively short time?
>
> Conservation, which is defined as the act of preserving, maintaining, supporting, or protecting, is, no doubt, sound in principle; but conservation as applied to Alaska, while it has preserved coal, oil, and timber, has largely estopped development along these lines. The coal lands of Alaska were reserved by Executive order in 1906 and the oil lands some years later, and there has been no general development of either coal or oil resources. Coal is mined to-day only on a small scale and oil development is at a standstill. The need of coal such as is found in Alaska is apparent all over the Pacific coast, yet the production is limited and confined to but one section of the Territory. The same is true of oil. There is no doubt that the coal areas of Alaska are capable of supplying sufficient quantities of coal for all domestic and industrial purposes of the Pacific coast regions were they developed commercially, and if the oil lands of the Territory could be properly developed they would largely add to the supply of gasoline.

Who can doubt that the cause of this lack of development in Alaska is the unwise policy which has withdrawn these lands from entry and purchase by the American people?

Mr. President, the leasing policy is not only harmful to the States but it is harmful to the Federal Government. It multiplies, as I have stated, governmental officials, increases the cost of Federal administration, alienates the people from the Government, creates friction between the States and the Federal Government, tends to overthrow the autonomy of the States, and tends to cripple them in their domestic and local affairs; sets up dual and conflicting governments within each State, prevents the growth and expansion of the States, denies them the right to tax property within their borders, builds up and fosters an autocratic paternalism, denies to the people the mineral products of the soil, and to that extent and thereby fosters monopoly, and finally raises prices and works injury to all the people. Now, while we are demanding that democracy be expanded, that all forms of autocratic power shall be destroyed, and that the utmost freedom shall be given to the people of the world, it subjects us to the charge of inconsistency, if not hypocrisy for this great legislative body to enact legislation directly opposed to our claims and demands.

Not only millions of acres of coal and other mineral lands have been directly withdrawn from entry by the Government, but the extension of the forest reserves over immense areas within the public-land States has locked up other mineral lands and prevented the development that otherwise would have ensued. Before this policy which I am condemning was inaugurated thousands of prospectors could be found upon the mountains and in the canyons in the mineral sections of the Western States. Now, hills and canyons and mining districts, except where developed properties are being operated, are silent, and unless a change shall take place in the policy of the Government there will be a constant diminution in the mineral production of our Nation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have always been in agreement with the Senator against the propriety of the leasing system, but now the Senator, I think, admits that we shall need oil and need more than the present fields that are now open will supply us. Does the Senator believe that there is any possibility of securing the adherence of a sufficient number of Representatives and Senators to his view and my view, that it would be better to throw these oil lands open to the public and secure the passage of a bill of that character? If we can not secure the passage of a bill of that character, if the people generally over the United States do not agree with us or the Congress by a majority vote would not agree with us, what would be the Senator's view of our present duty under the circumstances, to take the best we can get or to take nothing?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, no one could answer the question which has been so fairly stated by the Senator from North Dakota without feeling more or less of embarrassment and difficulty. I confess that if the premises were as suggested by him and I was absolutely sure that the public mineral lands could not be opened or operated at any time in the future except under the provisions of this bill, I might possibly vote for it. I have not yet been convinced that a bill can not be passed through Congress of the character that would meet the approval of the Senator and myself. It will be time enough to consider the enactment of legislation of this character when it is certain we can not pass a measure which is just and fair, and in harmony with our past national policy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that ever can be tested as well as for the Senate to stand by what seemed to be the prevailing opinion a little while ago in opposition to leases, and let the bill go to conference? Why should we abdicate simply because somebody tells us that the other House will not agree to our action unless we pass this bill? That, I think, ought not to have been said on the floor of the Senate; but it has been said, and for one I resent any such suggestion. The only way we could test this case is to send it to conference and let it be fought out there, and then if we can not get anything better than is proposed now we might have some excuse for yielding our convictions.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. I should like to answer the Senator from New Hampshire now, but I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I simply want to say, if this were a new question it might be submitted as a test, but it is not new. It has been before both Houses of Congress for four years, and during that whole time, so far as Senators who favor the policy of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Utah, and I may say the Senator from Nevada, they have urged upon the Public Lands Committee of the Senate a certain policy, and have also urged it before the committee of the House. In the Senate that view could never get a majority, and in the House the committee was unanimously against it on three separate occasions. For that reason I think we have tested it sufficiently to know that it is either a bill of this character or none. That is what I meant in the report when I wrote it. I mean that now. That is my view of it.

Mr. KING. I will advert to the question of the Senator from New Hampshire in a moment. The Senator from Nevada seemed to ask a question. Does the Senator from Nevada think that the opposition to a system which opens the mineral lands to private entry comes from any executive branch of the Government?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the principle announced by the Senator from Utah is opposed by the executive branch of the Government, although I am not so positive of that. But I know it is opposed by the most influential Members of Congress in the other House. I am not prepared to say, however, that I know of a single executive head who is opposed to what is known as the policy in opposition to this bill.

Mr. KING. I was about to supplement that question by another. If it be the opposition of the executive department, or any branch of that department, that prevents the passage of a measure which would meet the approval of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Nevada, does the Senator from Nevada think that we ought to yield to the demand of that executive branch of the Government?

Mr. PITTMAN. If it were only Executive opposition, I would feel that we could then overcome that opposition—at least I would be willing to try it—but I know from an experience covering four years with three separate bills of this character that, whether there be Executive opposition or not, there is sufficient opposition in the House, and intense, violent opposition, to make it to my mind impossible to pass a bill granting title absolutely.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMOOT. We might just as well understand where the opposition comes from now as at any other time. There is an organization in the United States, and has been for 10 years or more past, amply financed, and known as the Conservation Association. It is opposed to citizens of the United States becoming the owners of the public domain, and it has a great influence with Members of Congress. We also might as well know that the officials of the Interior Department believe in the leasing system rather than the individual ownership of mineral lands. It will be absolutely impossible to get a bill, as the Senator from Nevada has said, through the House to-day that would open all the lands of the United States to entry, the policy followed so many years, and under which our country has developed so rapidly. The leasing policy of the department not only applies to public lands but it applies to water-power sites. For 12 years now they have been held locked up, as the Senator knows.

I can not for the life of me see how it is going to be different until the departments or Congress yields. The Senator knows that we have been notified on the floor of the Senate to-day that this bill as reported from the committee can not pass, because the Secretary of the Navy is opposed to a provision in it, and the question of a law that does not include the leasing system of public lands will not at present, at least, receive the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and I was going to say any other branch of our Government.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PITTMAN. With the permission of the Senator from Missouri, I merely want to add to what the Senator from Utah has said that it has not received the sanction of any department of the Government for 8 or 10 years. I think it was under Mr. Roosevelt's administration that this peculiar policy originated, and it has gone on and, if anything, has increased, and is still growing stronger. I think it is hopeless to look for any change.

What we have done in this bill is this: We have said to the prospector he shall have the right to prospect on a piece of land and acquire title by patent. We have done that at least and we have faithfully reserved that in this bill. The prospector can go out and if he discovers oil land he can acquire title to it to-day and get a patent. I hope we will get that, and I hope it will not be discussed longer, because if the Senator from Utah will compel us to call attention to that it is very possible it will be stricken out by an amendment.

Mr. STONE. If my friend from Utah will permit me——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have been in the Senate a good many years. I have heard this very matter now occupying our attention discussed before the Senate not only for four years, as the Senator from Nevada says, but it seems to me I have been hearing it discussed here for 10 or 15 years. I know I have been hearing it discussed so long that my memory runneth not to the contrary. I have heard the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] make, in substance, the speech or the several speeches he has made to-day over and over again. I have previously heard the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] make the speeches he has so well made to-day, as I have heard like speeches from both the Senators from Montana and others. It is an old subject of discussion here in the Senate. It is an old theme with all of us. I think we are familiar with it. The junior Senator from Utah is making a most interesting speech, a very able one that I think will be historically valuable, but for the purposes of present legislation, if I may say this without offense, there is nothing of practical value in his fine address unless there is a purpose on the part of Senators to defeat action on this bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STONE. I am speaking in the Senator's time.

Mr. KING. Yes; but I should be very happy before the Senator concludes if he will allow me to ask a question. Does the Senator approve of this proposed legislation? Does he, because the subject is old and has been debated at length in the past, think we ought not to discuss it further, particularly when a policy so long established and which has worked such beneficent results is about to be abandoned and an obsolete, condemned, and destructive one is about to be put into operation?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into that discussion. We have heard that discussed at length already. I have favored the view advocated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and those associated with him, just as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] did; but, unlike the Senator from New Hampshire, as he expressed himself to-day, I should like to have this question settled one way or the other now, and since those who are most familiar with the subject have submitted this compromise plan, while not entirely satisfactory to me, I agree with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], in charge of the bill, that we had better do this thing than do nothing; and surely we should dispose of the subject for the time being at least, and this for reasons that have already been stated by Senators more strongly than I could state them—and I would have to state them to the same effect if I tried to state them at all—because of the necessities of the Government and of the people, that we should not in a time of stress lock up the great storehouses with which nature has supplied our country by struggling here now over this old, time-worn contest as to whether we shall open these storehouses through a leasing system or a purchasing system.

I have my preferences about that, as I have said. But, Mr. President, what I wanted especially to say at this time is that if there are Senators who do not mean to allow this bill to pass, then we are at the end of the rope. If Senators are willing to have the Senate express its opinion upon the passage of the bill, then in the interest of the public business while other things are waiting on the junior Senator from Utah and those cooperating with him, let us know where we stand, and either adjourn or else have a vote and go on with other business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Utah permit me one word?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I infer from what the Senator from Missouri said that his only difference from me is that he was advocating early action on this bill, while he thought I was trying to postpone it.

Mr. STONE. No; I did not mean to say that so far as the Senator is concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. Thank you.

Mr. STONE. I said that I was in sympathy with the Senator's general view about the bill. The Senator was maintaining, somewhat stubbornly, his attitude and stated that he would vote against the bill in its present form, and I said that I was ready to vote for it even in its present form.

Mr. GALLINGER. My attitude was not at all stubborn. I had taken about 10 minutes in discussing the bill and I am ready to vote on it at any moment, so far as I am personally concerned. I did say that I should vote against it. Of course that is my privilege and I thought I would advertise in advance that I had not changed my mind, as certain other Senators have changed their minds, without giving us any adequate reason for the change. That is all I proposed saying, and all I did say.

Mr. KING. I supposed when the Senator from Missouri propounded his question to me that he did it in good faith and out of commisseration for my youthfulness in the Senate, and with a desire to admonish me as to the proper course to pursue in addressing myself upon subjects submitted for consideration. I wish, however, the distinguished Senator from Missouri would follow the advice which he gave me, when it comes to a discussion of public questions upon his part. I wish the Senator from Missouri when he occupied five or six hours here a number of months ago and prevented largely the passage of an important measure, had remembered the advice which he gives me now when I address the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I think that is an unnecessary observation, because it is not a true observation.

Mr. KING. It is a true observation, and I challenge the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. I did not occupy five or six hours at the time referred to. Inopportunely and evidently the Senator is talking about the speech I made against the resolution authorizing the arming by the United States of merchant vessels.

Mr. KING. I am alluding to that speech.

Mr. STONE. That is what I assume the Senator refers to.

Mr. KING. I am alluding to that speech of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I supposed so. Mr. President, I occupied no such time as five or six hours in the delivery of that speech. When I concluded that speech there were left 19 hours for debate and action. Now, mark you, that great matter of going into this world war was not brought before the Senate until just a few hours before I took the floor to speak on it. A half dozen hours before, or something like that, it was brought before the Senate. When I took the floor to oppose the resolution there were twenty-odd hours at the service of the Senate. I spoke for approximately three hours against the resolution. After that more than half of the remaining time was occupied by those favoring the resolution; not by those opposing it.

I spoke for about three hours against this new and far-reaching resolution to involve this country in this world war. The Senator goes back for a year to bring up this. I do not know why. I am not criticizing my friend for what he thinks he should do. The cases are not parallel. If he thinks I was criticizing him personally he is mistaken. If I offended I apologize. I am speaking in good faith, because Senators, I know, are waiting to take up other things which they supposed they would get up this afternoon, and if it be the purpose of any Senators to prevent action on the pending bill, do not you think we had as well adjourn or go into executive session? There is no need of our staying here if the things that are waiting can not be considered. The Senator knows whether he is willing to have a vote on this bill to-day.

The Senator adverts to a rather long speech I made against war. But I remind him that more than once, I think three times, I announced on the floor of the Senate that I was ready to vote on the war resolution any minute. Is the Senator ready to say that now, that he is ready to vote on this old bill any minute?

Mr. KING. Did the Senator say he was willing to vote until after he had submitted all he had to say in opposition to that resolution?

Mr. STONE. I did not say that, nor was I willing to vote until I had completed my speech.

Mr. KING. Exactly. The Senator opposed, as he had a right to oppose, that resolution, and to speak as long as he desired and the rules of the Senate permitted. In what I have said in reply to the Senator I have not intended to criticize the attitude of the Senator or his vote. He is an able, patriotic, and courageous Senator, none more so, and is entitled to speak as his judgment dictates and vote as his conscience directs. But what I am objecting to is the attitude of the distinguished Senator from Missouri when he attempts to deliver a lecture when we seek to honestly express our opposition to a measure that changes a fixed and settled policy of our country and inaugurates a system that is so un-American and so dangerous and oppressive.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, let me ask my friend——

Mr. KING. One moment. I will yield, but I do not wish to be driven by the Senator from Missouri into abating any criticism of this bill that I choose to make fairly and honestly.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is a very frank man and a very able man——

Mr. KING. I hope to be frank.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I want to stay here and vote on this bill. Can we vote to-night?

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator we will not vote to-night before 6 o'clock if I am permitted to occupy the floor.

Mr. STONE. The Senator says we will not vote before 6 o'clock. I will ask the Senator if, so far as he is concerned, he is willing that we shall vote at 6 o'clock?

Mr. KING. I am willing that the Senate shall vote whenever it so desires, but I understood that this was a legislative body; that an important bill was up for consideration; it has not yet been read, and certainly the distinguished Senator from Missouri, with his large legislative experience, does not want to vote for a bill before it is read in the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I interrupt my friend again by his courtesy?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. If he does not mean that we shall vote on this bill this afternoon there are Senators here who very much desire, for important reasons, to have an executive session.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Utah will be delighted to yield for such purpose, but I may desire to submit some further comments upon the bill before final vote is taken.

Mr. STONE. I shall not undertake to make the motion for an executive session without the consent of the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. KING. Let me say that I had said to the Senator from Nevada that, so far as I was concerned, I expected a vote on this bill to-morrow; I am willing that there shall be a vote on this bill to-morrow; but I did not know the Senator from Missouri was so impatient as to force a vote to-night.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think that I thoroughly understood the position taken by the Senator from Utah. He had assured me that he had no intention whatever of desiring to delay a vote on this bill; that he had intended to make some remarks before the bill was finally acted upon. I am satisfied now that the Senator has no intention whatever to attempt to delay a vote on the bill. I regret exceedingly, however, that we have lost about 30 minutes' time finding this out. I am forced to the conclusion that the body is now in such humor that it desires to go into executive session, and if the Senator from Missouri desires to make that motion I am perfectly willing, with the consent, of course, of the Senator from Utah, that he shall do so.

Mr. STONE. I move, Mr. President, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. KING. I have not yet yielded the floor.

Mr. STONE. I thought the Senator had.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Nevada understood exactly my position with respect to this matter. He did not mean by his observation that he did not know 30 minutes ago what the position of the Senator from Utah was respecting this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, no; I have known all the time the position of the Senator from Utah in relation to the bill.

Mr. KING. Now, Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning as soon after the conclusion of the morning business as convenient I shall call up for consideration the amendments of the House to the joint resolution relating to national prohibition. I also request that as large a number of Senators as convenient may be in attendance.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 18, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 17, 1917.

EXPLOSIVES INSPECTOR.

William J. Duval, of Hutchinson, Kans., to be explosives inspector for the State of Kansas, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917.

AIDS IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Edgar H. Bernstein, of Virginia.
Elwood M. Wilbur, of Maine.
Benjamin Friedenberg, of New York.
William H. Overshiner, of California.
Lowell O. Stewart, of Michigan.
James D. Crichton, of New York.
Nathan Cherniack, of New York.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

To be judge advocate with the rank of major.

Lewis W. Call, of Maryland, from October 13, 1917.

SIGNAL CORPS.

Col. Alexander L. Dade, Cavalry, to be brigadier general in the Signal Corps, with rank from October 29, 1917.

DENTAL CORPS.

To be first lieutenants.

John Loftus Richards, of Minnesota, from December 10, 1917.

First Lieut. Winfred E. Henshaw, Dental Reserve Corps, from December 11, 1917.

First Lieut. Joseph Earnest Schaefer, Dental Reserve Corps, from December 12, 1917.

First Lieut. George Julian Sibley, Dental Reserve Corps, from December 13, 1917.

First Lieut. Frank Phillip Kendrick Barker, Dental Reserve Corps, from December 14, 1917.

To be dental surgeon with rank from September 17, 1917.

Byram Sandford Purviance, of California.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NATIONAL ARMY.

To be major generals with rank from November 28, 1917.

Brig. Gen. George H. Cameron, National Army.
Brig. Gen. George W. Read, National Army.
Brig. Gen. André W. Brewster, National Army.
Brig. Gen. Charles H. Muir, National Army.
Brig. Gen. Charles C. Ballou, National Army.
Brig. Gen. Charles T. Menoher, National Army.

To be brigadier generals.

Col. Malvern-Hill Barnum, Cavalry, from October 31, 1917.
Col. William H. Hay, Cavalry, from October 31, 1917.
Col. Jesse McI. Carter, Cavalry, from November 16, 1917.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

To be second lieutenant with rank from October 25, 1917.

Second Lieut. Milton Mortimore Levy, Engineer Officers' Reserve Corps.

To be second lieutenants with rank from October 26, 1917.

Ulric Johnson Mengert, of the District of Columbia.
Hugo Dalsheimer, of Maryland.
Richard Whitman Coward, of Tennessee.
Edward Tankard Browne, of Virginia.
John Ogden Merrill, of Minnesota.
Horace Clifford Levinson, of Illinois.
Second Lieut. Percival Spurr Howe, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Miles Whitney Kresge, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edwin Scott Roscoe, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Worcester Ricker, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edward Smith Fraser, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Milton Wayne Pollock, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Sumner Tucker Pike, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Sealand Whitney Landon, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Connett, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leslie Clyde, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Mead Silkman, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Summerfield Jenkins, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Stanley Raymond Mickelsen, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Le Roy Hart, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lawrence Beatty Morse, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Parkhurst Lee, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Earl Glasheen, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Earnest Jackson Oglesby, of Virginia.
Second Lieut. Eugene Morgan Vigneron, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Henry Clarkson Meredith, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Dana Little Barbour, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Ralph Beatley, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Carroll Gowen Riggs, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Max Weston Thornburg, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Wright Farnham, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Montague Kimball, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Edwin Fry Barry, of Texas.
Second Lieut. Eugene Sinclair Taliaferro, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Alexander Clyde, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Andrew Fleming Patterson, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Forrest Glenn Tucker, of Washington.
Howard Tasker Evans, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Spessard Lindsey Holland, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Penn Esterbrook Ainsworth, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Herbert Fritz Ernst Bultman, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Donald Fisher McClure, of New York.
Second Lieut. Wilton Burton Persons, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Homer Case, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edward Parry Sykes, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Vickers Ray, of West Virginia.
Second Lieut. Burleigh Adelbert Lum, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Wilbur Southwood Vaughan, of New Jersey.
Reginald Scott Fleet, of Pennsylvania.
Roland Dyer Hawkins, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Melzar Merrick Whittlesley, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Roscoe Plimpton De Witt, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John George Murphy, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Walter Joseph Collet, of New York.
Second Lieut. Joe Jene Miller, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Van Auken Mackenzie, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Johnson McSherry, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Francis Arthur Mulcahy, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Sydney Hammond, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Bertram Jones, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Cornelius Sheldon Whittelsey, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carleton Engler Saecker, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Benjamin Adams, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clarence Cory Harshman, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lewis Jerome Taylor, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Pennock Hart Orr, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Kay Christmas, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Milton Harris, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter Berry Littlefield, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Philip Hastings Middleditch, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Wilfrid Warren Montagne, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Donald Blake Webster, of Massachusetts.
George Bassett Roberts, of New York.
Second Lieut. Arthur Howard Warner, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Elisha O'Neill, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Banks George Moreland, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Monroe Warren, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Muir Ralston, of New Jersey.
Second Lieut. Ransom Davis Spann, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Donald Gibbs Crowell, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Arthur Castle Hawkins, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Otto de Lorenzi, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Marston Kew, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alexander Goold Campbell, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ernest Ray Campbell, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Joseph Graham Pringle, of New York.
Second Lieut. John Wesley Card, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Jack Phinizy, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Manly Broadus Gibson, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Henry Hagelstein, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Huntington Reed Hardwick, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Clyde Jordon, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Malcolm Samuel Cone, of Georgia.

Second Lieut. Alvah Edgar Moody, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Robert Kent Gooch, of Virginia.
Oliver Nelson Hollis, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Cranston Bourquin Rader, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Cedric Ezra Scheerer, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Geoffrey Marshall, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Lloyd William Taylor, of Iowa.
Second Lieut. Guy Head Hearon, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Francis Eugene Harrison, jr., of South Carolina.
Second Lieut. James Wallace Hopkins, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Ralph Ernest Billsborrow, of New Jersey.
Second Lieut. Alfred Wilson Chapman, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Austin Emerson, of Georgia.
Lawrence James Meyns, of Virginia.
James Cutler Vickery, of New Jersey.
Second Lieut. Clarence Elmer Muehlberg, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edwin Converse Higbee, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Tillory Andrews, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Stoddard Pintard Johnston, of New York.
Second Lieut. Lewis Allison Hudgins, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Levi Monroe Bricker, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Thomas Paul Ahern, of California.
Lawrence Iverson, of New York.
Herbert Macmillan, of New York.
Second Lieut. John Pehrson MacNeill, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Archibald Luther Parmelee, of California.
Second Lieut. Robert Emmett Ryerson, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Sam Henry Coile, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Junius Bew Peake, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Sam Williams Anderson, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Richard Blodgett Cross, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Geoffrey Airlie Ogilvie, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Scott Cansler, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Meade Holstein, jr., Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Joseph Gerald Cole, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ward Rubendall, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clyde LeGage Walker, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Richard Brownley Gayle, of Virginia.
Second Lieut. Stillman Brainard Hyde, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Winston Woodard Little, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Patterson Wagner, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Andrew Spanogle, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Henry Morrell Atkinson, jr., Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Spurgeon Harris, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Paul Wolcott Rutledge, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alvin Clark Smith, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Christopher Corliss, of Massachusetts.
Robert Tappan Chaplin, of the District of Columbia.
Second Lieut. Chester Bailey McCoid, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Hugh Gray Lieber, of Oklahoma.
Earle Williams Marvin, of South Carolina.
Second Lieut. Robert Goodwyn Rhett, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Kenneth Morris, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Emmet Bates, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Marshall Lawrence Gosserand, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Winthrop Myers Allen, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Maxwell Renvell McMillan, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. St. John Waddell, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Cary Breckinridge Easley, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Nicholas Brown O'Connell, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Junius T. Moore, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Oscar Dubois McNeely, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Abraham Robert Ginsberg, of Pennsylvania.
Second Lieut. Vincent Kinsman Smith, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Lee Ordeman, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Ramon Conroy, of New York.
Second Lieut. Thomas Jeffries Betts, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
David Oliphant Haynes, jr., of New York.
Second Lieut. Edwin John Patton, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Morris Clinton Handwerk, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Herbert Benjamin Knox, jr., of Pennsylvania.
Charles Cobb, 3d, of Tennessee.
Second Lieut. Benjamin Franklin Harmon, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Albert Densmore, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Charles C. Bell, jr., of Missouri.
Second Lieut. Charles William Lawrance, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
First Lieut. Edgar Carlyle Outten, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. David Warner Burgoon, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Raymond Blanton Bottom, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Farrant Lewis Turner, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Henry Terry Morrison, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lee Duren Pettingill, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Malcolm Harrison Ross, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leonard Roscoe Crews, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Marshall Jobes, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Thomas Joseph Delaney, of Connecticut.
Second Lieut. William Fraser Cassedy, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Winthrop Loveland, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Scott Hayes, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Webster Hamlin Warren, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Callan E. England, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Evan Heber Benoy, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Brown Bethea, jr., Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles William Higgins, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Hugh Nathan Herrick, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Wesley Norrick, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Milton Livermore Dodge, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Robert Mochrie, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Albert Blakeslee Ede, of Illinois.

Second Lieut. Donald William Tyrrell, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Everett Maxwell Barton, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Warren Slaughter Robinson, of Virginia.
Second Lieut. William Warren Wertz, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Vincent Joseph Flanagan, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Evans Read Crowell, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Simon Lee Bear, of Pennsylvania.
Laurence Willis Hutchinson, of New Jersey.
Gilbert Herman Gaus, of New York.
Second Lieut. James Chester Bates, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Edison Troland, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Alice West, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Louis Howard Thompson, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Albert Bonds, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas William Conrad, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frederick Wilhelm Hoorn, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Cooper Stalter, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Joseph Carson Stephens, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Eugene Reedy Guild, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Thomas Ryder Lannon, of Florida.
Leslie W. Jefferson, of Minnesota.
Second Lieut. Luther Orland Leach, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Denison Jones, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Guy Wesley Thomas, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Leo McMullen, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Charles Rumford Walker, jr., of New Hampshire.
Harold Long Williamson, of Illinois.
Second Lieut. Isaac Wynne, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Temple Hoyne Buell, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Julien Robert Hume, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Reigel Embich, of Pennsylvania.
Second Lieut. Ernest William Soucy, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Donald Brooks Hilton, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Edwin Hill, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Francis Lancaster Christian, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Maitland Bottoms, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Robinson Epes, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Irvin Henry Zeliff, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Harrington Stewart, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Fiacsan, of California.
Edward Norton Horr, of Ohio.
Joseph Edward Simmons, of Michigan.
Second Lieut. Lucius Tuttle Hill, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Hal Francis Corry, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Martin Allen Hayes, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Edward Ramsey Holland, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John Wesley Russey, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Dennett McIntyre, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Harry William Lins, of Pennsylvania.
Second Lieut. Bryan Lee Milburn, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Alexander Berkeley Carrington, jr., of Virginia.
Frederick Henry Bachman, of Pennsylvania.
Second Lieut. Bradley Johnson Saunders, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Herbert Charles Bartlett, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Nyal L. Adams, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Brewer Cooley, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lloyd Gerald Sparks, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arthur Fernando Aston, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Charles Milby Dale, of Minnesota.
Second Lieut. Stanford Rayne, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harry Montgomery Carder, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Anthony Clark, jr., of Massachusetts.
William Wallace Dinsmore, of California.
Arthur Duffy, of Pennsylvania.
Second Lieut. Ellsworth Young, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. John William Fuchs, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Thomas Reed Bartlett, of Kansas.
Second Lieut. Dudley Franklin Taylor, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Leslie Dewitt Corey, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Andrew Jackson Bentley, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Hitch Pritchard, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clyde Mortimer Watson, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Stanley Hamilton Franklin, of Rhode Island.
Second Lieut. Raymond Wilson Symonds, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Scott McConnell, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Detlow Mainch Marthison, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Daniel Harvey, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Jerry Vrchlicky Matejka, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Arthur de Vries Burke, of West Virginia.
Second Lieut. Roy Lee Peck, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Edwin Eugene Aldin, of Massachusetts.
Thomas Lamar Cleaton, of Virginia.
Second Lieut. Charles Lennon Miller, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Joseph Earl Seiter, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William John Hiller, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Adkins Foote Bowden, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Frank Harold Haupert, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leroy Kerr Thompson, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Milton Heilfron, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps..
Second Lieut. Leonard Ober, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Flory Begoon, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Maurice Francis Dunne, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Adam Jackson Bennett, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. William Hesketh, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Curtis McFarland, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. David Maxwell Waddey, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Harry James Rice, of New York.

Second Lieut. Frazier Groff, Field Artillery, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Ambrose O'Leary, of New Jersey.
Joseph Jennings Clarkson, of Connecticut.
Second Lieut. Joseph William Vann, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Guy Early Cate, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter John Wolfe, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Lloyd M. Hanna, of South Dakota.
Second Lieut. Severn Parker Costin Duvall, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James de Graffenriede Graves, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Hiram Hitchcock Maynard, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. George Warren Dunn, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Willard Walters, of the District of Columbia.
Richard Cox Coupland, of New York.
William Joseph Burke, of Pennsylvania.
George Hammond Tilghman, of Maryland.
George William Brent, of Virginia.
Second Lieut. John Cornelius Roberts, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Daniel Webster Hickey, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Atkinson Jones, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Edwin Meade Newton, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Samuel James Ogilvie, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
James Webb Benton, of New York.
Second Lieut. Bruce W. Mason, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Stapleton Conway Deitrick, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arthur Wilson Winship, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Elvin Leon Barr, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Thomas D'Arcey Brophy, of Massachusetts.
James Emerson Troupe, of Minnesota.
Second Lieut. John D. Hindle, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Douglas Eaton Morrison, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ray Omer Edwards, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Samuel Davenport Bridge, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Carl Wood, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Thomas Eugene Jeffords, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Richard Dale, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Leslie Oakes Carr, jr., Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John McClelland Abrams, of Pennsylvania.
Ward Edwin Becker, of Minnesota.
Second Lieut. George Herbert Glover Campbell, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Amory Oliver, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Seth Gerson Hess, of New York.
Second Lieut. John Webster Becker, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. James Boyden Crelvo Siske, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Ralph Scallon Herman, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Clarence Webb Dresser, Engineer Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Kenneth George Brown, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert James Malone, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Louis Andre Lamoreux, of New York.
William Wayne Murphey, of Louisiana.
Earl Hendry, of New York.
Chester Edward Ames, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Harry Bertram Aaron, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
William Boyd Sommerville, jr., of New York.
Second Lieut. James Lawrence Whalen, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Locke Doggett, jr., of Florida.
Second Lieut. Frank Hendricks Hastings, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Stephen Wilkins Thompson, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Joseph Hiram Gilbreth, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Adolph Frederick Youngberg, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Harold Artemas Packard, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Walter Allan Moore, jr., Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Paul Americus Harris, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
John Aloysius Malone, of Pennsylvania.
Harry William Emil Bukowsky, of Oregon.
Howard Wright Reilly, of Colorado.
Walter Edward Hugins, of Colorado.
John Adolph Lindner, of Maryland.
Raymond Miller Richardson, of Maine.
Marion Nimmo Fisher, of Virginia.
Charles Oliver Pengra, of Massachusetts.
Second Lieut. Lionel David Smiley, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Gilbert Archibald, Coast Artillery Corps, Reserve Corps.
Edward Garrett Cowen, of Tennessee.
Second Lieut. ———, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Kenyon Putnam Flagg, of New York.
Charles Miller Black, of Colorado.
Murray Hoffman, of New York.
Waldo Huntting Rice, of Massachusetts.
Joseph Burske Hafer, of California.
Leavitt Randall Barker, of Iowa.
Second Lieut. Eben Sumner Draper, Coast Artillery Corps, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Carl Frederick Westerberg, of New Jersey.
John B. Roller, of Virginia.
Albert Converse Rountree, of Georgia.
James Kelsey Cogswell, of New Hampshire.
George Arthur Wilson, of Virginia.
Walter Burroughs Strong, of New York.
Walter H. Rice, of South Carolina.
Thomas Henry Healy, of the District of Columbia.
Second Lieut. Roy Arthur Horning, Engineers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Henry Augustine Harkins, of California.
George Bernhard Anderson, of Massachusetts.
David Longfellow Patten, of Massachusetts.
George Edward Moore, of North Carolina.
John Atkinson Moore, of Kentucky.
Russell Meade Neff, of Michigan.
Second Lieut. Daniel Howe Hoge, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Reamer Walker Argo, of Pennsylvania.
Edward Lucien Supple, of California.
Francis Whittlesey Swain, of Massachusetts.
William Kirk Fowler, jr., of New York.
Alexander Maxwell Hamburg, of New York.
Fred Beebe Hanchett, jr., of Illinois.
Paul Hatch, of Massachusetts.
Willard Paine Woodman, of Maine.
Walter Hannum Wheatley, of Colorado.
Armistead Landon Wellford, jr., of Virginia.
Samuel McCullough, of Massachusetts.
Owen Miner Rose, of Minnesota.
Frank Patterson Christian, jr., of Virginia.
Wilber Russell Ellis, of Virginia.
John V. Fenton, of New York.
Cyrus Bashford Austin, jr., of Ohio.
Mahlon Milton Read, of Massachusetts.
Roland Virgil Vaughn, of Massachusetts.
Allen Ferdinand Grum, of Virginia.
Donald Whitaker Campbell, of Massachusetts.
Frank Brodsky, of New York.
Bernard Clark Dailey, of New York.
Francis Paul McKenney, of Maine.
Second Lieut. William Cross Ferguson, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.

George Montgomery Lovejoy, jr., of Connecticut.
Eugene Thomas Conway, of California.
Edward Carleton Moran, jr., of Maine.
John Woodbury Leavitt, of Massachusetts.
Richard Forrest Evans, of Massachusetts.
Clarence Stephen Babbitt, of Pennsylvania.
Robert Sherman Lewis, of the District of Columbia.
Walter Scott Stewart, of Rhode Island.
Linwood Irving Noyes, of Wisconsin.
Allyn Denison Stoddard, of Connecticut.
Arthur Knowles Stewart, of Rhode Island.
Adolf Blunk, of Nebraska.
McClellan Ratchford, of Alabama.
Standish Edmund Berry, of Colorado.
Hugh Williamson Rowan, of New York.
Edward Prescott Wright, of California.
Edward Columbus Jerome, of North Carolina.
Herbert Kuno Schulz, of California.
Robert Elwyn DeMerritt, of Massachusetts.
Jay Thompson Bell, of Michigan.
James Franklin Powell, of Virginia.
William Dalton Hohenthal, of California.
William Shelter Baxter, of New York.
Joseph Hall Van Schoick, of New Jersey.
Harry Browne Beale, of Virginia.
Rufus Laurence Nelson, of New Hampshire.
Henry Lafayette Miller, of New Hampshire.
James Ralph Lowder, of Iowa.
Frederick Mason Fischer, of New York.
Robert Joseph Miskovsky, of Nebraska.
Bayard B. Buchanan, of Oregon.
John Thomas Schneider, of Tennessee.
Willard Warren Scott, of South Dakota.
Curt Paul Richter, of Colorado.
Harold Deas, of New York.
Irving LaFetra Arbeely, of the District of Columbia.
Edwin Philip Hart, of Illinois.
Assistant Engineer Lee Bodenhamer, Coast Artillery Corps, Fort Mills, Philippine Islands.
Leonard Louis Davis, of Illinois.
Frederick William White, jr., of Connecticut.
Franklin Temple Ingraham, of Massachusetts.
George Roy Genung, of New York.
Capt. William Langley Granbery, jr., First Infantry, Tennessee National Guard, Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.
Harold Leo Stiebel, of Maryland.
Gilbert Agnew Hunt, of the District of Columbia.
Webster Fletcher Putnam, jr., of Colorado.
Merle Halsey Davis, of Vermont.
Frank Simmons Hubbard, of Massachusetts.
George Berry Dobyns, of Pennsylvania.
Henry Devries Cassard, of Maryland.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS, BY PROMOTION, IN THE ARMY.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

To be captains.

First Lieut. Herman H. Pohl, from August 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Gerald A. Counts, from August 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Hiram B. Ely, from August 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Kenneth M. Moore, from August 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Charles D. Harris, from August 30, 1917.
First Lieut. Edmond H. Levy, from September 2, 1917.
First Lieut. Thomas D. Stamps, from September 19, 1917.

To be first lieutenants with rank from August 30, 1917.

Second Lieut. Herman H. Pohl.
Second Lieut. Gerald A. Counts.
Second Lieut. Hiram B. Ely.
Second Lieut. Kenneth M. Moore.
Second Lieut. Charles D. Harris.
Second Lieut. Edmond H. Levy.
Second Lieut. Thomas D. Stamps.
Second Lieut. Bartley M. Harloe.
Second Lieut. Starr C. Wardrop.
Second Lieut. Girard B. Troland.
Second Lieut. Llewellyn M. Griffith.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE ARMY.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

First Lieut. Francis Fielding-Reid, Infantry, to be first lieutenant of Field Artillery with rank from February 25, 1917.

First Lieut. Frederick R. Baker, Infantry, to be first lieutenant of Field Artillery with rank from August 8, 1917.

INFANTRY ARM.

First Lieut. Charles W. Chalker, Field Artillery, to be first lieutenant of Infantry with rank from August 8, 1917.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

First Lieut. Austin Mc. McDonnell, Coast Artillery Corps, to be captain from July 1, 1917, to fill an existing vacancy.

Second Lieut. Austin Mc. McDonnell, Coast Artillery Corps, to be first lieutenant from July 1, 1917, to fill an existing vacancy.

VETERINARY CORPS.

To be veterinarians.

Assistant Veterinarian Robert Vans Agnew, from June 3, 1916.

Assistant Veterinarian Richard H. Power, from October 26, 1916.

Assistant Veterinarian Henry W. Peter, from February 3, 1917.

Assistant Veterinarian William P. Hill, from February 4, 1917.

Assistant Veterinarian Jules H. Uri, from February 6, 1917.

Assistant Veterinarian John A. McKinnon, from March 26, 1917.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 17, 1917.

MEMBER OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Balthasar H. Meyer to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the term of seven years.

EXPLOSIVES INSPECTORS.

The following named to be explosives inspectors for the States named, respectively:

Walter K. McAdory, Alabama.
Edward L. Shaw, Arizona.
Edwin T. Reaves, Arkansas.
John M. Griffin, California.
Thomas S. Price, Colorado.
James E. McGann, Connecticut.
William F. Hoey, Delaware.
Clarence E. Woods, Florida.
Carlos H. Mason, Georgia.
Edgar S. Elder, Idaho.
Lemuel T. Osborn, Indiana.
John J. Hughes, Iowa.
William J. Duval, Kansas.
Thomas S. Rhea, Kentucky.
Isaac A. Broussard, Louisiana.
Leon O. Tebbetts, Maine.
Lewis A. Griffith, Maryland.
Albert E. Stevenson, Michigan.
Madison C. Bowler, Minnesota.
Ellis S. Middleton, Mississippi.
Walter L. Lampkin, Missouri.
Jeremiah W. Farrell, Montana.
Charles F. Clark, Nebraska.
Denver S. Dickerson, Nevada.
Andrew W. Bingham, New Hampshire.
Edward D. Jackson, New York.
Miles C. Stewart, New Mexico.
Daniel A. McDonald, North Carolina.
William P. Porterfield, North Dakota.
Jasper S. Kinslow, Ohio.
Fred Rains, Oklahoma.
William N. Campbell, Oregon.
John W. Rittenhouse, Pennsylvania.
Francis E. Sullivan, Rhode Island.
William Banks, South Carolina.
Michael R. Magner, South Dakota.
Albert M. Leach, Tennessee.
Charles B. Watters, Texas.
David C. Dunbar, Utah.
Park H. Pollard, Vermont.
Martin Williams, Virginia.
Walter G. Ronald, Washington.
Edwin M. Gilkeson, West Virginia.
James A. Berry, Wyoming.
D. C. Sargent, Alaska.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 17, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, humbly and devoutly we bow in Thy Holy Presence, with mingled regrets and gratitude in our hearts—regrets, that we have been drawn into the most sanguinary and cruel war of the ages, to defend our sacred rights, and the rights of those who are engaged with us, against a cruel and insidious foe; gratitude, that the young men of our country are responding nobly, patriotically, bravely to the call of the colors in this hour of distress and peril.

Be with the fathers and mothers, wives and children, who have given their dear ones to defend all that is nearest and dearest to our hearts. God, be with them till they meet again.

Grant success to our arms, and bring to the world an enduring peace through the example of Him, who with righteous indignation drove the money changers from the temple dedicated to Thee.

And everlasting praise be Thine. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 15, 1917, was read and approved.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a table prepared by the Internal-Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department touching the excess-profits tax and a statement by Mr. Roper concerning the law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a table respecting the internal-revenue act. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The table and statement referred to are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, December 3, 1917.

TREATMENT UNDER SECTION 201, ACT OF OCTOBER 3, 1917, OF THE DEDUCTION AUTHORIZED BY SECTION 203, 204, 205, OR 210.

To collectors of internal revenue and internal-revenue agents in charge:

The method of allowing the deduction authorized by section 203 204, 205, or 210 of the act of October 3, 1917, will be as follows:

In any case in which the deduction provided for in section 203, 204, 205, or 210 is greater than 15 per cent of the invested capital and therefore can not be fully allowed under the first rate or bracket of section 201, then in that event any remaining portion of the deduction will be allowed under the second bracket, and continued, if necessary, into the succeeding bracket or brackets until the entire amount of the deduction is allowed.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

An individual or partnership engaged in the manufacturing business with a capital of $30,000 and a net income of $12,000 for the taxable year, an average prewar net income of 9 per cent, or $2,700, and a total deduction of $8,700.

Bracket.	Rate (per cent).	Amount taxable under each bracket.	Tax.
First	20	.....	.....
Second	25	.....	.....
Third	35	.....	.....
Fourth	45	$1,200	$540
Fifth	60	2,100	1,260
Total	.....	.....	1,800

A corporation engaged in the manufacturing business with a capital of $30,000 and a net income of $12,000 for the taxable year, an average pre-war net income of 9 per cent, or $2,700, and a total deduction of $5,700.

Bracket.	Rate (per cent).	Amount taxable under each bracket.	Tax.
First	20	.....	.....
Second	25	$300	$75
Third	35	1,500	525
Fourth	45	2,400	1,080
Fifth	60	2,100	1,260
Total	.....	.....	2,940

DANIEL C. ROPER,
Commissioner.

Approved:
W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

[Speech of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Dec. 13, 1917.]

THE WAR-REVENUE ACT AND THE TAXPAYER.

When the full significance of winning this war is properly understood it will be seen that no country ever chiseled into statute a measure of greater importance than the war-revenue act of October 3, 1917. This law undertakes to provide a large portion of the necessary money to defend and perpetuate those institutions to which our forefathers devoted their lives. In this sense it is a beacon light toward which people the world around confidently look, for the liberties of our allies are equally dependent with ours upon the necessary financial support which this act undertakes to provide.

It is an interesting law in that it more generally distributes the burden of taxation than any internal revenue measure in the history of our country. It touches more nearly every phase of industry, and therefore becomes of greater personal interest to our people than any previous tax measure. Because of decreased exemptions the personal income tax will reach six or seven million persons who have heretofore not made returns. This number includes a large proportion of our farmers, a vast number of retail merchants, salaried employees, wage earners, and laborers. In addition, there is an estate tax, a capital stock tax on corporations, an excess-profits tax on individuals, partnerships, and corporations, and excise tax on dealers in a large number of commodities, a variety of stamp taxes, a tax on admissions and dues, a tax on public facilities, such as railway transportation, telegraph and telephone messages, and insurance policies, occupational taxes, and the special taxes on alcoholic and nonalcoholic beverages, cigars, tobacco, perfumeries, and various other objects. Finally, there is the munition manufacturers' tax and the increase in postage rates. In short, this war-revenue act is the most comprehensive tax law ever enacted, and the man who escapes its provisions is indeed an inconsequential member of his community.

Some persons have undertaken to criticize the law and to point out its crudeness and inequalities. Imperfections in the law are not to be wondered at when it is remembered that so many of its provisions invade virgin territory. A careful study of the act, however, will convince the unbiased student that it is a remarkable piece of legislation, requiring only an intelligent and sympathetic attitude on the part alike of administrative officials, the Congress, and the people to bring it into workable form and to accomplish its purpose without destroying business or visiting undue hardship upon taxpayers who properly cooperate in its administration. But to accomplish these desirable ends the sympathetic and patriotic cooperation of the Congress, the administrative officials, and taxpayers are each and all indispensable. If they are assured there need be no undue anxiety. A good law may be ruined by reckless methods of administration, and a defective law vastly improved by intelligent and painstaking administration. Considerations of this nature prompted the Secretary of the Treasury soon after the passage of the law to call to my assistance in interpreting the excess-profits provisions of the law nine able and representative American business men. For several weeks these men have devoted their entire time without compensation to hearing and studying the views of taxpayers regarding the excess-profits law to the end that they may be able to give to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue information as to business based upon fresh and up-to-date knowledge. The end sought is to collect the tax which the law imposes with the least possible hardship and inequality. These excess-profits advisers have brought to the assistance of the Bureau of Internal Revenue a dependable knowledge of the viewpoint of the taxpayer and of business conditions which is essential to the practical solution of the problems with which we are confronted.

This I believe to be the first time that any Government department has worked out a cooperative plan for ascertaining and digesting the business and industrial conditions affected by a Federal law. It is a step toward that understanding that should prevail in every democracy between the people and those whose duty it is to administer the law.

In furtherance of the desire of the department to solve its problems in the light of actual conditions rather than of superficial considerations there has been called to its assistance a group of legal advisers composed of representative lawyers of very broad experience, who are patriotically giving without cost to the Government assistance that we could not purchase in interpreting the law.

Following the publication soon to be made of the rules and regulations for the administration of the law is to come the tremendous task of actually collecting the taxes. The period between January 1 and March 1 is fixed by law for the filing of returns by the taxpayers. Payment must be made before June 15.

The campaign of administration involves a campaign of education. It is intended that every available avenue shall be utilized for informing taxpayers as to the amount of tax for which they are liable, and how, when, and where their taxes are to be paid.

To this end the field force of the bureau is to be expanded and reorganized and specially charged with the duty of coming into personal contact, between January 1 and March 1, as nearly as possible, with every person subject to this tax.

Schools of instruction are to be held in every collection district and early in the new year a competent revenue official will be sent into every county in the United States. These agents will be provided with all necessary forms and will be qualified to render assistance to taxpayers in making out their returns. Public announcement will be made through the press of the dates when these men will visit each community and taxpayers will be urged to call on them promptly. Their services are free and there should be no necessity for anyone to incur expense in the preparation of his return.

Plans have also been perfected whereby the revenue field officers are to have the cooperative aid of the State and county councils of national defense not only in disseminating information regarding the law but in arousing and stimulating a patriotic attitude toward war taxation. Volunteer assistance will be rendered also by committees of bankers, accountants, postmasters, and by the highly trained field force of the Department of Agriculture.

We hope so thoroughly to cover the field that ignorance of the law may not be consistently offered by any taxpayer as an excuse for failure to comply with its requirements. It must not be overlooked that the law plainly imposes upon the taxpayer the duty of seeking the revenue officials and of complying with its provisions and prescribes rigid penalties for failure to comply with them.

As a practical aid to the millions of new taxpayers, we have devised a comparatively simple, self-explanatory income-tax return form for the use of persons having a net income of less than $3,000. Many of these people do not keep books or records of accounts. They are not familiar with accounting terms and methods and would be unnecessarily confused if confronted with a form which carried the intricate questions required by the surtax and excess-profits tax features of the law. Consequently, the man of small income, who is subject only to the normal tax of 2 per cent, is to have the benefit of a schedule drafted in the simplest possible form and language.

The man of larger income, who is required to compute surtax and excess-profits taxes in addition to the normal tax, will be required to use more detailed forms with appropriate instructions.

As illustrative of some of the recommendations touching the excess-profits tax, which are now being considered with a view to presenting them to the Secretary of the Treasury, the following, among others, may be cited:

Allowance of reasonable salaries in the case of partnerships and individuals, in order to place them on an equal basis in this respect with corporations. The effect of this allowance would be to transfer a reasonable salary allowance from income derived from capital invested, all of which would otherwise be taxable under the graduated rates of section 201, to section 209 which imposes a flat rate of 8 per cent on salaries and other income. It is readily seen that such a construction is fully within the spirit and intent of the law. It is within the letter of section 209, which allows each individual who really earns a salary by personal exertion, no matter in what business connection, to have it taxed under the 8 per cent provision of section 209.

That the 8 per cent rate be made to apply to professional men even if a small amount of capital is employed by them.

That merchants be permitted to make inventories of merchandise either at cost or at market value. That brokers be included, on the ground that they are merchants of securities.

That any taxpayer who is content with a 7 per cent deduction upon his invested capital will not be called upon to make a complete return of his prewar capital and income.

You have already observed that the Secretary of the Treasury has approved of a Treasury decision allowing the full exemption provided by the Congress to corporations in sections 201 to 203. The difficulty here arose that a definite exemption was provided for in section 203, but the mechanics provided for applying the exemption in section 201 were left incomplete in a limited number of cases. Hence this decision carries out the manifest intent and purpose of the Congress.

Without further taxing you with the details of our study of the law, I would state that we are confident that the rules and regulations to be adopted will interpret the law in a manner which will be in full accord with its intent and in harmony with the methods of legitimate business and the rights of the taxpayers. It is neither hoped nor expected that these regulations will please every taxpayer. They would not be good regulations if they did. The spirit of honest cooperation with the taxpayer, however, is being instilled into every employee of the bureau and will be insisted upon at all times and in all places.

All taxation is burdensome. War taxes are necessarily so, because they are heavy. The Government's needs are pressing, however, and must be met. The law imposes an obligation upon every citizen which he must meet honestly, patriotically, and, we hope, cheerfully. We have many evidences that American patriotism is responding to this condition.

No agency has done more or is capable of doing more to bring about these desirable ends than the business press of the country. You are now contributing space to this work. The people can only be reached and aroused through the kind of campaign that you are waging. Through your editorial columns you can point out anew your country's needs and the necessity of taxation as the fundamental method of financing this war. You will picture taxation for war purposes as an essential prerequisite to victory and as a necessary defense to liberty. The man who pays his liberty tax in full, without question or murmur, is no less a patriot than the man who invests in the liberty bond or volunteers his services for military duty. This is the spirit of America and I congratulate our country on the patriotic manifestation of cooperation by your great agency for publicity.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a petition signed by the executive officers of the State of Colorado against the provisions of the revenue law exempting State officers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following notice of resignation.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have to-day transmitted to the governor of the State of New York my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the seventh district of New York, to take effect December 31, 1917.

Respectfully, yours, JOHN J. FITZGERALD.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The SPEAKER. This day has been set apart for the consideration of the prohibition amendment, Senate joint resolution 17, and the Chair knowing that it is an exciting question on the floor and in the galleries asks all of the Members to assist in maintaining order and decorum, and warns the people in the galleries in advance that they are here through the courtesy of the House, and that any demonstration of assent or dissent is absolutely forbidden. If there is any evidence of anything of the kind, the Chair will have the galleries cleared. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB].

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, I call up Senate joint resolution 17, and before beginning the debate upon it I would like to have some understanding as to who shall control the time both for and against the resolution. Of course, I would like to control the time in favor of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any suggestion?

Mr. WEBB. I suggest that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], the ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, control half the time, with the understanding that I control the other half, with the further understanding that half of my time be given to those on this side in opposition to the resolution and half of Mr. VOLSTEAD's time be given to those on that side in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why should not some one in opposition to the resolution control the time?

Mr. WEBB. We have tried to get somebody to do that and no one seems to want to do it.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that Mr. VOLSTEAD is going to make exactly that arrangement with those who are opposed to the resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, would it be agreeable to the gentleman from North Carolina to yield one-half of his time in opposition to the ranking Democratic member on the committee in opposition to the amendment, and the gentleman from Minnesota yield one-half of his time in opposition to the amendment to the ranking member, or next ranking member, on the Republican side of the committee in opposition to the amendment on the Republican side?

Mr. WEBB. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to yield half of my time to some member of the committee who is opposed to the resolution on the Republican side if the gentleman desires that.

Mr. GARNER. Why not yield it to some one on the Democratic side?

Mr. WEBB. I think that would be better, but that was the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I insist that the time in opposition to this resolution be controlled by those who are actually opposed to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield until I make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether the suggestion made by me a moment ago is not agreeable, and that the gentleman from North Carolina control half the time and the gentleman from Minnesota half the time, and that each of them respectively yield one-half of their time to some one on their side in opposition to the resolution. In that way half of the time will be controlled in opposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not have four men controlling the time and regulating the distribution of the order of speakers. The time must be in the control of two men, one representing those in favor of the resolution and one representing those opposed to it. I am opposed to this resolution and I do not propose that two men in favor of it shall control the disposition of speaking upon it.

Mr. GILLETT. Why should not there be four men? Why should there not be one on the Democratic side in favor of it and one opposed to it, and one on the Republican side in favor of it and one opposed to it? That will divide the time equally.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not a partisan question. There are some Members of the House in favor of the resolution and some against it, and on that the House will divide and not on partisan lines.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will pardon me, there is not any disposition to take advantage. The idea is to divide the time equally between the two sides, and it seems to me it can be done in that way just as well as any other.

Mr. WEBB. I want to supplement the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota that there is no desire to take advantage of the opposition to this resolution. We tried to get two or three of the ranking men opposed to the resolution to take charge of the time——

Mr. IGOE. Oh, no.

Mr. WEBB. I mean on the Republican side.

Mr. IGOE. That is all right.

Mr. WEBB. I suggest that I control the time in favor of the resolution and that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] be permitted to control the time in opposition of the resolution.

Mr. GILLETT. I object to that; I think Mr. VOLSTEAD ought to have half the time.

Mr. GORDON. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Minnesota is in favor of the resolution and he is not entitled to control half the time.

Mr. GILLETT. Why not as much as the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from North Carolina is the chairman of the committee and under the unbroken usages of the House he is entitled to control it. If there is any gentleman on that side opposed to the resolution, this side is willing that he shall control the time against it, but is not willing for some one in favor of the resolution to control the time against it.

Mr. GILLETT. I will not consent to that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for an hour.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to the House that this constitutional prohibition amendment is before the House with Republicans and Democrats favoring it and Democrats and Republicans opposing it, so why not let the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Minnesota control half the time in favor of the proposed amendment and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] control half the time against the amendment and then they can arrange it among themselves.

Mr. GILLETT. That is satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that in the first place the time, of course, be divided into two halves, one in favor and the other against; that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] control the time in favor and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] control the time against.

Mr. DYER. I suggest that my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]; ranking me on the committee, control the time against the resolution.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would have put the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] in because I understood he is the ranking member after Mr. VOLSTEAD, but I understood he did not desire it.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will substitute Mr. GRAHAM'S name for Mr. DYER. Under that arrangement the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] controls the prohibition side among the Democrats and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] among the Republicans in favor of prohibition, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] the opposition among the Democrats and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] the opposition among the Republicans. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within six years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

"SEC. 3. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "The," insert "After one year from the ratification of this article the."

Strike out sections 2 and 3 and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire before I begin how much time I can have under my control, so I can gauge my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know; there never has been any arrangement about how long this general debate shall run.

Mr. WEBB. At 5 o'clock all debate closes?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that be understood, so there will be knowledge as to how the time shall be divided.

Mr. WEBB. General debate has already been agreed upon to close at 5 o'clock, all debate, so I would like to know how much time I have.

The SPEAKER. Five and one-half hours is the whole of it.

Mr. WEBB. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Now, a fourth of that is within the gentleman's control.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. WEBB. I have not the time; I am making a parliamentary inquiry, which does not come out of my time.

Mr. DYER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that general debate under the five-minute rule closes at 5 o'clock?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; all time.

Mr. DYER. Then I think we ought to have some time for debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest the gentleman ask unanimous consent that general debate close at a certain hour, and then we will take up the bill under the five-minute rule. I would say 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That would take unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the present agreement dispenses with all necessity of debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. KITCHIN. I was speaking of amendments.

Mr. WEBB. They will be offered during general debate and debated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the understanding that was had the other day was that the debate of all kinds should continue until 5 o'clock, when a vote should be had on the resolution and amendments pending. Now, my parliamentary inquiry is whether or not it was understood that during that time amendments could be offered to be voted upon at that hour.

The SPEAKER. There was not a word said about that.

Mr. WEBB. I think, Mr. Speaker, it was clearly understood from the trend of the debate, however, that during general debate amendments could be offered and debated in general debate.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there was nothing said, will the gentleman make the request that amendments may be offered to be voted upon at 5 o'clock?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly; that is my understanding. I think gentlemen having amendments should be permitted to offer them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman make that request?

Mr. WEBB. I do request that during the general debate, if any gentleman has an amendment to offer, he may do so, and it may be considered along with the general resolution.

Mr. KITCHIN. That will be so, anyway.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent that pending this debate any gentleman can offer an amendment whenever he wishes to do so, and that it to be pending and to be voted on after 5 o'clock. Is there objection [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be notified when I have consumed seven minutes of time.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I believe I will take up your time but briefly in explaining the committee amendments to this resolution as it passed the Senate. The first amendment adopted in the Judiciary Committee was the new section 2. As it passed the Senate it provided that the "Congress" should have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation. Most of the members, including myself, of the Judiciary Committee, both wet and dry, felt that there ought to be a reservation to the State also of power to enforce their prohibition laws. And therefore we amended the resolution by providing that the Congress "and the several States" shall have "concurrent" power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation. So the amendment reads:

The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

I believe, regardless of our division on the dry and wet question, every Member will agree with us that this is a wise and proper amendment. Nobody desires that the Federal Congress shall take away from the various States the right to enforce the prohibition laws of those States. If we do not adopt this amendment from the committee there might be a fight in Congress every two years as to whether the States should be given the right to help enforce this proposed article of the Constitution. Because, as I see it, after the States have delegated to the Federal Congress power to do a certain thing, for instance, to stop the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes, the question is whether the State has not turned over to the Federal Congress the exclusive right to enforce it.

I recall the crime of counterfeiting. It is peculiarly a national offense, because it is offensive to the integrity of the national money, and yet nearly all the States have statutes condemning and punishing counterfeiting. But there the jurisdiction is concurrent, and if the State gets hold of a counterfeiter first the Federal Government sometimes lets the State handle it, but often asks the State to turn him over to the Federal Government. But the States have the right to enforce their laws against counterfeiters because the Congress has given them the jurisdiction. We thought it wise to give both the Congress and the several States concurrent power to enforce this article and let that power be set forth and granted in the article we propose to submit. Hence the amendment we adopted was adopted by the committee and we hope the House will agree with us.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Each State having the power to enforce this Federal law, the query is, With 48 States and the Government, I suppose the law that Idaho has passed would cover the whole country?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, under the police powers of the States every State can prohibit within its boundaries the manufacture and sale.

Mr. WEBB. Indeed, within its boundaries. And that is what we want to permit them to continue to do. We do not want 10,000 Federal officers, with all the expense of salaries, going over the country enforcing these laws when the States have their own officers to do so and are willing to do so.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. DEWALT. Under this amendment in section 2 you are giving Congress and the several States concurrent power. Another query: Suppose the State of Ohio should by its legislature pass a law or laws for the enforcement of this constitutional amendment. Suppose that law was not in conformance with the regulations as passed by Congress for the enforcement of this same provision of the Constitution, having, as you say, for this clause, concurrent power. Which of the two powers would be supreme, if any?

Mr. WEBB. The one getting jurisdiction first, because both powers would be supreme, and one supreme power would have no right to take the case away from another supreme power.

Mr. DEWALT. Does the gentleman say that as a lawyer?

Mr. WEBB. I unquestionably do. Both powers are supreme to enforce this article, and the first getting jurisdiction would enforce it.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WEBB. I can not. My time is running rapidly. I am embarrassed in not having more time.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Suppose there is a conflict in the laws between the laws of the State and the laws of the Federal Government?

Mr. WEBB. There would be none, because there would be no conflict of jurisdiction.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. This amendment is that the State shall have jurisdiction to legislate on the subject?

Mr. WEBB. If the State should get jurisdiction first, the State jurisdiction would apply; and if the Government should get jurisdiction first, the Government jurisdiction would apply. Both would be supreme, and it would only be a question as to who got the offender first. Now, the next question——

The SPEAKER. The seven minutes have expired.

Mr. WEBB. I will proceed a little while longer.

The SPEAKER. How much longer?

Mr. WEBB. I will use 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes more?

Mr. WEBB. No, sir; eight minutes more.

The next amendment is the one giving the brewers, distillers, and the bar rooms of the country two years in which to wind up their business in case the amendment should be ratified by the States. Two years seems to be a little long, but the idea of giving the brewers and distillers one year after ratification to wind up their business struck the dry members of the committee as being fair and just. We realize that the brewing business and the distilling business are legitimate at present in a number of States. It is legitimate to run bar rooms, and while we prohibitionists desire to have the country go dry, we do not propose to let our zeal in that great cause destroy our sense of justice, and I for one was willing to advocate the right of the brewers and distillers to have one year to wind up their business. We have distinguished precedents for this in the action of nearly all the dry States. Most of the States give them a year in which they may wind up their business. We saw no objection to giving them at least a year after this business is outlawed to wind up their affairs. I wanted to explain it to the House. I think it is a perfectly fair amendment, and I will be very glad to vote for it, and I hope the dry Members will vote for it. At the same time our opponents agreed to give the States one year longer in which to pass this amendment. As the amendment came from the Senate, it was limited to six years. If it failed in that time to be ratified by the several States it became inoperative and void.

We agreed to add one year further and make it seven years, so that we have an amendment providing that one year after the adoption of the amendment by the several States it will go into effect; we have given seven years in which the States may adopt it, and we have given the States concurrent power with the Federal Government to enforce it. I believe that the committee has strengthened the amendment. With those amendments I really believe we have made the amendment stronger and fairer.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; I yield just for one question.

Mr. FESS. I think this is the only case where there was a limitation of any sort as to time. Why was any limitation put on it, as, for instance, seven years?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that that was a compromise in the Senate between our dry friends and our wet friends; and I understand, and, so far as I am concerned I believe, that every constitutional amendment ought to have some limitation of this kind to it. I do not believe in Congress submitting to the 48 States an amendment and letting it remain out forever, with no limitation attached to it. In the interest of definite and certain legislation there ought to be some limitation to the passage or adoption of all these constitutional amendments submitted by Congress. I will say to my friend that personally I wanted 10 years as the limitation, but, not being able to get that, I was willing to accept 6. But, being able to get 7, we thought that more agreeable and satisfactory to the "drys" and acceptable to the "wets," and therefore we made it 7 years.

Mr. FESS. It was not true with respect to the income-tax amendment or the amendment in reference to the election of Senators directly by the people.

Mr. WEBB. No; but our committee put it in the seven-year limitation with reference to woman suffrage. I do not believe that hereafter there will be an amendment submitted to the States without a limitation being attached to it. There is an amendment or two—and I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] to discuss the legality of these limitations presently—an amendment or two that have been out for a hundred years and have been forgotten.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Has there not been some question as to whether or not the Congress has the right to place this limitation on it?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. If so, what does the gentleman think about that legal proposition?

Mr. WEBB. I think we have the power to do it. But I am going, as I said, to call upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] to go into that. At my request he has made an investigation of the matter. I know he will do it well.

Now I have hurriedly explained the amendments. I will say that they were agreed to by practically all of the committee, regardless of how they stood on the wet and dry question.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to ask the gentleman his opinion on this question: Section 2 provides that the Congress of the United States shall have the concurrent power of enforcement. What does the gentleman think of the exercise of power by the one excluding the exercise of power by the other?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think the punishment of the offense by the State government would be followed by the punishment of the same offense by the Federal Government, or vice versa. Three years ago, in passing on the prohibition amendment, we provided that the State and Federal Governments might jointly or separately exercise jurisdiction and punish. That meant that the Federal Government might punish a man for the same offense that the State would punish him for. But one punishment ought to be sufficient, although the offense may be committed against two sovereignties. Now having concurrent power, I think the Federal Government can not do it if the State government does it, and vice versa.

Mr. DENISON. Mr Speaker, will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. If that is true—and I think the gentleman is correct—if one of the States should provide very small penalties for the violation of the law, and had jurisdiction first, would not that practically defeat the operation of the law in that State?

Mr. WEBB. It might do it to a limited extent for a little while.

Mr. DENISON. What does the gentleman think of the wisdom of that?

Mr. WEBB. I think it is all right. I am not afraid to trust the States about that. The gentleman need not worry about the States. I never saw one that went counter to the United States Constitution, or whose law officers failed to enforce the law.

Mr. DENISON. But would not that lead to lack of uniformity?

Mr. WEBB. If the States did not do it, the Federal Government will nab a man who has violated the law. If the States will not do it, I do not think the violator of the law can get away with it so long as he is violating a Federal law also.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman refers to the case of counterfeiting, in which he said the United States jurisdiction and the State jurisdiction were concurrent.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Is the gentleman aware of the fact, or is it a fact, that if a State takes jurisdiction of a counterfeiting case and there is a trial and a conviction and a sentence, the United States Government can still try the same offender for that offense and punish him under the criminal satutes?

Mr. WEBB. That is because Congress passed a statute giving the States power to enforce the criminal law against these various acts, and only concurrent jurisdiction is given and that by Congress and not by the Constitution. We propose to give concurrent power by the Constitution itself.

Mr. DEWALT. If this portion of your amendment passes, would the same fact remain—that is, would the State and the Federal power have jurisdiction, and the party be liable to two punishments?

Mr. WEBB. No. I do not think it should be. In the form in which we passed the amendment three years ago that was so, but when the State convicts a man I do not think it wants a man to be convicted again by the Federal Government of the same offense, and vice versa.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does not the gentleman think the law should be uniform in all the States of the Union? If we are going to have prohibition, ought not the law to be uniform in all the States? If three-fourths of the States adopt this amendment, and the others are unfriendly to it, can they not adopt laws giving a minimum penalty and thus defeat the law?

Mr. WEBB. No. In that case the Federal officers will be after the man who violates the law pretty soon and will bring him into a Federal court.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I regret I have not the time now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. WEBB. One minute more, Mr. Speaker, before I sit down. The papers are full this morning of letters both for and against this amendment. One that has attracted some attention is from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, wherein some people claim he is trying to invoke the power of the Federation of Labor in opposition to this amendment. Samuel Gompers never did speak for and never will speak for the American Federation of Labor in opposition to the national prohibition amendment. [Applause.] He takes particular pains in the body of his letter to me to disclaim that he is speaking for the American Federation of Labor. It would be a slander upon the American people, and especially upon the American workingman, to say that they as a class are opposed to National or State prohibition; and as Mr. Bryan said this morning in answer to Mr. Gompers, it would be a worse slander still to intimate that the great laboring classes of this country have got to measure their patriotism by the quart or by the schooner. It is not so. [Applause.] Mr. Gompers says he does not represent the American Federation of Labor, and well may he say it. And while I am on this subject, here are the statements of a few American Federation of Labor presidents and labor leaders from dry States. The first one is from the State of Washington:

I was opposed to the passage of the prohibition act in this State. To the great body of our workingmen, however, the law has been a distinct blessing.

H. P. MARCH,
President Washington State Federation of Labor.

Here is one from Colorado:

I voted against prohibition. I am now irrevocably opposed to the saloon. You could not dig up a corporal's guard of trade-unionists who would vote for a return of the saloon.

WILLIAM C. THORNTON,
President Denver Trades and Labor Assembly.

JULY 22, 1917.

Here is one from Arizona:

Arizona workers are certainly better morally and financially than they were before prohibition was adopted.

JOHN L. DONNELLY,
President Arizona State Federation of Labor.

Ten years ago this town boasted 37 saloons. If anyone mentioned prohibition he was sneered and laughed at. Now, if a vote were taken, this district would vote dry. The workers now almost all have a bank account. The banks instead of saloons are crowded on Saturday night.

ERNEST BECKMAN,
Business Agent, Deputy Organizer, A. F. of L., No. 220 Carpenters and Joiners of America, Wallace, Idaho.

JULY 7, 1917.

That is one of the very organizations that was mentioned by Mr. Gompers in his letter, as suggested by Mr. Denham, whoever he may be, and that letter was written in July 7, 1917.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Wait until I finish. Here is the great State of Iowa, Mr. Speaker:

At the annual convention of the Iowa State Federation of Labor, this year, I was surprised to find a number of the boys who used to think it would be a calamity if the State went dry, telling of the improved condition in their cities since the saloons closed.

LEON A. LINK,
Secretary-Treasurer Waterloo Central Labor Union, Waterloo, Iowa.

JULY 11, 1917.

Here is one from Oregon:

Since the bone-dry law went into effect a rich man's law is seldom referred to. I might say that if the question of repealing the present law in Oregon and going back to the saloons was left to a vote of the union men only, that the State would be so dry that none in 100 years would try to wet it up again.

W. B. SOMERVILLE, Oregon Labor Leader.

JULY 9, 1917.

And you can multiply letters of this kind. The Washington Sunday Star printed more of them yesterday morning, from labor leaders all over the country. The brave ones who love their homes know that the liquor traffic, the saloon, is doing more to destroy their happiness and to destroy their bank accounts and the effectiveness of labor than all other evil agencies of every kind in this country combined, and that is why intelligent labor has risen up and repudiated Mr. Gompers's idea that we ought to keep laborers drinking in order to keep them at work, while we keep our soldiers sober in order to enable them to fight their best. That would be the attitude that Congress would put them in if it should refuse to pass this amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Has the gentleman received any petition from any labor organization with a considerable number of names, the signatures of which he knew were correct?

Mr. WEBB. Not one to me personally, so far as I remember. I have not received a petition from a single labor organization in America, so far as I know, protesting against this amendment. I had a request from a man by the name of Denham, from Philadelphia, representing some of the joiners and brewers and saloons and bartenders, or something of that sort. But they need not worry. All these legitimate trade-unions know that the demand for labor is greater now than it ever was before, and that if they remain sober they will save more money, and the only jobs that will be lost will be those of the saloon and bartenders, and they ought to be put out of business. [Applause.]

I say this, gentlemen of the House, to let you understand the relation of labor to this question. I do not carry a labor card. I do not believe I have a labor union in my district; but it is a very significant fact that during all this fight I have not, so far as I remember, received a petition signed by individual laborers protesting against the passage of this constitutional amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to say to the gentleman that his experience with regard to labor organizations is entirely different from mine. Within the last few days I have had petitions representing union labor to the number of thousands of names, many of whom I distinctly and personally know, who are opposed to the resolution.

Mr. WEBB. I do not say all the labor people are for the constitutional amendment. A great many of them are against it, like a great many lawyers and doctors and bankers who are opposed to it, but I tell you it is a slander to pick out the labor people of this country as a class and say that they are opposed to this resolution, because that is not true, and it is a worse slander to say that their patriotism depends on the amount of beer or liquor that they may be allowed to drink during the war.

Mr. GORDON. Do you claim that the Judiciary Committee has not received thousands upon thousands of remonstrances against this resolution?

Mr. WEBB. They may have in past days, but not within the past few months that I recall.

Mr. GORDON. I have filed thousands with your committee myself; what did the committee do with them?

Mr. WEBB. What is done with all of them—filed them in the file room. The Clerk handles those matters.

Mr. GORDON. Then why did the gentleman say that they had not received any?

Mr. WEBB. We have not, as far as I know, received any directed to me personally as chairman or to the committee.

Mr. GORDON. One of the gentleman's colleagues says that they have received more than a million of them.

Mr. WEBB. They have been addressed to you and to individuals but not to the committee. We have only had two men, as far as I know——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state the population of the States to which he has referred?

Mr. WEBB. No; but the population of Ohio has more great labor unions in it and more organizations of labor than many other States, and the labor unions went for prohibition in the last election. The location of a labor union or the population of a State has little to do with their attitude on the liquor question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And there is as large a population in the State of Ohio probably as in all the rest of the States the gentleman mentions.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In the recent vote for state-wide prohibition in Michigan the urban population, which would naturally include a great many labor votes, counting only the cities of 5,000 population or more, voted dry, giving a dry majority of 12,000 and over.

Mr. WEBB. That is good testimony. That also happened in Akron and Youngstown, Ohio, the great labor hives of the State of Ohio. When you remember that the laboring men did that I resent the idea of putting labor in the attitude of being against prohibition.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is mistaken. Ohio did not go dry.

Mr. WEBB. The cities went dry. I did not say the State. The gentleman need not worry; one more chance and Ohio will go dry, not by eleven hundred but by fifty thousand.

Mr. FESS. The State of Ohio did go dry—that is, 77 counties went dry and 11 went wet.

Mr. WEBB. It will go dry next time.

Mr. Speaker, government is but the organized forces of the nation formed for strengthening its power and advancing its life. Its highest aim is to suppress those agencies which have a tendency to sap and weaken the nation's strength, to suppress vice and crime in order that the nation may, unrestrained by these evils, go forward in its efforts for greater liberty, freedom, and achievement; that it may raise itself into a higher civilization more nearly approaching our ideal of a perfect government.

The use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes has long attracted the attention of our leading statesmen, and with great unanimity has been condemned as one of the greatest agencies for evil and crime that is now retarding our national growth.

The right to make and use intoxicating beverages has so long been enjoyed, and this right so long licensed and sanctioned by Federal taxing laws, that the ignorant have come to the conclusion that it is one of the inalienable rights of man which the Government should not interfere with. Those with broader mental horizons insist that the long-continued toleration of this evil has given those who claim it a vested right to carry on their business or enjoy their beverage; a kind of immunity from any interference by the Government to aid humanity. The one is as fallacious as the other. Either would deprive the Government of one of its chief reasons to exist.

The resolution now under consideration would submit to the States of the Union the one question, whether the Federal Government shall prohibit "the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes."

The submission and ratification of the proposed amendment by the required number of States would be no invasion of States' rights. It would be but the orderly and legal granting of this power to the Federal Government by the legislatures of the several States in the way the sovereign people of the States have provided for amending their constitution.

The people of the United States, when they ordained and established the Constitution for the United States of America, stating in the preamble that it was "to promote the general welfare" and other objects, realized that in order to accomplish their aims it would probably become necessary to add to the powers granted, from time to time, as the nation grew in wealth and population, and as the Government from necessity became more complex. That unforeseen conditions and problems would arise and require solution.

In order to meet such conditions and problems the framers of the Constitution wisely provided in Article V:

> That Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, * * * which * * * shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.

The adoption of the amendment here proposed would not be a move to tear down or weaken this ancient landmark, but would be in keeping with the plan of its framers to add to it a power for "the general welfare" of the people.

If we should hold it too sacred to be changed, we make of it a dead monument to its fathers. Like the "Old Ironsides" that now floats in Boston Harbor, it would still be revered for the splendid service it has performed, but it would not be equipped to meet the modern problems.

If we give it a liberal construction which will afford a reasonable opportunity to amend it as provided for in the fifth article, then like the trees of the forest which add new cells to their structure each recurring season to perpetuate their life and strength, you will make of the Constitution a vital power adapted to this and succeeding generations.

Senator Blair, in a favorable report made to the Senate on a similar resolution in 1888, is authority for the statement that:

> It is well known that but for the belief in the conventions of the States that the opportunity to amend the Constitution would be most liberally afforded by Congress in accordance with the forms provided in that instrument, the original ratification never would have been obtained.

The question of the expediency of passing this resolution is primarily addressed to the Members of Congress. It is only after it has been favorably acted upon by Congress that it is passed out to the States for their ratification.

In passing upon this question I think Congress should view it from two angles: First, whether there is such a public sentiment back of it as to justify Congress in submitting it to the States; and, second, whether we, in our wisdom, approve this grant of power.

I do not believe it is the duty of Congress to submit every proposition that might be offered to the States for their ratification. Aside from the merits which the proposition might possess, such a course would result in a continuous agitation in the States which could not be justified by Congress.

On the other hand, any great question vitally affecting the life of the people that the wisdom of Congress might approve which has found sufficient public favor to lead Congress to believe might be adopted by the requisite number of States should be submitted in order that the sovereign people might pass upon it.

Senator Blair, in 1886, in favorably reporting to the Senate a resolution to amend the Constitution and provide for national prohibition, similar to the one under consderation, says:

> When any considerable and respectable portion of the American people desire to plead their cause in the great tribunal of sovereigns, who, in a free country, decide every fundamental issue in the last resort, it is the duty of Congress to enact such preliminary legislation as is here proposed, so that under the forms of the Constitution they can be heard on the question of its own amendment. To deny this is of the very essence of despotism, and for Congress unreasonably to refuse the hearing is just cause of revolution. The people will demand a hearing for every large and respectable minority, and to grant this opportunity is the purpose of this resolution. Whatever may be the result, all must abide by it. But there can be no justification of a denial of the right to be heard.

In 1890 Senator Blair, in making a favorable report to the Senate upon a similar resolution, sums up the duty of Congress as he sees it in the following extract from his report:

It being a fact that a very large proportion of the American people are anxious that the National Constitution be amended in accordance with the resolution, we believe that they have a right to be heard in the forum of the State legislatures, where alone the question can be decided whether the National Constitution shall be amended. That Constitution points out definitely the manner in which a change in its provisions may be effected. The Constitution of the country must be amended from time to time to correspond with the evolution of the Nation itself, for it is impossible to fetter the growth of the Nation in any direction. It will grow, peacefully or otherwise. The Constitution must yield here and there, corresponding to the necessities of the times and of the people, and the necessary changes be peacefully made, in accordance with the methods of amendment pointed out in the Constitution itself, or revolution and bloodshed will perform their work. The Constitution and the spirit of the age must be one. Whenever any considerable and respectable portion of the American people (and no considerable number can fail to be respectable) desire change in the fundamental law and ask respectful consideration of their propositions by the Nation at large, we hold it to be the duty of Congress to give them a status in the court provided by the Constitution for its own amendment.

I do not think this Congress can fail to find, beyond question, that this proposition is backed by a public sentiment of such strength and character as to not only justify, but require us to submit it to the States for ratification.

This movement is not of a temporary, spasmodic character, which may pass away with the summer, but has received the careful thought and approval of the moral and commercial forces of the Nation.

This and preceding Congresses have been overwhelmed by letters and petitions asking and pleading with Congress to submit this question to the States. These requests come from our highest type of law-abiding Christian men and women, who have their country's welfare closest to their hearts.

As further proof of the strength of this sentiment, it is not improper for me to call attention to the fact that during this Congress the Senate, on the 1st day of August, by a vote of 65 to 20, passed this resolution.

In 1907 only Kansas, North Dakota, and Maine had prohibition laws. Up to September 1, 1914, six additional States had been added. To-day we have legislative prohibition in 27 States of the Union, comprising a population of 61,000,000. Of the 2,543 counties in the United States, 2,238 are dry and only 355 counties in the entire Nation are wet. Over half of the world to-day is dry territory.

In my opinion the time has come when Congress can not fail to recognize the overwhelming demands that are being made from every section of this Nation and from all classes of her people to submit this proposition to the States for their ratification. The aim of the prohibition advocates is that the leaven that has been at work and brought good to the local districts, townships, counties, and finally States, may be permitted to leaven the whole Nation. With such an overwhelming sentiment, making new conquests at each new encounter, is it not reasonable to suppose that this sentiment would be reflected in the action which the several legislatures would take, and that this amendment would be ratified by them?

I appeal to the Members of this House to follow the lead of the Senate and give this proposed amendment your hearty approval as a wise and beneficial policy for this Government to pursue.

The use of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes has long been regarded as a great national evil, which physically, mentally, and morally unfits man for his greatest usefulness.

The fact has been established by carefully compiled statistics that intemperate use of alcoholic beverages by parents weakens the vitality of their offspring, increases their death rate, increases the number of feeble-minded and defective children, and renders them more susceptible and less able to resist disease.

Alcoholic beverages impair the skill, lessen the power of endurance, increase accidents, and shorten the life of those addicted to its use. Alcoholism claims more victims than does either typhoid fever or smallpox. Drink is one cause of over 66,000 deaths every year in the United States. One insane person out of every four owes his affliction to its use, and it is given credit for breaking up over 9,000 happy homes each year.

The religious world has found it undermines the morals of the Nation. The business world has found that it weakens the intellect and has set the stamp of disapproval upon the use of such beverage by men it employs. The courts of the country find it the cause of crime, and justify this conclusion by the records of their criminal courts.

Such being its established reputation, it is not surprising to find the moral and religious forces of the Nation up in arms against it and trying to crush it by whatever means they have.

Is it not time for us to become aroused to the necessity of using the strong arm of the National Government to help suppress this great source of national weakness? This Government can be no stronger that the combined strength and vitality of the people. The Government can not serve its people better than by helping to preserve its people's strength and life.

It would be hard to understand why a National Government that has, with a lavish hand, reached out into the domain of the State and for the sake of protecting property smote down upon the cattle tick and the boll weevil and stopped the ravages of the foot-and-mouth disease, or that strained its power to regulate the commerce from the great manufacturing industries of the Nation in order to curb a practice that might weaken the vitality of the people, would then hesitate to lend its helping hand to meet and blot out the greatest agency for the destruction of property, life, and morals known to man.

The problem of suppressing the use of alcohol as a beverage is bigger than a county or a State. It is a national problem. Local regulations have been of great help in curbing the evil but they are not adequate. It has been demonstrated by an honest effort to regulate the traffic that one wet county in a State will inflict this evil upon the rest of the State. The same is true of a wet State in relation to the other States of the Union. You can not, by regulations, localize the bad effects that flow from this national evil.

Aside from the great difficulty in preventing the transportation of alcoholic beverages from a place where they can be legally made and sold into the dry territory, there would be no local boundary line to stop the degenerates, inebriates, weak-minded, criminal, and diseased persons whom it had produced, and keep them within the political division of the country that had permitted the manufacture and sale of the poison that had caused their sad condition. These would travel faster and with less restraint than the cattle tick, the boll weevil, or the cattle disease, and would become a menace to the health and morals of, and perhaps a public charge upon, some community that maybe had pleaded for an opportunity to help blot out these sore spots in our body politic.

Those engaged in fighting this great national evil think that this Government should cease to be a partner of the liquor manufacturer and seller by licensing such business in return for the tax which such a policy is made to pay. It is estimated that for every dollar collected by the Government in the shape of a tax $20 is paid into the pockets of the men carrying on this business by the poor, diseased slaves of drink. The Government can not afford to pursue this policy for the sake of the revenue it derives, when by doing so it puts it within the power of the liquor interests to collect for their own pockets many times this tax, and often from those who deprive their families of comforts and necessities to pay it. There is no way to accurately estimate the cost to the Government of accidents, crimes, and diseases caused by the traffic, but it must be appalling, and if it could be accurately stated in figures, I feel safe in predicting that no man, in opposition to this resolution, would ever have the temerity to speak or vote against its adoption on account of the incidental loss of taxes that might result from its ratification by the States.

Other solutions have been attempted to solve this liquor problem, but with only partial success. Opponents of the prohibition cause tell us our fight is all wrong; that it is a moral issue and we should appeal to the individual to restrain himself.

This disease of alcoholism is of stealthy character. It stimulates its victim into hilarity while it creeps upon him and binds him as its slave before he feels its grasp, even while the poor victim still boasts of his strength and power to resist it. They are to be pitied, for they need help to free themselves from its bondage. These victims should be able to look to their Government for protection against so dangerous an enemy.

We have already tried moral suasion. Godly men for all these years have preached temperance to the people and have saved many a poor soul from a drunkard's grave, but they still find that their weaker wards stumble on their journey through life and succumb to this frailty of humanity when faced by the alluring invitation of an open bar room, licensed, protected, and taxed, if not encouraged, by this Government of ours. Since we have not been successful in keeping our weaker brother from whisky, let us try keeping whisky from our weaker brother.

Here is a note I have just received from Miss Gordon:

CONGRESSMAN WEBB: It is an honor to present to you, and through you to the House of Representatives, the appeal of 500,000 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, praying for the passage of the joint resolution providing for a referendum to the States on national constitutional prohibition. This appeal comes from a host of home-loving women who with untiring energy and unstinted devotion have wrought marvelously for the moral and spiritual advancement of our country. This appeal comes from half a million patriots who answered promptly the call to the colors. The nobility of woman's sacrifice, the fine quality of her patriotic service, her keen discernment in the adjustment of industrial conditions for women and children, her tender ministrations at home and on the battle field should entitle her to the granting by the Congress of this appeal.

In addition to the petition of women members of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I beg to present a huge petition of the indorsers of the joint resolution for a referendum to the States on national constitutional prohibition secured through the efforts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and representing 8,000,000 men and women of our Republic. Adding to these the petitions sent directly to Members of Congress it is safe to say that our appeal is backed by more than 11,000,000 people. If these petitioners could be massed in solid phalanx in our Capital City you would see more than thirty times the population of the District of Columbia. Unquestionably it is an appeal for an act of true democracy, an appeal for a patriotic, economic measure. Autocracy and alcohol must both be overthrown. "Speed up" is the urgent cry echoing back to us from the awful battle fronts of Europe. Speed up on the prohibition legislation is the respectful appeal of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to the Congress of the United States. We pray that in this crucial time of a stupendous world crisis the House of Representatives will rise to this exalted opportunity and give to the legislatures of the various States the chance to deal with a question so enormously vital to the economic and moral interests of our Republic. When the war is over and a righteous peace has been secured, only the clear brain of a sober Nation can be intrusted with the solution of the mighty problems that will then confront the greatest democracy on earth—the United States of America.

ANNA A. GORDON,
President National W. C. T. U.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I will conclude within 10 minutes, but if not voluntarily I ask the Chair to call my attention to the time. With that understanding, in view of the numerous requests for time, I ask not to be interrupted by questions until I conclude.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the minority members of the Judiciary Committee are in agreement with some of the things that have been done by the committee relative to making Senate joint resolution 17 a better measure. We are in agreement with that provision which permits the lapse of one year after the ratification of this amendment before its full and complete effect is ordered.

We are also in agreement that the power of the State shall not be taken away in the enforcement of this law. We are further in agreement that the policy of amendments should be that they not be deferred through an undetermined length of time; in other words, that there should be a time limit to the ratification of the amendment.

In that same connection I beg leave to say that I deem it important that the Members of this House know that the protection for the full understanding of the people of the State be made, and that not alone there be a time limit for ratification, but that a time should be included in this article of amendment which will permit the State which has voted upon it to reject, if it desires, a ratification already made.

Those are the things which the members of the committee have directly brought out in connection with Senate joint resolution 17 as it came to the committee.

I am opposed to the passage of this article of amendment because I think that it removes from the States the police power given to the States by the Constitution of the United States of America and never before sought to be taken away from them. I believe that this question is a nonpolitical, a nonpartisan question, that it is essentially a social and moral question, and therefore that it is properly for the control of the several States and not at all to be engrafted on the Federal Constitution.

It is not and never has been the policy of the law to engraft upon the Federal Constitution any policies of government. Those are left in two ways—the national provisions are for action of Congress; provisions applying to the States are left to the wisdom of the State legislatures. That has always been recognized and should be recognized to-day.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I regret to say that I have not the time, and I so stated in the beginning of my remarks. The powers are vested in the several States to do and declare whether or not liquor having any alcoholic base shall be used as a beverage or in any other way in the States. That power is completely ratified by acts passed by this Congress which has prohibited the transmission of liquor into dry territory; passed acts in every way affirming the rights of the States to prohibit or regulate alcoholic liquors as a beverage in any and all cases. So this American Congress has done everything it possibly could have done to sustain the rights of the States in this matter of police regulation.

Not alone that, but the Supreme Court of the United States, in a decision made December 10, 1917, just one week ago, in the case of D. Crane, plaintiff, against Campbell, sheriff, and others, known as the Idaho case, has held that the legislature of a State has a right to pass any laws for the regulation or prohibition of the use of alcoholic beverages; that it is no infringement of personal rights for a State to say that there be prohibition even against the personal possession or use of such alcoholic beverage. So I must conclude with the statement that every right guaranteed to the individual States for the regulation of this traffic has been made by this Congress and by the court of last resort, the Supreme Court of the United States.

We contend that the States should have the right to determine whether the States and the people of the States are best served by prohibition or by regulation. It is a constitutional right, and we ask that it be maintained.

Then I am opposed to this resolution for the reason that at this time it substitutes continued controversy for a sane settlement. The President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, upon this floor on December 4 last said that he had most clearly in his mind that the work of this Congress should be work for the winning of this war. It is likewise the work of all our people. I maintain that if this article of amendment be submitted it merely provokes a controversy in every State in the American Union which will necessarily divert into unwise contention the splendid unanimity of the American people.

There are many people in favor of prohibition, honestly in favor of it, and there are many people who are honestly against the prohibition of alcoholic beverages in the United States. Each should be entitled to his expression. Times have changed very materially since the Senate on the 1st of August, 1917, passed this amendment which is now brought into this House. On the 10th of August of this year there was passed a law prohibiting during the war the distillation of food products, and providing further that the President of the United States, having in mind the protection of the food products and an unlimited and good supply thereof, and also the protection of the national security, should determine whether there should be regulation, whether there should be prohibition, and what should be the alcoholic content; and the President only last Tuesday, I believe, declared that at this time no alcoholic beverages shall be brewed containing more than 2¾ per cent alcohol and that not more than 70 per cent of the product used last year shall this year be used for alcoholic beverage purposes. So that the matter as it is presented to us to-day, I repeat, is the substitution for what is working out as true temperance continued controversy in every one of our States for six or seven years. I submit that the great body of the American people, not those who have an interest in the manufacture of liquor, not those who are professional prohibitionists, but the great body of the American people have but one idea now. They want to live in these United States in a spirit of harmony, and by harmony and cooperation use every ounce of power toward the great task of winning the war. They want to live a life of contentment, they want to live under the guaranties of the Constitution of the United States of America. As a true, as a practical, as a sane temperance measure we are now working this out to the satisfaction of all of our people. I submit it should stand this way, and with that idea I oppose the adoption of this article of amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker and Members of Congress, ever since I was a small lad until I came to Congress two years ago it has fallen to my lot to associate with the wage-earners of our country, and I have a warm feeling of brotherly love in my heart for the great army of working men and women who earn their living by labor in the shops, factories, mines, industrial works, and on the railroads.

Previous to March 4, 1915, when I took my seat in this House, I was employed for 19 years by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in the capacity of locomotive fireman and engineer, and it is with a feeling of great pride that I can say that I am at present a member in good standing of one of the great labor organizations of our country, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

I desire to say a word about the relation of the liquor traffic to organized labor. There is at this time an effort being made by the representatives of the liquor interests to give the impression that the labor unions of the country are opposed to the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and the Members of this Congress are being threatened and flooded with numerous memorials, telegrams, and petitions by these men, protesting against the passage of this resolution and pretending to speak for the workingmen of this country. I deny and challenge the statement that the laboring people and the thousands of members of organized labor are in sympathy with the un-American licensed liquor traffic and that the beer keg and whisky bottle are their emblems. It is true that certain labor organizations are opposed to prohibition, but these men represent various crafts that are engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of alcoholic liquors.

I hold no brief against these men, and I assure you that I would do them a good turn if it lay in my power so to do; but this fact remains, that they are engaged in the manufacture and sale of that which is the greatest enemy that the working people have in this land to-day. Therefore, as one who has the welfare of the working people at heart, I feel it is my duty to oppose not these men personally but this institution which they are upholding.

There are many labor organizations that do not oppose prohibition of the liquor traffic, and a goodly number of them have gone on record as being opposed to the saloon. I am glad that my name is recorded upon the rolls of one of the great organizations of workers which has gone on record in support of State and National prohibition. In 1915 the delegates to the triennial convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, representing abut 70,000 members, unanimously adopted a resolution pledging this organization and its best efforts in support of the abolition of the liquor business. In a letter recently made public Mr. Warren S. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, has this to say concerning this question:

We fight the liquor evil perhaps as hard as any of the churches. Liquor has no place in our modern railroading. I never expect to be manager of a railroad, but if I were, a man could not work for me who did take a drink of liquor either on or off duty. I would not make a difference between the two, because a man who will drink off duty is not fit to go on duty when the time comes. I fail to understand why our men do not come out in the open in certain localities and fight this enemy. It tends to destroy the home life, to lower the tone of the citizenship of the community, and the morals of the individual as well, to say nothing of his mental and physical health.

Some time ago I wrote letters to the following leaders of organized labor in Denver and the State of Colorado: W. C. Thornton, president of the Denver Trades and Labor Assembly; Chester J. Common, president of the Denver Building Trades Council; Clint C. Houston, editor of the Denver Labor Bulletin, which is the official organ for the union labor organizations of Colorado, and requested these men to give me in writing their opinion as to the effect of prohibition on the working people of Denver and Colorado. I received an answer to my letters from all three of these labor leaders, and all of them speak in glowing terms for prohibition. Mr. Houston, editor of the Bulletin, says:

The prohibition law in nine months has worked a wonderful revolution for the good, and at least 75 per cent of the union voters who were against the amendment would support it now.

Mr. Common, president of the Denver Building Trades Council, said:

After 12 months of trial I am absolutely of the opinion that prohibition is the proper thing and has come to stay in Colorado.

Mr. Thornton says:

In my humble opinion the workers of Denver and Colorado are a lot better off mentally, morally, financially, and physically than they were when the State was wet, and you can not gather together a good-size company which would proclaim openly for the return of the saloon.

These statements come from prominent members and leaders and organizers of labor unions in one of the great States and large cities of the Nation, which have experienced the benefit of prohibition. I have received equally strong reports from union leaders in other parts of the country.

Ohio, the State which I have the honor to represent in part, ranks third or fourth among the great industrial States of the Union. About a million wage earners are employed at present in the manufacturing industries and on the railroads of the State. The result of the State-wide vote on prohibition in Ohio last month shows conclusively just where the workingmen stand on this question.

I make the statement that the workers of Ohio voted dry by an overwhelming majority in many communities on the 6th day of last November. Several of the large industrial centers, with thousands of workingmen voting, gave prohibition majorities, while every large city in the State showed dry gains. Youngstown, the second largest steel manufacturing center in the country, with its thousands upon thousands of skilled mechanics, gave a dry majority of over 1,000. Summit County, in which is located the city of Akron, the greatest rubber manufacturing center in the world, with many thousands of high-class workingmen employed in its factories, gave the largest dry majority of any county in the State—4,316. Stark County, including the cities of Canton, Massillon, and Alliance, all important manufacturing towns, showed a prohibition majority of 3,404. Columbus, the capital city, with many factories, is located in Franklin County, which cast a dry majority. During the last fight in Ohio there was organized a trade-union dry league, its officers being prominent labor leaders, and the good work they did in this campaign helped very much in the splendid dry gain Ohio made this year.

The wet stronghold of Ohio is Cincinnati and Hamilton County. Cincinnati, I believe, is the wettest place on the face of the earth. On the final election returns, through the ability of prospectors in Cincinnati to find 12,000 wet votes after the first returns showed the State to have gone dry, a wet majority of 1,137 was obtained. But if we leave out Cincinnati we find that the workingmen in the large industrial centers of Ohio, thousands of them members of unions, helped to cast a dry majority of 55,844.

I wanted to bring these facts before the Members of Congress because of the attempts at intimidation which are being made in the form of threatening petitions and telegrams by some who claim to speak for the workingmen. I say to you that it is a bald-faced lie when these men say to you that organized labor as a movement is against the passage of this resolution. I wish to call attention to the fact that not only our great railroad unions but also the splendid typographical unions and many other crafts in different sections of the country are on record in opposition to the liquor business.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. No. Some of the antiprohibition newspapers and the friends of the liquor traffic say if we pass this resolution to-day that it will cause strife and dissension among the workingmen of our country, that they will relax in their patriotism and not lend their best efforts in the shops, mines, factories, and mills to supply the needs of our brave soldier boys in France fighting your battle and mine.

I say that this is an insult to the patriotism of the American workingman. To me the very force of that statement is appalling. Is it possible that American workingmen are ready to admit that their patriotism is to be measured by the saloon? If this is so, then I say, God, look down in pity upon us and save our Republic. I pray that we will not commit the great folly that some of the European nations committed at the beginning of the war, and I would call your attention to the words of the eminent statesman, Lloyd-George, who said:

England is fighting three enemies, Germany, Austria, and the liquor traffic, and the liquor traffic is the greatest of the three.

My friends, these are not the words of the Anti-Saloon League or the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, but they come from the heart of the greatest statesman in Europe to-day.

During the last session of Congress this House by a vote of 397 to 24 passed a bill making it unlawful to sell liquor to soldiers in uniform in the United States. Now, if you believed at that time that liquor was not a good thing for the soldier, that it would have a tendency to lower his efficiency and impair his physical ability, would not the same principle apply with equal force to the workingman at home, who has to make the guns and ammunition and produce the food and clothing for the soldier?

The Congress and the President, his Cabinet, and our Army and Navy officers realize that in order to win this war our fighting men must not be ruined by intoxicating liquor. But what is the attitude of the liquor people along this line? Do they indorse the action of Congress and Gen. Pershing and Secretary of the Navy Daniels in checking the use of liquor? No; a thousand times no! They say we can not win this war unless we are a drunken Nation, and if they had their way they would make drunkards out of our soldier boys. That is a strong statement for me to make, but I want to back it up by reading again a letter, in part, which was sent to me by one of the liquor leaders of this country:

I believe that the soldier will need wine, beer, and whisky in and out of the trenches in moderation.

I believe that a good drink to each soldier before a charge will insure that steadiness of nerve that wins battles.

The man who rushes a rapid-fire gun should be given the relief from terror that alcohol imparts.

My friends, what an insult to the patriotism and bravery of the soldiers who are now in France following the flag under the leadership of Gen. Pershing for this man to say that unless our boys are filled with whisky they will be a lot of cowards and afraid to face the enemy upon the battle field. Such an un-American, unpatriotic, insulting, lying statement as this ought to be repudiated by every loyal American citizen who respects the boys who have offered to sacrifice their lives, if need be, for the great and righteous cause which we are contending for to-day. What consolation it must be to the Christian fathers and mothers of this land, whose lads have gone to the front from Christian homes and environment where they were never brought into temptation from the liquor traffic! Many of them are from prohibition States and Territories. It is the mothers who are making the supreme sacrifice at this hour. It has torn their heartstrings to have their boys taken away from them, but they have been brave, God bless them. They have given their sons to our country to fight for a great and righteous cause, but the thing that is worrying the American mother to-day is, will her boy come back to her as pure and morally clean as he was when the strong arm of the Government reached into his home and took him for service? A few days ago I looked at a beautiful picture in the window of an art store. It was the picture of a young American mother standing by her only son, who was in the uniform of an American soldier. He was a fine specimen of manhood. The proud mother had her hands upon his shoulders, looking into his face with an expression that none but a mother can have, and underneath the picture I read, "May the Lord stand between me and thee while we are absent one from another." That is the prayer that is going up to Almighty God from the hearts of tens of thousands of mothers in our land to-day. Yet this man says when we get these clean, pure boys away from the influence of mothers fill them full of whisky and send them back not as he was when the Government took him but with the appetite created within for intoxicating liquor.

Let me say that to my mind the Government of the United States has no right to take the boy out of the home unless it guarantees to the mothers of this land that it will lend its best efforts to return that boy just as clean and pure as he was when they took him away.

Now, who was it that wrote this letter? If it came from some saloonkeeper, brewer, or irresponsible bartender, I would not have paid much attention to it. But this letter is signed "Yours, truly, Thomas M. Gilmore." Who is Thomas M. Gilmore? He is president of the National Model License League of America, one of the strongest and largest liquor organizations in our country to-day. And as a rule the president of an organization, when he speaks, expresses the sentiment of the stockholders.

[Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not expect or even to attempt to convince any man of the fallacy of this amendment who is a reformed drunkard or any man who believes that his own personal views should be the views of the entire people. In sitting in my seat in the House this morning and looking into the press gallery of this House I saw there the picture of the President of the United States, and printed upon that picture are these words, "Stand by the President." Mr. Speaker, in the last session of this Congress we enacted a law known as the food survey and food control law, and section 15 of that law is, in part, as follows:

> Whenever the President shall find that limitation, regulation, or prohibition of the use of foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of malt or vinous liquors for beverage purposes or that reduction of the alcoholic content of any such malt or vinous liquor is essential, in order to assure an adequate and continuous supply of food, or that the national security and defense will be subserved thereby, he is authorized, from time to time, to prescribe and give public notice of the extent of the limitation, regulation, prohibition, or reduction so necessitated.

So he has complete power to stop the manufacture and the sale of every kind of intoxicating drink now being made. And, Mr. Speaker, you and I and all of us have appealed to the people of this country. We have appealed to the people whom we represent to stand loyally by the President of the United States in this hour, and let me ask you whether or not you believe that you are standing loyally by him when you vote to bring up for consideration in the country at this time, with the turmoil and the strife that is about us, this question, which is one of the most serious that the people have ever considered? Let me call the attention of Members to a few words from one of the great Senators of this country, who died but a short time ago, while discussing this very matter in the Senate. I refer to United States Senator Husting, of Wisconsin. Listen to what he said, a great Democrat, one who tried to uphold in every way the hands of the President in this great war. He said:

> We are engaged in a war that requires a strong feeling of unity throughout on the part of all. Vexatious domestic questions ought to be relegated to the rear and only legislation calculated to promote our success in arms should be passed now. None else should be considered, even. We want to draw together our people, not drive them apart, and every Senator here knows that there is scarcely anything that has so aroused bitterness and dissension among our people as the prohibition question.

Gentlemen, it is not to-day a question whether you believe in prohibition or not. It is a question whether or not you want to help the President win this war, whether you want to aid him in keeping the people united, keeping the labor organiztaions of this country, the men who have to do the hard work, in good humor over this matter.

It is not a question of alcohol; it is not a question so much as to whether or not it is good for the men who work in the mills to have their beer or not. That is not the question. It is a question whether these men in the great mills and in the great factories of this country and munition plants feel that you are depriving them of their liberty at this time in endeavoring to take away that privilege. If you do that you are creating dissension. The whisky of this country has all been doomed by act of Congress. There is now permitted by the President the manufacture of beer with 2¾ per cent of alcohol. No one here will claim that a man can get intoxicated upon drinking beer with that small per cent of alcohol. Gentlemen, this is nothing more nor less than a question of whether or not we shall stand by the President of the United States in this hour, when all good citizens ought, or whether we shall stand by Dinwiddie and the Anti-Saloon League, who think more, in my judgment, of this issue of "wet and dry" than they think of the issue of whether America or Germany shall win in this great war. So I appeal, Mr. Speaker, to the patriotism of the people of this country and those who are representing them here to-day to help us to win this war and not bring into discussion at this time these matters of dissension that will cause havoc and distress. We are proud, indeed, that we have been able in this Congress to stand together and give earnest and united support to the President, and I say, gentlemen, upon my responsibility, that were the President permitted under the Constitution of the United States to participate in a matter of this kind—that is, the submission of an amendment of the Constitution to the people—I believe that he would come to you with a message and say to you, "Gentlemen of the Congress, leave this vexatious domestic question alone until we have finished with the Kaiser."

The President has no authority under the Constitution in matters of this kind. It is for the Congress and legislatures of the States to decide, and therefore naturally he would feel it was not his privilege or his duty to bring this matter to your attention. But, gentlemen, we ought to leave it alone. We ought to leave these matters now in the hands of the President where they can be best worked out during the war. Let us win the war first. Let us restore peace in this country. Let us bring all our forces to bear upon the enemy, upon Germany and her allies. Let that be our whole aim now.

We have seen it in the papers that the Anti-Saloon League has stated that they are raising a great amount of money for the purpose of going out into the States, if this amendment carriers, in order to campaign for the adoption of the amendment. Could not the Anti-Saloon League do better with this money by putting it to the use of the war?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], a member of the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I shall make the assertion, and prove it by the votes of the gentlemen in this House, that the question of whether the State should be permitted to deal with this question is not the reason that is going to actuate them in their vote here to-day. I can prove by the RECORD that there is not a consistent State rights man in this House; that there is not a man here who will not swap his position on that question any time the issue is one that he either approves or disapproves, as the case may be. [Applause.]

What does the word "prohibition" mean?

Now, prohibition does not necessarily mean to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. It means in its larger sense the prohibiting of the doing of anything. Most of the Ten Commandments are prohibitions. They forbid acts. Any question presented to the House, then, is always determined upon whether you are in favor of or against prohibiting the things proposed and not whether you are in favor of or disapprove State rights. It is merely whether you are in favor of or opposed to the particular act that it is then proposed to be voted on. In order to prove this I want to read to you from the RECORD. I shall read and ask you who it was who gave utterance to these sentiments.

A gentleman gave utterance to the following here on the 26th day of January last:

> Whenever you arrogate to one central government all the powers concerning the purely domestic and internal affairs of the people, which have always been left and are still left to the State to administer, then our Government will fall of its own weight.

Who said that? The distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. WEBB] said that last January. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. We will expect to hear it again in his suffrage speech, will we not?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEBB. You will not hear it on the suffrage speech.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall show by this RECORD that the gentleman who interrupted then [Mr. MEEKER] is the strongest prohibitionist in this House. I shall show that by his vote cast in this House. I have it right here. I want to read further:

> This bill is in line with the enlightened progress of the age, in line with advanced thought. I dislike to see and hear men falling back upon the Constitution of the United States when progressive legislation is urged in this body. I have more respect for the men who framed the Constitution of the United States than to take refuge in that instrument whenever we attempt progressive legislation. While it may be a fact that the property interests are better represented than the poor interests by the men who made the Constitution, still I do not believe that it was ever their thought to prohibit Congress from enacting legislation that would be of benefit to mankind in the suppression of child labor.

Inasmuch as the gentleman is not on the floor, I will not call his name, but he will vote against this prohibition amendment when it comes up.

I noticed a gentleman a moment ago interrupting the chairman [Mr. WEBB] to set him right, as he claimed, on the attitude of labor toward prohibition, and I take it from his remarks he opposes this resolution on the ground of interference with the right of the State to regulate its own affairs. I refer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER]. If I am not correct, I will expect him to correct me. Mr. SNYDER, showing how little he thinks the State ought to be consulted when it comes to regulating the internal affairs of States—when he approves the act—the prohibition of something he disapproves—I read:

> Therefore, is it a source of wonderment that we of New York favor the enactment of this law? It is a source of wonderment by some of our southern friends and neighbors who oppose it. Their business interests will not suffer so greatly as they appear to fear, should this measure become law, and they will enjoy the benefit of their enviable location.

He favored this prohibition, and therefore voted for the enactment of that law—the child-labor law. I also voted for it.

Now, here is what I am trying to prove: That you vote for or against a measure as you favor or disapprove the proposed law. I am going to prove this by polling your votes as revealed in the RECORD and show you how you voted on that prohibition law, to show how you voted to deny the States the right to regulate their internal affairs on the question of child labor and said that the products of child labor should not be permitted in interstate commerce; in fact, to prevent children from being worked in mines and manufacturing establishments within the several States.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] voted for that measure. He was entirely in favor of regulating the internal affairs of States, provided he favored the prohibition of the things sought to be prohibited. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. That statute simply dealt with interstate commerce, and that is expressly authorized to Congress in the Constitution.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman certainly does not mean that.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me answer this question and then I will.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman made some remarks concerning myself.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did; but I will give the gentleman an opportunity in a minute. If the gentleman wants to recant his position, I will give him the opportunity.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], who says that that act regulating child labor had to do solely with interstate commerce, knows that "interstate commerce" was merely the vehicle by which Congress prohibited the employment of children within the States, prohibited their working in manufacturing establishments and mines under certain conditions and within certain ages. That is what the gentleman voted to prohibit. [Applause.] The matter of interstate commerce was merely the vehicle by which Congress undertook to prohibit child labor.

Mr. GORDON. Of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. In order to do that Congress chose the vehicle of interstate commerce.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; I yield now to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. I wish to say to the gentleman that all I was undertaking to do at the time those remarks that the gentleman refers to were made was an endeavor to bring the industrial conditions of the South nearer to the industrial conditions in the North. That is all. [Applause.]

Mr. CARAWAY. Let us see what the gentleman did say, since he makes that statement. [Laughter.] Let us see what the gentleman's real reason was. He says:

> The northern manufacturers, too, will be better contented to know that the present so-called unfair competition of their own country has been largely done away with, and that the southern manufacturers, on the plane of labor cost, at least, have no advantage over them.

A noble reason. [Applause.]

That is what is the matter with the gentleman. He was trying to protect his own labor, not regulate the South.

Mr. SNYDER. That is all I was trying to do.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, you had an awfully unhappy way of saying it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to know what that has got to do with this question anyhow. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, I hope the gentleman will take a day off and find out. [Laughter.] Why, bless your heart, this book is interesting. [Referring to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.] I wish I had time to read it all. [Laughter.] I would like to show that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] is the strongest prohibitionist in the House, if I had the time to read what he says. He is most violently opposed to the States being left any right to regulate their own internal affairs of anybody who spoke on that bill, and another gentleman from Pennsylvania likewise agreed with him. I commend this book to you.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I can not yield now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like the gentleman to be fair and quote some more.

Mr. CARAWAY. Gentlemen, let us be fair with each other and honest with the country. If we favor the suppression of the liquor traffic—and God knows we should—let us vote for this resolution.

It is needless to recount here the reason that should impel us to this course.

Does not the blood of the victims of intemperance cry out to us for redress?

We have all seen women heartbroken by this curse, children worse than orphaned.

Vice, poverty, and ignorance are its handmaids, and these will curse the world as long as we permit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

For one I shall vote for this amendment. I shall vote for it because of the crimes it has bred, the sorrow and want it has caused. I shall vote for it to make the world better for women and children now living and for those yet in the womb of time. God hasten the day when this curse shall vanish from the face of the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the debate is limited to-day on an important constitutional amendment. I think the debate in the RECORD should show the true proceedings that take place here to-day, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The House will be in order. The Chair wishes to remind the occupants of the galleries that they must not manifest approval or disapproval and must not applaud remarks.

Mr. WEBB. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN].

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the argument of my colleague from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] and to find that his vote is going to be determined by the alleged decision of some court as to just what he represents. He is going to vote against prohibition, but he is going to vote in favor of woman suffrage. Now, I do not know how all men reason, but I am of such a particular mental caliber that I can not see any difference, so far as submitting an amendment is concerned, whether it is a woman suffrage amendment or a prohibition amendment. [Applause.] The same principles are involved in each.

We are all agreed that our first and most important object at the present time is to win the war. There is no diversity of opinion as to that. It is absolutely essential that we preserve the utmost unity regarding the prosecution of the war. I do not want to see anything pass this House that would produce disunity; nothing that would, in any possible way, impair our efficiency. There are some on this floor who argue that the passage of this amendment would produce dissension, while our need is for unity. Do they really mean this? They urge that we stand by the President, inferring that to do this the amendment must be defeated. Their argument is unsound. Anyone whose patriotism is measured by the quart has a type of patriotism that needs to be watched and watched continually. These gentlemen infer by their argument that we must placate certain citizens of this great Republic in order to secure their fullest support of the Government. They infer that in order to be sure that a certain class of our citizens shall uphold the arm of the President with their right hand we must allow them to have a bottle of whisky in their left. [Applause.]

To my mind, there is no force in the argument that the passage of this amendment would produce disunity. I want to ask this question of those who think differently: Can we consistently take the position that we are in the present war for the purpose of making the world safe for democracy and then show by our actions in this House that we are afraid to trust democracy in this country in dealing with this important question? Is it not logical that we allow the people to decide every question that touches the life of our Nation? Surely we are upholding democracy by submitting this amendment. I refuse to be a kaiser and decide the prohibition question in my district, my State, or the country. I want the people of my district, the people of my State, and the people of the United States to decide whether this Nation is to be dry or not.

Another argument is made to the effect that organized labor is against this amendment. There is no doubt but what there are many able leaders of organized labor who are opposed, but even Mr. Gompers, whom I greatly admire and respect for his splendid work in behalf of the workers of the country, distinctly states that in his stand against this amendment he is acting as an individual and not representing the American Federation of Labor. I have received a great many telegrams from various organizations of labor in my district, but, so far as I know, the rank and file of organized labor have not passed upon this great and important question.

I have always stood and always will stand for the mass of workers in all legislation, for their best interest is the highest interest of the country. I therefore refuse to believe that organized labor, as such, is opposed to this amendment; and, on the other hand, I believe that the best thought of organized labor is beginning to realize as they are advancing more and more into power that it is distinctly to their advantage to realize the evil effects of liquor. If I were opposed to organized labor, if I wanted to stop the workers in their determination to gain more political power and receive a larger share of the product of industry, I would certainly try to give them all the liquor they could drink, in order that they might be kept more easily in control. However, against the argument advanced by certain leaders who are opposed to this amendment may be placed the argument of equally prominent leaders who are heart and soul in favor of the amendment. I will always lift my voice in behalf of the workers; I will always use my influence for their advancement. As a principle to guide one in governmental affairs, I hold it to be true, following the advice of the great Lincoln, that the first consideration in all legislation—not the second, but the first consideration—should be for labor and not for capital, and on that basis I intend to support this national prohibition amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, it is known by all persons in Kentucky that the next legislature, which convenes in January, will submit to the voters of Kentucky an amendment to our State constitution prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicating liquors in our Commonwealth. This plan will enable each voter of the State to have a direct vote on the great question of prohibition. If this amendment for national prohibition prevails in this House to-day the members of our State legislature will be the only persons in Kentucky who will be permitted to vote on this question. I prefer that each voter in Kentucky should express his opinion at the ballot box concerning prohibition, and I shall therefore vote against the amendment now pending in the House. In this connection I will state that no man in Kentucky has taken a more pronounced stand for the submission of the prohibition amendment to our State constitution than I.

Under the Federal law to-day the manufacture of spiritous liquors is absolutely prohibited. Only very light wines and beers can now be legally made in this country, and the President of the United States can now by the stroke of the pen prohibit the manufacture of wines and beers and place the Nation strictly on a prohibition basis.

The Congress has placed absolute power in the hands of the President to control the manufacture and sale of spiritous, vinous, and malt liquors in the United States. I am willing to trust this entire question to his wisdom and judgment, knowing that he will use the great power he possesses for the best moral and material interests of the American people.

No man in history ever held the power which the representatives of the American people have cheerfully voted to our great President. By our legislation he controls entirely the food and fuel supply of this, the richest country in the world. If he so desires he can control the great transportation lines of our country, employing more men and representing more dollars than any business in the land. Under our law he controls absolutely the lives and destinies of millions of our boys who will be called for service in the Army and Navy. If the Congress can trust the President to control completely the food and fuel of the land and the lives of the young men of the Nation, why can not we trust him to control the liquor industry?

I will show my confidence in him by voting to defeat the pending amendment. I know that he will use the great power he has for the moral uplift of the Nation; I know that he will use that power for the prime purpose of bringing swift victory to American arms, and I will not vote to take away from him any power he has in handling the great problems which confront him.

Under our Federal Constitution our President is Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy. The burden of this great and terrible war is upon his shoulders. The American people, in my opinion, have perfect confidence in his judgment on all of the great questions pertaining to the proper conduct of our war plans. This being true, why single out the liquor problem and take only that question from his control? In the great crisis which now confronts us intemperate legislation on the liquor question might result in great disaster. Whenever the President of the United States believes that national prohibition is a good thing for the Nation he can, under the power he now has, bring it about by the stroke of his pen. I think that he can be trusted to exercise that power, and there is no need for further legislation by statute or constitutional amendment on the subject of the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. It would seem that our Government is in need of the hundreds of millions of dollars at this time from the liquor business. If this amendment prevails, the Government loses hundreds of millions of revenue, and this deficiency must fall on the necessities of the poor. Organized labor, which is working so patriotically to equip our Army and Navy, protests against the passage of this amendment and is willing to leave this liquor question to the judgment of the President, and without the full cooperation of organized labor the war will be lost. The President from his exalted position knows better than any man or any set of men what is best for the welfare of the Nation in the great struggle through which we are passing. Full power is now in his hands, and the lawmakers of the land make no mistake when they permit him to handle the liquor question along with a multitude of other questions of equal or greater importance. [Applause.] This is no time for Members of this House to consider their individual political fortunes in making up their minds how they will vote on the questions which come before them. When war was declared I made up my mind that it was my duty to fall in behind our great President and Commander in Chief and do that which he desired and ordered. He is our leader, and it is the duty of every American citizen to obey. In a life and death struggle for national existence there can be but one commander and one leader if we are to succeed. I have voted and will continue to vote for every request which our President deems for the interest and success of our Army and Navy. I would not embarrass him by taking away from him the power to handle at this crucial time the liquor question or any other question. In my vote to sustain the President on this and on other questions I believe that I voice the overwhelming sentiment of my constituents, and I shall therefore vote against the amendment pending. [Applause.] In the days to come history will record that Washington made possible the American Union, that Lincoln preserved it, and that Wilson made our Nation the leading factor in a world union dedicated to universal democracy. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this is a big time in the history of mankind. This is a big question for the American people. No greater question has engaged the attention of the Congress than the question now under consideration—important to the individual, to the community, to the Nation, to mankind throughout the world. Much depends upon the people of the United States at this hour. We need a sober manhood. We have responsibilities thrust upon us that demand the very best that is in every man and in every woman in the Nation. I do not agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], who says that liquor is essential to the laborer in the manufacture of arms and ammunition; that liquor is essential in the trenches. We want the best ability we have—and to be at its best it must be sober—in the manufacture of arms, in the manufacture of munitions, and in the use of such arms and ammunition in the world war now being waged.

You have a son; he is in the trenches to-day or on the way there. You want him supplied with the best arms, with the best ammunition that the soberest men can make. You do not want him supplied with deficient arms and ammunition made by men under the influence of liquor. Further, you want that boy of yours to have comrades over there who are sober and ready to do a man's part.

There never was a time when the ability of the manhood of America, all the ability we possess, was as much in demand as it is this very hour. I do not believe that labor organizations are in favor of devitalizing the manhood of the Nation at an hour when the very best that is in man is in so great demand.

No man speaks for the laborers of America when he says that they are all opposed to this constitutional amendment. Individuals? Yes. As an organization? No. More men united and affiliated with labor organizations are in favor of a sober manhood, a sober community, a sober State, a sober Nation than are in favor of the open saloon. The time is past in which it is necessary to talk upon the effect of the use of intoxicating liquors. Every man here can count by hundreds young men of his acquaintance who have gone to inglorious graves before they have passed the age at which they would now be taken into the service of the United States, where, if perchance they lost their lives, they would go to an honorable grave. Every year this stuff that is to be prohibited by this resolution has taken its toll by the thousands; yea, by the hundreds of thousands. I am in favor of the resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary who voted to report this resolution to the House with a favorable recommendation, reserving the right to vote against the resolution. I desire briefly to set forth my reasons, but before I do so permit me to congratulate the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] upon his high, patriotic courage. He, sir, would win this war, but he would not win the war nor would he support the men who are fighting the war if, perchance, they are going to shoot a rifle containing ammunition that has been made by a man who drinks liquor! Temperance in thought and speech, Mr. Speaker, is sometimes as wise as temperance in the use of food and drink.

